The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3888. NEW SERIES, No. 991.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

ORDER!

In 1916 among the Contributors to

THE FREE CATHOLIC

(1*d.* Monthly, post free 2*d.*; 2*s.* per ann.)

were Canon the Hon. James Adderley, M.A.; Prof. R. S. Conway, D.Litt.; Prof. Frank Granger, D.Litt.; the Rev. Geo. S. Hitchcock, D.D. S.S.D.; Prof. Sir Henry Jones, F.B.A.; Principal Sir Oliver Lodge, F.R.S.; The Rev. Principal S. H. Mellone, D.Sc.; Signor Romolo Murri; Mr. Philip M. Oliver, M.A.; the Rev. Dr. Orchard; Miss M. D. Petre; Mr. Malcolm Quin; Prof. E. A. Sonnenschein, D.Litt.; the Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

The JANUARY, 1917, number of

THE FREE CATHOLIC

Edited by the Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS,

Contains an important pronouncement on REUNION by

THE RIGHT REV.
BISHOP HAMILTON BAYNES, D.D.

And among other Articles are

Religion in Education, by Prof. CONWAY.

Mystery in Catholicism, by MALCOLM QUIN.

The Curse of Sectional Thinking, by the Rev. GORDON QUIG, M.A. B.D.

Orders, with remittances, to Mr. E. ELLIS TOWNLEY, 65 Temple Row, Birmingham.

ORDER!

JUST PUBLISHED.

Fcap. 8vo, 64 pages, cloth, gilt edges with ribbon, 1s. net; paper covers, 3d. net (postage 1d.).

For those who Mourn.

Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved.

Edited by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

For Freedom and Right.

Booklet in Case: Readings, Prayers, Hymns for Men on Active Service.

Price 6*d.* net.

Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK, 1917.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.

Roan, gilt edges, 1*s.* 6*d.* net; by post, 1*s.* 7*d.*

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1917.

Price 1*s.* net; by post, 1*s.* 2*d.*

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income £3,627,000

Claims Paid £18,000,000

Additional Representatives Wanted.

G. SHRUBSALL, Managing Director.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

7. Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B. (of Sheffield).
14. Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
21. Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
28. Rev. J. A. PEARSON, Minister of the London District Unitarian Society.

THE ATHENÆUM

For nearly 100 years the leading Weekly Literary Journal. . .

IS NOW

ISSUED AS A MONTHLY PUBLICATION.

Price 1/- net. By post 1/2.

THE DECEMBER NUMBER

Contains Articles on:—

Thoughts on National Service and National Unity, Part IV.; The United States and the World, Part II.; Notes from Oxford; How to Read Verhaeren, by Émile Cammaerts; Critics and Poets.

Annual Subscription 14/-

Post free to all parts of the world.

Order from your Newsagent or from the Publishers—

11 BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, E.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

An Examination will be held on JANUARY 18 for an

ENFIELD DOWSON ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIP,

value £20, open to the Sons of Ministers. Candidates must be under 14 years of age. Particulars from THE HEAD MASTER. Willaston School, Nantwich.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead London N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, January 7.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, B.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. HITCHCOCK.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. A. PEARSON; 6.30, Mr. C. A. PIPER.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. A. PEARSON.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. S. FIELD.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, and STYAL—6.30, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6, Rev. A. H. DOLPHIN.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

BIRTH.

PENTON.—On December 24, 1916, at 2 Cambridge Terrace, Regent's Park, the wife of Edward Penton, junior, of a daughter.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. D. DAVIS, 32 Windermere Road, Muswell Hill, London, N.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 3
CREATORS OF THE FUTURE 5
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . . 5
"THE CAPTAIN OF THE HOST OF THE LORD" 6
RECREATION IN WAR-TIME 6
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Possibility of Peace 7
"Children who Never Grow Up" . . . 7
10th Labour Battalion R.E. 8
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Private Edwin Coysh 8
Mrs. Edith Reid 8
Alderman George Hughes 8
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 9
Toys for Belgian Children 9
English Prisoners in Switzerland . . 9
The Hostel at Essex Hall 10
Men and Movements 10
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 10
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 11

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE Allies reply to the German Peace Note is the emphatic "No" which was expected. It repudiates the German claim that the Allies were responsible for the war and once again states the facts. It also denies the German assumption of victory. The "War Map" of Europe, it says, "represents nothing more than a superficial and passing phase of the situation, and not the real strength of the belligerents. A peace concluded upon these terms would be only to the advantage of the aggressors, who after imagining that they would reach their goal in two months, discovered after two years that they could never attain it." On the grounds stated the Allied Governments, "closely united to one another and in perfect sympathy with their peoples, refuse to consider a proposal which is empty and insincere."

* * *

THE reply closes with a short manifesto on behalf of the Belgian Government, which defines "the aims which Belgium has never ceased to pursue, while fighting side by side with the Entente Powers for right and justice." After pointing out that she has taken up arms to defend her independence and her neutrality violated by Germany, the Note continues:—

> On August 4, 1914, in the Reichstag, the German Chancellor admitted that this aggression constituted an injustice contrary to the laws of nations and pledged himself in the name of Germany to repair it. During two and a half years this injustice has been cruelly aggravated by the proceedings of the occupying forces, which have exhausted the resources of the country, ruined its industries, devastated its towns and villages, and have been responsible for innumerable massacres, executions, and imprisonments. At this very moment, while Germany is proclaiming peace and humanity to the world, she is deporting Belgian citizens by thousands and reducing them to slavery. Belgium before the war asked for nothing but to live in harmony with all her neighbours. Her King and her Government have but one aim—the re-establishment of peace and right. But they desire only a peace which would assure to their country legitimate reparation, guarantees, and safeguards for the future.

* * *

THE style of the Note has been the subject of some criticism. The clever journalist has complained of its English, and the superior person has found it lacking in dignity and reticence. It must be remembered, however, that as a diplomatic document it is in French, the English translation being provided for popular use. It is also intended to be a manifesto to a listening world as well as an official intimation to Germany, and for the former purpose a shorter and more formal document, which preserved throughout a tone of cold politeness, would probably have been quite ineffective. We are far from saying that form and style are of small importance in diplomacy, but in the present case the essential thing was to make our intentions perfectly plain, to cut ourselves free from any entanglement with unreal arguments, and to reduce the whole situation to moral issues about which we can accept no compromise. Judged by these requirements the Note has achieved its purpose.

* * *

COMPARED with the Note of the Allies, the Tsar's message to the Russian armies, which was issued last week, has the advantage of national sentiment and warm personal feeling. There is a note of lofty passion in its reference to the sufferings of Russia under the first shock of German aggression, and to Germany's growing fear that "the hour of retribution for all her wrong-doings and for the violation of moral laws" is near. "To conclude peace at this moment would mean the failure to utilise the fruits of the untold trials of you, heroic Russian troops and Fleet. These trials, and still more the sacred memory of those noble ons of Russia who have fallen on the field of battle, do not permit the thought of peace until the final victory over our enemies. Who dares to think that he who brought about the beginning of the war shall have it in his power to conclude the war at any time he likes?" The Tsar's message closes with a religious appeal which shows once again how in all lands Germany has called forth the invincible forces of the soul to fight against her. "Let us be firm in the certainty of our victory and the All Highest will bless our standards and will cover them afresh with glory, and will give to us a peace worthy of your heroic deeds, my glorious troops—a peace for which future generations will bless your memory, which will be sacred to them."

* * *

WE are glad to see that some of the prominent religious leaders in America, including men like Dr. Lyman Abbott, the Bishop of Massachusetts, and the President of Princeton University, have issued an appeal to "the Christians of America" in which they point out the grave moral dangers for the world of a premature peace.

> We need to be reminded [they say] that peace is the triumph of righteousness and not the mere sheathing of the sword. To clamour for the ending of the present war without ensuring the vindication of truth, justice, and honour is not to seek peace but to sow disaster. Because it is easy to lose sight of these essential principles we view with some concern the organised and deliberate effort now being made to stampede Christian sentiment so as to create a public sentiment blindly favourable to stopping hostilities without an adequate consideration of the issues which the war involves. We are Christians, and as such deem that truth and righteousness are to be maintained inviolate, even at the sacrifice of physical life.

* * *

THE Appeal proceeds to set forth some of the crimes against humanity of which Germany has been guilty, Belgium, Serbia, Armenia, and the rest :—

> In presence of these pending and unsettled issues [it continues] we feel impelled to warn our brethren against those who cry "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." The just God who withheld not His own Son from the Cross would not look with favour upon a people who put their fear of pain and death, their dread of suffering and loss, their concern for comfort and ease, above the holy claims of righteousness, justice, mercy, and truth. The memory of all the saints and martyrs cries out against such a backsliding of mankind. Sad is our lot if we have forgotten how to die for a holy cause. We solemnly declare our conviction that the question of all questions for our immediate consideration is, Shall our ancient Christian inheritance of loyalty to great and Divine ideals be replaced by considerations of mere expediency ?

Our only comment on these words is to point out how they coincide with the position, for which we have pleaded continually in these columns in the name of everything that is holiest in our religion. They represent inward loyalties and principles of action without which Christianity itself would perish off the earth.

* * *

THE Christmas holidays have been dedicated for a long time to educational conferences. They may be considered as a kind of powerhouse for the stimulation of public opinion upon the work of our schools and colleges. The experts talk and discuss and expound their ideals, and through a process of infiltration the mind of the nation is converted to slow reform. This year everything has been conducted in a different atmosphere. The war has made us all more friendly to upheavals even in education, and the appointment of Dr. Fisher has convinced the idealists that something will be done. We abuse ourselves quite happily as the worst educated people in Europe—and it does not matter whether it is true or not, because we are certain that we are going to be alert and sensible and apply science to industry in the future.

* * *

AMONG the numerous educational pronouncements of the past week the chief place may be given to the address by Prof. Gilbert Murray to the annual meeting of the Teachers' Guild on Tuesday. It was not so much a programme for the future as an incisive criticism of things as they are. Our best Grecian is not a fanatic for Greek except in the cases where it is the best educational instrument. He considers that our main fault is that we teach, not by standard or intellectual capacity, but by distinction of class, upper class boys in our public schools and universities being overdosed with classics and literature and often compelled to learn Greek whether intellectually fitted for it or not ; while boys in the middle and lower classes are almost absolutely debarred from the possibility of studying the classics at all. In his view the evil can be cured by an extension of the ideal of democratic equality which would allow the youth of all classes the education for which they are intellectually suited. He also characterised the charge against us of neglect of foreign languages as "rather disgracefully true." There may be some truth in the remark that many Englishmen are actually ashamed of speaking a foreign language, but our failure to be linguists is due chiefly to our insular position and to the fact that English will carry a man all over the world. Our Indian Civil Service shows that as soon as a man has a practical use for a foreign tongue he is quick to learn it.

* * *

PROF. MURRAY also made some pertinent remarks upon the damage done to national life by the absorption of so much vital power in the pursuit of pleasure and amusement. In his opinion our standards of comfort, pleasure, and expenditure—at any rate among the richer classes—are probably the highest known in the history of the world. The pleasure in itself is, he thinks, to a large extent, healthy and innocent, but it occupies too large a space in life, and it is producing an unfortunate impression in other countries. "The central impression we produce in the neutral world," he said, "is the thing for which England is really famous—to a preponderant degree, the frivolous element in life. When I ask who will redeem this nation I believe it will not be those who rejoice in the war or those who made fortunes from the war, who swam into intoxicating popularity, or trebled the circulation of their newspapers. It is those who throughout this tornado can keep both their heads and their hearts and can learn through the war its lessons of endurance and brotherhood, and can reject its callous cruelty and its perversive brutalisation in times like these."

* * *

SIR E. B. TYLOR, who died this week, has had a far-reaching influence upon the thought of his generation. His great book on 'Primitive Culture,' which was published in 1871, is the classic in its subject, and in saying this we do not forget 'The Golden Bough.' His position in the modern study of anthropology is similar to that of Sir Charles Lyell in geology. He opened up a vast range of new knowledge for the curiosity and delight of the human mind. As an intellectual force he worked with disruptive energy upon many of the tenets of traditional theology, though it is the lay mind rather than the theologian which has felt the full impact of his work. Even more than Biblical criticism, anthropology and comparative religion have made the conceptions of the world and of human life, upon which the traditional theology of Christendom rests, untenable, and religion will continue to fail in intellectual force until this fact is faced seriously. The work of pioneers of genius, like Sir E. B. Tylor, has moved many landmarks out of their place and made us sadly conscious of the waste of human faculty on the part of professional teachers of religion, with their learned apologies for obsolete dogmas and their evasion of the real tasks of thought.

* * *

MANY of our readers have been very generous in the support they have given to our pleasant scheme for sending out toys for Christmas to the refugee Belgian children in the school colonies in France. Fifteen cases have been packed containing about 1,500 toys and games. The work has been a delight to those who have taken part in it, and now we are having our reward in the warm-hearted messages of thanks. A letter which has just reached us from one of the schools, well known to the present writer, describes the eager delight of the little girls in receiving their dolls and their happiness in roaming about hugging their new treasures. What a relief it is to turn away for a few moments from our own cares to this picture of childish glee, and to feel that we have been able to do something to make these little ones happy.

CREATORS OF THE FUTURE.

IF we are worthy of our high calling we shall banish all the dark clouds of pessimism from our minds as we take up the tasks of the New Year. We do not mean that we ought to go jauntily forward into a future that is certain to be full of change and peril, confident that all will be for the best in the best of all possible worlds. But the spirit of hope ought to shine with undimmed splendour above the heaving waters of our discontent; and the keen stress of the times should make us glad with the knowledge that we are fellow-workers with God as creators of the future.

There has long been a strange alliance between a certain type of religious sensibility and the sadness of foreboding. The combat with evil seems to have inspired some men with a mournful pleasure in foreseeing danger. They are watchmen on the walls rather than captains in the field, and they blow their trumpet to warn the people of approaching terror instead of calling them with glad hearts to the battle. It is one of the disquieting things about religion in these days of stern duties, where there is no room either for hesitation or for compromise, that it often speaks in a tone of plaintive apology because the times are evil, instead of summoning men as by divine command to give up everything for the sake of a noble cause. It springs, of course, from a lack of real faith in God, just as a similar lack of faith is responsible for dark prophesies of our wretched state, fightings within and fears without, when the war is over.

A few days ago we read the following words in an article by "Artifex," which appeared in The Manchester Guardian: "In the early days of the war, when we were all still talking of the ennobling effects of war, and of the bright and shining England that might be expected to result from our trials, a member of Parliament, for whose opinion and wisdom I, in common with most people who know him, have a great respect, said to me, 'You talk a good deal about the new England that there is to be after the war. Shall I tell you what I expect? Fifty years of black reaction—political, economic, social, moral, and religious. Such has always been the result of war, and such will be the result of this war unless we are very careful.' Every day that the war lasts does something to persuade me he was right." The comments that follow this passage are in a similar vein. No doubt they are intended to be the words of the wise to a heedless generation, but their whole effect is one of fearfulness and depression, and in present circumstances they seem to us to be almost an act of treason against goodness. Let us remember that we always tend to create what we expect. Even religion may drive men into wickedness by treating them as sinners before the event. It is the part of faith not to look at our high and perilous duties against a background of gloom, but to inspire us with hope that sacrifice shall bear fruit in better life for the world, if we will to have it so. And in any case, whatever happens, right is right, and nothing can alter that central, divine fact, which illuminates everything we think and do in the present situation.

We have no wish to be blind to our own internal dangers. They exist always. We cannot advance a step in a world that is governed by moral laws without discovering new pitfalls on the right hand and the left. The upheaval of our social habits, while it has made life sterner for most of us, has caused temptation to abound in other directions. But we want to speak a word of serious warning against the danger of false inference at the present time, leading to a creeping paralysis in thought and conduct. The men who foretell fifty years of reaction, as though it were a law of nature, are not necessarily right and their sententious gloom adds little to the strength of their argument. Nothing in the least like the present war has ever happened to us before. The conclusions drawn from historical inference or analogy break down at almost every point, for our temper is different. The soul of the nation has arisen. Its conscience is clear. Its manhood has gone forth, not in the lust of power and conquest, but to win the right to live in freedom and peace. We cannot, indeed, ward off all the dangers of weariness and exhaustion, or keep our sacred cause entirely free from the corrupting breath of men who are unworthy to serve it; but why should we imagine that we shall gather only thorns and thistles from this mighty sowing of love and duty and tears? The day of the harvest is not yet, though it is wise to prepare betimes for its ingathering. Our business as creators of the future is not to stand aside as students and observers, but to remember that as is the sowing so shall the harvest be. Every man who withholds some of the strength of his manhood from the conflict is helping to wreck the future. Those who keep nothing back and put their trust in God are builders of the future in nobility and power. It is because the moral issue is so free from every trace of doubt, that it can be stated in these simple terms, and must be remembered as a determining factor of imperishable beauty and power in every reckoning with the future. The task which the New Year brings to us is one of active service, not the careful preparation of plans for to-morrow, but the stricter fulfilment of the imperious duties of to-day. And with this renewal of personal loyalty and dedication there may go the resolve to challenge every pessimist of our acquaintance to a competition in courage and cheerfulness. In days when we stand on the tip-toe of expectation we have no other use for moral blindness and plaintive discontent.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

SURROUNDED by unnumbered foes,
Against my soul the battle goes!
Yet though I weary, sore distressed,
I know that I shall reach my rest;
I lift my tearful eyes above,—
His banner over me is love.

* * * * *

My cloud of battle-dust may dim,
His veil of splendour curtain Him!
And in the midnight of my fear
I may not feel Him standing near;
But, as I lift mine eyes above,
His banner over me is love.

GERALD MASSEY.

THIS same comprehensiveness of Christianity which renders it so wonderful in its adaptability to new circumstances, is what makes it applicable to you and me; for in feelings and experiences, with all that reminds us of former things and allies us to our fellowmen, there is yet a newness of which we are fully sensible and could not divest ourselves if we would. We are more or less like all who share with us a common nature, and yet we are different from all; our lot more or less resembles that of all our brethren of mankind, and yet, when the story of our days is done, it is a new story, and no mere repetition of any that had been told before. Every life requires a new application of the spirit of Christ. And the neglect to make this is what renders Christian profession so often the hollow thing it is. We talk about what Christianity was, and what it was not, eighteen centuries ago, but are not ourselves plastic to its living touch. I pray you let us think again what Christ's teachings are to us. And lest there should be any narrowness in our conceptions or understanding, as there is so apt to be while we are rather learners in divine things than possessed of the knowledge of them, let us remember those final words of St. Paul, which cannot but open our souls to goodness and pure religion and all holy influences: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

THOMAS SADLER.

O GOD, I beseech thee,
Guard my soul,
Sustain my body,
Exalt my senses,
Direct my course,
Regulate my manners,
Bless my undertakings,
Fulfil my petitions,
Inspire me with holy thoughts,
Pardon what is past,
Rectify what is present,
Order what is to come.

Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us; unto him be glory in the church, throughout all ages, world without end. AMEN.

"THE CAPTAIN OF THE HOST OF THE LORD."

THE tribes were gathering slowly to their rest. The murmur of a multitude, rising and falling, was dying away into the stillness of deepening night. All were thinking lightly of the days that lay before them, for now they had crossed the border of the Land of Promise; all, save one. The young leader—young, as years are counted in ancient Hebrew story—moved on in restless thought. Leaving the luxuriance of the broad, deep, sheltered Jordan valley, turning from the east, where the stars multiplied as the daylight faded, he passed up the slope and stood, now seemingly in utter solitude, facing the west. Strange promised land! Wilderness of barren hills and stunted vegetation struggling through sands and rocks! Yonder, where the cold after-glow of sunset rests on the horizon, a dark spot stands out, the distant sinister aspect of the first fortress to be reduced before he and his people can pass another night in safety within this land: a symbol, to him, of what lies before them; a Land of Promise to be won at the price of conflict long drawn out, and suffering and death. Here the full awfulness of the burden laid upon him gripped the man's very soul. Sick with anxiety, he wandered on until over all the wilderness around there fell the glamour of the Eastern star-lit sky. And here, slowly forming itself and, as it were, assuming more concrete reality as the moments passed, there rose over against him the figure of a mighty human form, standing erect with arm uplifted and a gleaming sword raised on high: fit symbol of that tense storm of feeling which beat against the confines of his human soul. To him, it was an agent of the Unseen—a guardian of those secrets which to know would mean everything to him and his. And that desire, subduing every impulse to wonder or fear, concentrated itself in one question, the question of all questions for him: "Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?" The Vision stood above him; and the answer fell in tones of unearthly tenderness and power: "Nay, but as captain of the host of the Lord I am come!"

Even so do we look into the dim unknown where lie the issues of the world's present life; and with the same intensity of meaning the question rises to our lips, alike in the things of our individual lives and in the things of that greater life, no less real, to which we all contribute by our very being, and which makes us, as a nation, one people. And to us, as to him, the same mysterious answer is given—mysterious, yet boundless in its significance. To us it is borne down through the voice of the age-long experience of man, ever varying yet ever the same, whose sound is as the sound of many waters, deeper and more penetrating than all the storms which rage in this or any time. Joshua, in one lonely and dreadful hour, thought that nothing was there, beside his people and their stubborn foes, but the coldly glittering stars above and the wilderness below. And to him the Voice said—as it says to us to-day, if we have ears to hear—that in all the quests and conquests of this life we are but doing our part in a host as innumerable as all the ages of time; we are but workers in a Great Plan whose issues are vaster than our clearest vision can discern. "Not as captain of thy host only, nor of theirs, do I come; not as guarantor that all for which thou goest forth to contend with them, shall be won, or lost; but as Messenger of that Host whose movement means that in this struggle thou and thy foes shall work out a greater good than these earthly eyes shall ever see." What was this but one of the secrets of that Divine Discipline of Israel which made this people a Chosen People, worthy to be bearers of a divine spark which no sin or misery could extinguish, and which at length burst into a flame whose brightness showed the terror and the glory of the Eternal Law of Justice and Righteousness on earth?

S. H. MELLONE.

RECREATION IN WAR-TIME.

IT is reported of Abraham Lincoln that during the American Civil War, when as a statesman he was undergoing a strain such as few have ever been subjected to, he never made a speech in public without, at some point or other, convulsing his audience with laughter. Some of the more sober-sided of his countrymen were shocked at this seeming hilariousness which seemed to them to indicate a lack of a sense of the extreme gravity of the crisis through which his country was passing, and, on one occasion, a gentleman approached Mr. Lincoln after one of his addresses, in which sallies and flashes of humour had sparkled and scintillated through an otherwise fundamentally serious and grave discourse: "How can you joke, Mr. Lincoln, at such a crisis as this when youth-blood from North and South is being poured out in such copious dripping showers?" "Man," replied Lincoln, "if I could not joke I should die!"

Humour was the safety-valve of that great breaking heart. It was not that the gravity of the crisis was not at all times felt by him, but that the very intensity of the strain was so severe that if at times he did not relax it he would snap for very tension, like the E. string of a violin if you try to get too much out of it, and do not give it its due place among the other strings, thus quieting and modifying its vibrations. Life is not intended to be either all tragedy or all comedy, but each in its due proportion. There is a time to weep and a time to laugh. It was a wise man who said that, and its wisdom so appeals to men that it has found a place in the Bible.

When I want to see this awful war in its true perspective, or rather when I want to realise its horrors and yet remain sane in the contemplation, there are two things I do. I pick up Raemaeker's cartoons and then Bairnsfather's. The greatest record of the war is the work of the Dutch artist Raemaeker. But, from first to last, his pictures are one unrelieved horror. There is gore dripping all over them. They are undiluted tragedy—that crowd of mothers who have lost their sons, of widows who have lost their husbands, of children who are fatherless—they positively make you shiver! Dead bodies floating down a river, the victims of the Lusitania stretched out in line on the mortuary floor for the recognition of distracted relatives—all the cynicism and brutality and infinite pathos of war are here as if nothing could ever again wash this bloody business white. And then, when I simply can't stand it any longer, I take up my Bairnsfather and roar with unbridled laughter at the gruesome yet comical scenes at the front he describes. He is portraying just the same kind of scenes as Raemaeker, but his point of view is different. He calls his dug-out "Shrapnel View," and thus advertises its location and advantages: "In one of the choicest localities of Northern France to be let (three minutes from the German trenches) this attractive and well-built dug-out containing one reception-kitchen-bedroom (4 ft. by 3). All modern conveniences, including gas and water. One foot above water-level, commanding an excellent view of the enemy trenches. Excellent shooting (snipe and duck). Particulars of the late tenant, Room 6, Base Hospital, Boulogne."

Here is another picture of Bairnsfather: A dilapidated farmhouse at the front. Roof all gone, door and wall alone standing. A shell-hole in the wall that is standing. In the foreground two dead horses, a dead donkey and a dead cat. All around desolation. One of our fine fellows sitting on an empty grocer's box in front of the ruin writing a letter home—"Dear So and So....At present we are staying at a farm."

What a blessing it is our men at the front can look at things in that way! I understand that they seldom let slip any chance of humour even in situations the most trying and grim. Pick up any of the magazines that are edited and circulated among the men at the front and you are amazed to find an irrepressible humour from start to finish. If they can laugh surely we might be able to laugh occasionally! The spirit of the men at the front is the spirit that keeps men sane and makes for victory. We wrap ourselves in a cloud of gloom and see spectres!

The spirit of Lincoln and of Bairnsfather is the spirit of victory. It was the spirit of one of our greatest sailors—Drake. I like that story of him finishing his game of bowls on the green at Plymouth before engaging the Armada. No whit disturbed though one of the gravest contests in which this nation has ever been engaged was imminent! The story is matched by an incident in the present war. Our Admiral in the Falklands Battle—after the enemy had been sighted and the decks had been cleared for action—went full-steam ahead, and bade his men have their lunch as usual before they got within striking-distance of the enemy. When men can be thus normal in abnormal times you may have complete confidence in victory.

A study of the times of Oliver Cromwell might prove of considerable benefit to us in a time of no less national stress and crisis. And this lesson especially we might learn from them. The Puritan of those days, realising the sternness and gravity of the times, and overwhelmed by a sense of God's awful judgments, eliminated even the most innocent and natural pleasures from the people's lives. The maypole went, and the dancing on the village-green. And you know what happened a few years later when the reign of the saints was over and the reign of the strumpets began. Similarly, I am convinced that if there is an undue curtailing of amusement and recreation at this time, if all that must inevitably tend to the deepening of the national sorrows is more and more intensified by our closing up of all the avenues of a natural relief and diversion, we shall, sooner or later, enter upon a period of reaction and excess. After all, is not perhaps the greatest teaching of Christ this: "My burden is light"? The most Christian place to bear a Cross, if we have one, is not on our back, where everybody may see it, but in our heart to which only God can penetrate. The Christian should cultivate an inward austerity but an outward gaiety: he should cheer and not depress his fellows. And the nature of the Englishman is not to walk along with his head down.

The times ahead of us are stern, and they should be times of self-discipline, times that demand simplicity of living, times that are opposed to all forms of luxury and extravagance and excess, but I trust that they will still be times for those quiet pleasures which will relieve the national strain and maintain the nation's sanity, times in which a natural humour will not unseldom light up the gloom, when laughter will not altogether be banished from human faces, and when in every possible way we shall endeavour to cheer and hearten one another along our daily road. Some one has written finely that "there is no tragedy more tragic than war: unless we mix some laughter with it we shall crack." And again: "We needed cleansing lest we perished of pleasure: we need now chcering lest we perish of pain." For nations as for individuals, as our greatest English man of letters perceived, when he was nearing the end of his pilgrimage and with his surest vision:—

A merry heart goes all the way,
Your sad tires in a mile-a!"

And the nation has still a long way to go.

H. H. JOHNSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE POSSIBILITY OF PEACE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Touching this question of Peace versus a German Peace (one is reminded of him "who made a solitude and called it peace") may I venture in further support of your own words to call attention to the article on 'The Temptation of Peace' in The Times Literary Supplement of December 7? Many of your readers are, no doubt, habitually familiar with the fine moral discrimination of "the Preacher of The Times"; it would be well if all who may be wavering towards the path of (apparently) least resistance would brace themselves by the study of this article, and its presentment of that fundamental conflict of ideas and purposes which the "pacificists," looking at events through German eyes, so persistently ignore. It is true that this conflict has been stated in varying terms by the best heads and hearts in the country, but the continual ignoring of it by "pacificist" dissentients has the effect of discounting its importance in minds lacking independent power of judgment—as, of course, is intended. May I, in common with many others, express my admiration of your clear vision of the fundamental issues and your fine and fearless words thereon?—Yours, &c.,

FLORENCE ROBERTS.

Claughton, Birkenhead.

SIR,—Those of your correspondents who are pleading for the tender treatment of Turkey have overlooked the statement made by Mr. Asquith some eighteen months ago: when Turkey entered the war, she committed national suicide. The diplomatic documents show that had Turkey remained neutral, the Allies would have guaranteed her integrity. As that offer was rejected, Turkey must take the consequences, and the Allies not only may, but ought to, take the opportunity of settling the Turkish Question once and for all. It is too often forgotten that the question has an Asiatic as well as a European aspect, for the Turk is in a minority in every province of his Empire, except Anatolia, and, even there, there is a large district of which the same holds good. By itself, of course, this would be no justification for dispossessing him, but if ever there was a race which was imperii incapax, it is the Turkish one. Armenians, Jews, Kurds, Arabs and others will all benefit from the settled government which the Protectorate of the Allies (or some of them) will bring. With regard to Constantinople, it should be borne in mind that only one-third of the population is Turkish, and, presumably, a good many of those will migrate to Asia when Turkey is cleared out "bag and baggage." It is quite possible to arrive at a compromise on the claims of Russia. Let her hold Constantinople, but as trustee, not owner—when she may avoid the fatal spell which the city has, hitherto, cast on its possessors—and let the Straits be neutralised.—Yours, &c.,

FREDK. G. JACKSON.

Leeds. January 2, 1917.

"CHILDREN WHO NEVER GROW UP."

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—We have in this Institution some 250 children who will never grow up, being mentally defective "from birth or from an early age," as the Mental Deficiency Act expresses it. These children are badly off for toys, games, and occupations for the winter months. I believe children's hospitals and institutions for cripple children are generously supplied with gifts of toys and games, but for some reason I cannot fathom, no one seems ever to think of the poor defectives. Since I came here in January last I have obtained some toys by begging from friends, but none at all from the general public. Evidently people do not know our need, and if you will kindly publish this letter I feel sure we shall obtain assistance from some generous folks who never previously heard of our existence.

Many of our children are quite capable of enjoying all the ordinary amusements of normal children. Gramophone records would be gratefully received. So, also, would gifts of money for our toy fund. I may add that a few perambulators, mail carts, and go-carts would be most useful, as we have a good many cripple children who at present get out very little.—Yours, &c.,

W. B. DRUMMOND,
Medical Superintendent.
Baldovan Institution, near Dundee.
Christmas, 1916.

P.S.—Goods sent by rail should be addressed to "Baldovan and Downfield Station," Caledonian Railway.

10TH LABOUR BATTALION R.E.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Having been turned into a lieutenant on the Railway Transport Establishment I am no longer in personal touch with the 10th Labour Battalion R.E. But I want all former givers of good gifts to continue their well-doing, and send their welcome parcels of woollen comforts direct to the C.S.M., A.Co., 10th Labour Battalion R.E. (France), intimating that they are on account of Corporal Roberts. The C.S.M. will see to it that distribution is made fairly and squarely as needs run. The Pioneers were afraid that with my withdrawal the "lines of communication" with "gifts" might also be severed. Our men are doing brave work: in all the dampness and sombreness of the French forests they are providing for their fellows in the front. I ask for this publicity as friends all over the country have at different times dispatched the most opportune fruits of their generous labours; and with only a skeleton kit to hand I am unable to get their addresses.—Yours, &c.,

H. D. ROBERTS, Lieut.,
A.D.R.T. (N.), A.P.O. 4
(France).

December 29, 1916.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

PRIVATE EDWIN COYSH.

WE deeply regret to record the death of Private Edwin Coysh, who passed away in hospital in France on Friday, December 22, having been taken ill while on his way to the front. The son of Mr. E. H. Coysh, who has done valuable work for Unitarianism in the North of England, he was born on December 31, 1890. He was educated at Rutherford College, where he won a Corporation Scholarship for four years. He relinquished this in order to sit for a Science and Art Scholarship, which he secured. In 1905 he passed the College of Preceptors' Examination, being fifth in the Kingdom, and next year passed London Matriculation with honours. In the same year he joined the staff of the Commercial Union Assurance Company and passed all the examinations of the Chartered Insurance Institute with honours. The confidence of the Company in his ability led to his promotion in April, 1914, to the Chief Inspectorship at Middlesborough. A career of great promise has thus been cut short. Being of a modest disposition he would have been the last to refer to these successes. He took a keen interest in the formation of the Liberal Thought Class for young people at the Church at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and like his father was especially desirous of the welfare of the Unitarian Church at Gateshead. Regularly Sunday by Sunday he tramped over to the services there. In October, 1915, he joined the Durham University O.T.C., and subsequently on Christmas Eve enlisted with his brother in the London Scottish Regiment, proceeding to France last October. He was not made for the art of war, having been brought up in a family devoted to peace principles, but he gave himself earnestly to his new duties. His impressions of the men in the army were interesting. He once wrote: "Most of the men here are from up the line, and I have no doubt that a student of human nature would have a rare time among them. Every possible regiment and colony is represented and every type and class of man. Personally I have come up against more strong language and coarseness of speech than ever in my life before, but one thing very noticeable is the absence of mean and dirty tricks which are such a feature in ordinary life. I don't think any man here would knowingly do another an underhand action. The helping hand is held out everywhere." The deepest sympathy is felt for his father, mother, two sisters and brother (who is in the trenches) in their bereavement. They have lost a good son and brother, who could always be relied upon, and whose affection called forth their deepest love.

MRS. EDITH REID.

SOUTH WALES Unitarianism in general, and the Swansea Church in particular, have sustained a very severe loss by the passing hence on Friday, December 22, 1916, of Mrs. Edith Reid, The Knoll, Swansea, in her 80th year. Coming from a long line of Unitarians—she was the grand-daughter of the Rev. W. J. Hort—she portrayed those great qualities of heart and mind characteristic of the "Old Unitarians" more perhaps than the "New." Unvarnished sincerity, scrupulous loyalty to truth and right, service without ostentation, a conscientious charity that engages no bells to announce its coming—these were marked features of a life that was in all things gracious and uplifting.

Born in Swansea in March, 1837, she had been connected with the Church in High Street practically all her life, and the record throughout is of a most faithful worshipper and devoted worker. For some years she had been Treasurer of the Church—the first and only Lady Treasurer in its long history of over 230 years—and President of the Ladies' Guild. In days when such organisations were more needed than now she successfully carried on for about thirty years a Clothing Club in the schoolroom, whose members numbered many hundreds. A mere enumeration of her philanthropic activities in the town is a luminous comment on her busy life of helpful service. She was a member of the Committee of the local Charity Organisation Society, of the Cwmdonkin Shelter for Girls, Treasurer of the Lady Mond Relief Committee, one of the founders of the Swansea and South Wales Nursing Institute, and member of its Committee to the last, member of the Committee of the District Nursing Association, Treasurer of the Swansea Women's Liberal Association—until the inevitable weight of years recently compelled her to relinquish some of her offices—and a member of the local Society for the Disinterested Management of the Drink Traffic.

From 1910 to 1912 Mrs. Reid was the first Lady President of the South-East Wales Unitarian Society, a member of the Carmarthen College Students' Maintenance Fund, and for many years Secretary of the Swansea Unitarian Postal Mission. The spread and support of Unitarianism was her constant care; all that makes for human good found in her a most efficient, though most unassuming, helper. Her sound judgment, her comprehensive sympathy, her culture and saintliness, made her support a great moral force and her presence a spiritual power in every movement wherewith she was connected, and every one of them is incalculably the poorer for her passing. The town has lost one of its noblest citizens, the church a saintly personality, its minister a most gracious and sympathetic friend, and all good causes a valuable supporter.

Her remains were cremated in Birmingham on Wednesday, December 27, the Rev. Simon Jones conducting a simple farewell service for the family.

ALDERMAN GEORGE HUGHES.

THE Evesham (Oat Street Chapel) congregation has lost by the death of Alderman George Hughes, who passed away on December 26, one who has been for many years a notable character in the town. He sat on the Town Council for nearly thirty years, having been Mayor twice and an Alderman since 1904. He served almost as many years on the Board of Guardians, of which he had been Vice-Chairman since 1901. He was in his way a sort of local Oliver Cromwell, and was remarkable for his blunt honesty and out-and-outness. He was self-made and self-taught. He was as unbendable in opinion as in character, and would not yield an inch of any ground he had, hardly and unaided, won. He was a typical Evesham man, and for the greater part of his life followed the local industry of market-gardening, and was famous for his "grass." In his earlier years he fought a good fight for tenant-rights and the legalising of the Evesham Custom. He was no respecter of persons, and until he met his match in shrewdness and capacity he felt himself the inferior of no man. But he always remained a working man and never aspired to be anything else. His home-life was of the simplest and the most primitive. He was a publican in his later years and his house was well-conducted, both in the public and the private sense. He was a great, independent, fearless, rugged character, and always acted from a high sense of duty. There was a sturdy quality in him which recalled something especially characteristic of the Englishman. He loved this Evesham where he was born and bred, and to the utmost of his power and with utter faithfulness he served it till the end. The funeral was a public one, attended by the Mayor, Aldermen and Corporation and leading officials. The first part of the burial service was conducted in Oat Street Chapel, when a short address was delivered by the minister, the Rev. H. H. Johnson.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

103rd LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	15,405	9	3
Miss Hervey (eleventh donation)	3	0	0
Mrs. H. J. Broadbent (third donation)	1	0	0
Mr. William Roscoe (third donation)	2	2	0
Mr. W. F. Oldham, Winnipeg (fourth donation)	2	1	1
Miss Armstrong	0	5	0
"From Maidstone" (second donation)	7	7	0
Miss Isabel Worsley	5	0	0
Mansford Street Guild, per the Rev. Gordon Cooper ..	5	5	0
Mr. H. S. Knowles (third donation)	1	1	0
Miss J. Buckley (third donation)	0	10	0
Dr. Trouville, Belgian Army Medical Service	0	7	2
Mrs. Perrot (sixth donation)	1	1	0
Miss Booth Scott (eleventh donation)	0	10	0
Mrs. Buckton (tenth donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. C. A. Lloyd (third donation)	1	0	0
M. and G. P. (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Miss A. Fricker, Trinidad (twelfth donation).. ..	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Gimson (third donation)	1	1	0
Mrs. Brunner (fourth donation)	10	0	0
Miss Blake (thirteenth donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. W. H. Robins (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. Hans Renold (fourth donation)	1	0	0
The Millers of Kent, collected by Mr. C. W. Chitty (second donation)	257	6	0
"C." (second donation) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Julian Winser (twenty-fourth monthly donation)..	1	0	0
Mrs. William Tangye (eighteenth monthly donation)	5	0	0
Highgate Unitarian Church, per the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth (thirteenth monthly collection)	10	9	7
Miss F. A. Short (fifteenth donation)	4	0	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (twenty-fourth monthly donation)	10	0	0
Miss Mary Fretwell (eighth donation)	1	0	0
	£15,757	15	1

Parcels have been received from: The Women's League at the Unitarian Church, Eleanor Street, Nelson, N.Z. (per Miss Ethel Driver); Mrs. Murray Macdonald; Mrs. Newell; Finchley Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); Miss Higginson; Miss Booth Scott; Mrs. Hartley; Mrs. Perrot; The County Secondary School, Plumstead (per Miss Bartram); Golder's Green War Hospital Supply Depot (per Mrs. Barry); Miss Pearse; Anon., Ipswich; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; The Ladies Sewing Circle, Brixton; Mrs. H. A. Stevens; Unity Church, Islington Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Waters); Anon.; Mrs. William Tangye.

Through the kindness of a Yorkshire friend Mrs. Allen has a quantity of excellent grey knitting wool to sell for the benefit of the Fund, at a very low price. She will send a pattern to any one writing for it, and hopes secretaries of working parties will take advantage of the offer, and benefit themselves and the Fund at the same time.

WEEKLY NOTES.

AT the beginning of our third year of work, I should like to offer my warmest thanks to those ladies who have worked here so devotedly and to whom so much of the success of the Fund is due. Subscribers will perhaps like to know their names:—

In the Secretarial Department.

Mrs. J. T. Osler, who acts as Hon. Secretary and keeps all accounts.

Mrs. Turnbull, who keeps the parcels' index.

Mrs. C. E. B. Russell, who keeps the subscribers' index.

In the Packing Department.

Mrs. W. H. Drummond, who has given continuous and devoted service to the laborious task of packing bales of clothing, and her helpers: Miss Gertrude Martineau, Mrs. Ernest Tomlinson, and Mrs. E. A. Wurzburg, and several other ladies from time to time.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Pyjamas, vests, pants.
Slippers, shirts, socks.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens.
Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais.

Layettes (on Belgian methods).
Women's chemises.
Bed jackets (in pale colours if possible).

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

TOYS FOR BELGIAN CHILDREN.

MRS. W. H. DRUMMOND acknowledges with many thanks the receipt of parcels of toys from Mrs. Titterton and the West Grove Women's League, Cardiff.

A further consignment of five cases of toys has just been dispatched, making a total of nearly 1,500 toys altogether.

We make a short reference in 'Notes of the Week' to this Fund which is now closed.

ENGLISH PRISONERS IN SWITZERLAND.

WE have received the following poignant account from the pen of Miss Helen Lawford of the arrival of another batch of English prisoners in Switzerland:—

On Wednesday, I heard that the two hundred English soldiers were expected to arrive on Thursday, Dec. 14, at 5.45 A.M. I started to walk to Montreux with several friends about 4.45. It was clear, but bitterly cold and very slippery, so we could not go very quickly, and there was a goodly crowd already when we reached the station. Miss S. and I had tickets for the platform and were asked to help at the breakfast.

The station was gaily decorated, and the town band waiting, and a company of soldiers to help the men out of the train, besides a number of Swiss Red Cross ambulance men. There were a good many French officers, too, Swiss doctors in uniform, and a few English. The train was nearly an hour late but at last it came, whilst the band played 'God Save the King,' and this was answered by three very feeble cheers. Then the unloading began and you never saw such a heart-rending sight, quite the worst of all I have seen. First came forty-three stretchers with men in all stages of illness, then a crowd on crutches, or carried down the stairs by pairs of sturdy Swiss soldiers, and then the rest followed, pale, thin to emaciation, haggard, dirty, almost in rags; in fact, you could scarcely recognise their clothes as having once been uniforms. Nearly all the men walked feebly and looked almost bewildered by their reception, and when they saw the dining-room at the Hotel Suisse, with its English flags, a great portrait of our King, and the long tables laid for breakfast, many of them broke down and wept. Almost all the men at our table belonged to the Enniskillens, who suffered so from refusing to join the Casement rebellion. The things they told us were terrible and made one's blood boil, and they had been two years and three months in prison. Many of them could not eat at all, but all were delighted to see the great plates of freshly made toast, which they liked better than the rolls. One poor man on a stretcher was carried back to the station clasping a piece of toast, which he had never thought he would see again.

We always provide stamped postcards and pencils so that they may write home, and soon our pockets were filled with them. A serjeant told me that for the last three months in their camp the sentinels used to come every day and beg the prisoners for bits of their bread, and the women hung round the outskirts begging for any scraps they could get. All these men looked so wretched because they had been kept so long at the frontier in dreadfully insufficient accommodation and with very short rations of food, and of course no parcels there. The serjeant also said that many of the men were made more ill by the uncertainty as to whether they would be passed through or sent back again, and the dread of the latter seemed more than the poor things could bear.

We were not allowed to help with the stretcher-cases, but when these had been carried back to the train, they let us go with the men, many of whom were most grateful for an arm, or for help in carrying their bundles to which they cling with affection.

The train to Château D'Oex ("Shatter Dior," as the men call it!) was a long one, and as it slowly left the station and turned the corner to begin going up hill, three good English cheers arose from the weary but refreshed men. We were all so glad it turned out a brilliantly fine morning for the rest of their journey."

THE HOSTEL AT ESSEX HALL.

MR. R. M. MONTGOMERY, K.C., Treasurer of the Hostel and Social Centre for Soldiers and Sailors, acknowledges with sincere thanks the following additional contributions:—

Lady Bowring, £30; Mr. H. Russell, £5 5*s.*; Mrs. H. Bramley, £5; Dr. and Mrs. Lloyd Jones's Four Boys, £4; Mr. B. Hingley, £2 2*s.*; Mr. and Miss Agnes Smith, £2 2*s.*; Mrs. Gedling Bradley, Mr. John Sale, Mrs. Talbot, Mr. and Mrs. Harrop White, each £1 1*s.*; Dr. and Mrs. Crooker of America (per Mr. and Mrs. James Rowley), Mrs. McIntyre, each £1; Moira Church and the Rev. J. A. Pearson, each 10*s.*; Miss Tayler, 6*s.*; Mrs. Bourne, Mr. W. Orrell, each 5*s.*; the Rev. F. Allen, 3*s.*; Mr. Cox, 2*s.* 6*d.*

The total amount promised is now £6,548 17*s.*

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

WE are very glad to hear that the Rev. H. D. Roberts, who has done splendid work with the 10th Labour Battalion in France, has received a commission as full Lieutenant in the Railway Transport Service. We believe that it is quite unprecedented for a man of Mr. Roberts's age to be promoted from the ranks, and the whole thing has caused not a little surprise in army circles. It is a case of signal merit winning a victory over red tape.

IT is good to hear that all the non-commissioned officers in Mr. Roberts's battalion are delighted at his promotion. It is just what we should expect, but it speaks volumes for his stimulating and helpful comradeship in the common life of the mess-room and the camp. His fellow-ministers will also be eager to send him their congratulations, not perhaps without some twinges of regret that for one reason or another they have not been able to do so much or to deserve so well of their country.

THE Rev. Walter Short of Bootle, who has been in training for some months, has received a temporary commission as 2nd Lieutenant (on probation) in the 3rd King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry.

MR. VICTOR FOX, an external student of Manchester College, Oxford, and an active member of the London Lay Preachers Union, has been awarded the War degree of B.A. by the University of London. Mr. Fox was a student at the East London College when he joined the R.A.M.C. He has been in France for many months. He will now be able to begin his theological course at Oxford as a full graduate as soon as he leaves the army.

WE congratulate our monthly contemporary, The Free Catholic, on completing its first year of publication. The editor, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, writes very cheerfully of its progress in public esteem. Its success, he says, "has truly surprised us and far exceeded all our expectations." "After careful thought," he continues, "and much anxious weighing of many opinions we have decided to make no change for the present in price or size or style. We await the results of another year's experience before attempting anything on a more ambitious scale. We look with confidence to our sympathisers to help us in every possible way, literary and financial, and by personal recommendation, to make our second year even more successful than the first."

DR. W. B. DRUMMOND, the Medical Superintendent of the Baldovan Institution for defective children, Dundee, who makes an earnest appeal in our columns to-day for playthings and amusements for his patients, is the only son of the Rev. R. B. Drummond of Edinburgh. He was formerly for many years on the staff of the Royal Hospital for Sick Children and Lecturer on Hygiene at the Teachers Training Centre, in Edinburgh. He has made a special study of child-psychology, and following the literary traditions of his family has already several books to his credit, including 'An Introduction to Child-Study' and 'The Child: his Nature and Nurture.'

ALDERMAN A. J. HOBSON, J.P., has been appointed Pro-Chancellor of the Sheffield University. He is a prominent member of the congregation of Upper Chapel.

IT is announced that the meeting of the National Conference Committee in Manchester, arranged for this month, will not be held in deference to the Government appeal for restricted travelling.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Bradford.—On December 22 a presentation was made at the Khaki Club on behal, of the committee and helpers to the Revf Thomas Paxton, one of the hon. secretaries. to whose work in this connection allusion was recently made in THE INQUIRER, and to Miss Logan, who supervises the work of the Canteen Committee. Both the recipients received gold wristlet watches and wallets containing Treasury notes. Mr. J. H. Robinson, in handing the gift to Mr. Paxton, spoke of the invaluable services which the latter had rendered, and Miss Ellis and Lady Godwin also paid tributes to Mr. Paxton and Miss Logan, Lady Godwin expressing the regret of Sir Arthur Godwin, the President of the Club, at his inability to be present. The recipients replied in suitable terms, and said they had been repaid a thousand-fold by the gratitude of the men who had used the club.

Two very successful At Homes were held on December 16 and 18 in connection with Chapel Lane Chapel. Ladies of the congregation provided refreshments, and furnished a small stall of useful articles. About £75 were raised in aid of church funds, including donations from prominent townsmen who appreciate the good work which the minister, The Rev. Thomas Paxton, is doing in the town. Mr. Paxton has been elected President of the Athenæum Club for the current year.

Chowbent.—The local Journal reports that the Christmas morning service at Chowbent Chapel brought together a large attendance of worshippers, old and young, when the hymns, prayers, and the special music were of a particularly seasonable and inspiring character, as also were the brief sermon, and the fine old Christmas legend told to the children by the minister, the Rev. J. J. Wright, who occupied the pulpit. Except for the usual flowers and plenty of light in the chapel, ordinary Christmas decorations were this year again discarded on account of war time. This also applied to the schoolroom, with the exception of a few mottoes appropriate to the time, and a large white "Welcome" on a red ground upon the wall over the platform. This "welcome" had a special significance for the boys in khaki home on leave, and who were "the honoured guests" of the Christmas party. The tea tables were crowded at five o'clock, and an excellent programme of music and other pieces was given by the choir, the children and young people. Mr. Wright, after the opening hymn, remarked that although they could not fitly, at present, use some of the old wishes, they ought all to aim at making this a good Christmas and to pray for a better New Year. He referred in kindly terms to all absent through age or illness from their morning service and this evening meeting, and on ordinary Sundays. He appealed most earnestly to all parents to do their essential part to get their children to Sunday school both morning and afternoon, and to all who could come and help with the teaching or other work. With nearly one hundred boys away in the Forces it made a big difference. Those boys at this moment were thinking of us as we now tenderly thought of them. He expressed also very warm gratitude to present workers. We may add that the lantern service in school on Sunday afternoon, and the children's dance on Wednesday evening were highly successful. All the proceeds of the latter go annually to the Children's Home—"Winifred House," and the "Red Cross Home," South Shore. The same paper records that Chowbent Chapel and School sent a postal order for 6*s*. to each of its boys away, along with a Christmas and New Year's message.

Leeds: Mill Hill Chapel. — The 244th Anniversary was kept last Sunday, the preacher being the Rev. Dr. Hargrove (Minister Emeritus). It was, he said, 244 years ago that day that the deed was signed by which the plot of land on which the Chapel and Schools now stood passed into the hands of the leaders of Nonconformity in Leeds. There were many among the Puritans who thought it unwise to spend money in reliance on the King's promise of protection against the law of the realm which prohibited any worship other than that of the Established Church, but those merchants of Leeds were more hopeful of the future. They built both speedily and well, and when, in a year's time, the meeting-house was opened, it was pronounced by admirers the finest of the kind in the North of England, and their faith was justified. Another generation succeeded, like-minded to themselves, and, through the dull years of the eighteenth century, they maintained their witness to liberty of conscience, and added more and more to the congregation's tradition. One hundred and seventy-five years went on. Ministers and elders passed away, but the church abided, and lived its life. Then came another generation, the fathers of some who worshipped there that day, who wished to see a building more worthy of the cause, and they built the present beautiful chapel at their own cost, refusing subscriptions which would gladly have come from outside, and that day they kept also the 68th anniversary of the new chapel. They had fallen upon such times as their predecessors never knew. In addition to their sufferings in common with the rest of the community, they had to endure peculiar privations. Their schools were taken for national purposes, their hall of meeting was taken from them, and their minister had gone to the war, but they were proud of the sacrifices they had been called on to make. Far worse than this was the loss of their young men. "L'Année Terrible," so the French styled the year in which Paris, overcome by starvation, opened her gates to the German invader, and paid a ransom such as the world had never known before. More terrible still was the year now closing, with the enemy in possession of so many allied countries, and so many fine cities reduced to ashes, with Hope scarcely daring to whisper the name of peace. And of their own, how many had fallen? They had bravely risked all at the call of duty and their country. Nobly they had lived, and nobly died, and their loss left such a void as would not be filled in this generation. And what of themselves? Let one of them say. He wrote of his dead comrades: "At their dying, we who are left have not wept overmuch, for their glory stayed our tears." And of this same one, it was written: "The strongest impression I have of Lister was his strong sense of duty. Throughout the war, I have never known one whose heart burned so with that fine flame which sent us all soldiering." Among these splendid young fellows were many from that congregation. Their names would live—graven, he hoped, in lasting memorial of brass or marble on their walls—and their story would be told over and over again from that pulpit, and the preacher would counsel all to be true to their example: to give all, if need be, for their country.

London: Brixton.—A very successful Musical Service was held on the evening of December 31, when Mr. C. A. Piper of the Home Missionary College preached to a large congregation. Selections from the 'Messiah' were rendered by the choir and soloists. A collection amounting to over £12 was made for the Fund for Soldiers and Sailors blinded in the War.

London: Islington.—On New Year's Eve, an impressive Service of Consecration was held at Unity Church, when several young people were welcomed as members by the minister, the Rev. J. Vint Laughland. In the course of his sympathetic address Mr. Laughland urged decision for, and maintenance of, high ideals of life. With Paul they should say, "This one thing I do....I press toward the mark for the prize of our high calling," ever following the gleam! The anthem was Tennyson's 'Ring out, wild bells,' set to dramatic and original music by the organist, Mr. T. F. Wood, and admirably rendered by the choir. Valuable assistance was given in the musical part of the service by a contingent from the North London Symphony Orchestra, whose performance was warmly appreciated. A good congregation assembled, and a short social gathering was held in the schoolroom after the service. A number of new members have been enrolled, and the prospects for the new year are very hopeful, notwithstanding the depressing effects of the war and the darkened streets. "1917" brings the 250th anniversary of the founding of the congregation in the city, together with the earnest anticipation that this year may be crowned with a world-wide and lasting Peace.

Manchester, Failsworth.—One of the most faithful and devoted workers in connection with Dob Lane Chapel, Mr. Samuel Etchells, passed away on December 18, after an operation. He had attended service on the previous Sunday. Mr. Etchells was first appointed a teacher in the Sunday school in 1873, and he was in office up to the time of his death, thus having practically completed 44 years of unbroken and conscientious service. One who had worked with him all the time writes: "A more genial colleague it would have been difficult to find, for his services were all heartily and cheerfully rendered....For whatever he did he 'sought not praise,' he was too modest and unassuming for that....he preferred the quiet work behind the scenes." At the Service in the Chapel on the Sunday morning following the interment, the minister, the Rev. J. Morley Mills, taking for his text, "Faithful in a very little," paid tribute to his character for gentleness, peaceableness, diligence, and devotion, which was ever manifested to all, and under all circumstances. He will be a great loss to the congregation.

Scarborough.—In spite of the depressing economic condition of the town the religious and social life of the Church is being kept well together, and although suffering from reduced numbers, much interest is being taken in its work. The Sunday services are well attended, the minister, the Rev. J. Wain, having just concluded an interesting course of Centenary sermons on 'Charlotte Brontë,' 'Thomas Gray,' and 'James Philip Bailey,' the author of 'Festus,' and also a sermon on Sir Oliver Lodge's book, under the title of 'Do the Dead speak to us?' The Young People's Guild has had helpful meetings, and a successful Sale of Work has been held. Upwards of thirty-six men have left for War Service. Government grants of money are being made for the relief of rents of lodging-house keepers, and a "Council of Social Service," of which Mr. Wain is a member, helps to maintain homes and families until such times as they are able to help themselves.

Sheffield: Upper Chapel.—The Minister's Preparation Class has for three months been studying the Rev. Dr. Crooker's book 'The Church of To-morrow,' and will continue to meet until Easter. The Annual Service of Self-Dedication and of welcome to new members was conducted by the Rev. C. J. Street last Sunday morning. In the evening a Service of Commemoration and of Re-consecration, in view of the trouble and responsibility incurred through the war, was also conducted by Mr. Street, the form of service prepared by the National Conference Committee being used. This was the occasion of the closing address of a series on 'War Time Reflections,' the subject being the book 'Ethical and Religious Problems,' edited by Dr. Carpenter. Collections were made for the Red Cross funds.

Swansea.—Commemoration Services for "Our Boys" were held at the Unitarian Church, High Street, on Sunday, December 31, when Lieut.-Col. C. S. Bullock conducted the services. In the morning he gave an inspiring address on 'Our Boys.' In the course of his morning address, Lieut.-Col. Bullock said: "I hate war as I hate the orthodox hell. I love peace, yet I would rather have a world with war that develops manhood than a world without war that makes no men. I am one of 32,000 Americans who have joined the Canadian Legion because I consider it as much my duty as that of the British to fight against a nation which disregards international law. This is as much America's fight as England's. We are going to fight on so long as the people over yonder are not willing to recognise the principle of right which God has implanted in men." Some Companies of the Swansea Volunteers, and Red Cross nurses in uniform were present. In the evening, Lieut.-Col. Bullock preached a stirring sermon on 'My Faith—a Manly Religion,' to which large congregations listened with interest and profit. The offertories were given to the Red Cross Society and the District Nursing Association.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Clothes for Belgian and Serbian Children.

The report issued by the Belgian and Serbian Children's Clothing Fund, which has been raised entirely by the children of the London County Council Schools, gives an excellent description of a useful and generous piece of work which has been carried out with great success. The idea of the Elementary Education Sub-Committee, which originally propounded the notion, was that the children in the London elementary schools should themselves contribute to a fund making a special appeal to them, and when the time came for consulting the headmasters and mistresses and forming local committees the scheme met with a warm response. The plan of sending clothes to the children of stricken Belgium and Serbia commended itself to every one, and after inquiry at the offices of the Belgian and Serbian Relief Committees as to the type of clothing that was needed, the Stores Department took steps to obtain a large quantity of the necessary material, and directions were issued to the head mistresses of the schools giving information as to the best method of arranging for the making of the garments. The children's pennies had not, of course, come in when the material was purchased, but the teachers were full of faith that they would be forthcoming, and the Finance Committee accepted their assurances and made all necessary arrangements.

* * *

The confidence of the teachers in the generosity of the children was not misplaced. A total sum of no less than £3,750 has been collected, of which a balance in hand remains to be expended on buying clothes for older boys. "Altogether," the report states, "the making of about 9,500 kits, representing about 66,500 garments, has been put in hand. The clothes, when completed by each school, are sent to one of the local depots organised by the teachers in the various districts of London. Many of the parcels contain letters written by the children to their young Belgian or Serbian friends. At the local depots the parcels are collected and dispatched to M. Navaux, of the Belgian Relief Fund, and Mrs. Carrington Wilde, of the Serbian Relief Fund." The Fund has now been closed, and about 3,000 kits have already been dispatched abroad. The remaining 6,500 will, it is hoped, be sent before the end of the year. The gifts have been greatly appreciated, and the warmest letters of thanks have been received from Belgium and Serbia. The scheme has been admirably carried through under the direction of Mr. Bernard M. Allen, Deputy Education Officer to the L.C.C.

Prohibition in the United States.

Whatever may be the attitude of the general public towards prohibition in this country, it is clear that Americans are accustoming themselves to it very rapidly. The New York Independent says: "The United States Presidential election adds to the nineteen prohibition States four more, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, and South Dakota, with the prospect of two others, Utah and Florida, coming in later. Half of the States, and, if we include Alaska, more than half of the area of continental United States, are now dry territory. Besides this, liquor is now excluded by local option or high licence from a large part of most of the other States. The meaning of this is plain. It is simply that the American people are becoming slowly but soundly convinced that alcohol is too dangerous to be allowed at large in the community. This is no outburst of fanaticism. The people have not been carried off their feet by eloquence. They have not been misled by exaggerated statements as to the evils of the liquor traffic or of the advantages of abstinence. They know what the saloon does, they know what prohibition does, and they prefer the latter. They are shutting down on alcohol as they are shutting down on revolvers and sword canes, on cocaine and opium, on dynamite and fast automobiles. Such things are too risky to be unrestricted. For more than fifty years now the American people have had the opportunity of watching the working of prohibitory legislation. They are well aware of its defects and deficiencies, but they know—in the only way by which we know anything, seeing it tried—that on the whole it works well, and so they want it."

A Shakespeare Exhibition.

The Shakespeare Exhibition, which is being held this month at the Grafton Galleries in aid of the British Red Cross Society and the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, ought to be popular. Among the exhibits will be a unique and interesting collection belonging to Mr. R. Bateman, and exhibited at the Manchester Whitworth Institute, while many valuable additions have been promised by Sir Guy Laking, Prof. Gollancz, Miss Ellen Terry, Mr. A. D. Flower, on behalf of the Shakespeare Memorial, Stratford-on-Avon, and others. Mr. Martin Harvey, who has guaranteed the expenses, asks for the loan of pictures, portraits of, or costumes worn by notable players in Shakespearean productions. Sir Sidney Lee has consented to act as Hon. Treasurer.

Care of the Feeble-Minded.

At the annual meeting of the Incorporated Lancashire and Cheshire Society for the Permanent Care of the Feeble-Minded, which was held in Manchester Town Hall recently under the chairmanship of the Lord Mayor, the excellent work which is being done at Sandlebridge was described. The report showed a reduction in the subscriptions for which, of course, the war is partly responsible, and the Governors regretted that the same cause still hindered active steps being taken towards providing for a class of feeble-minded children of lower grade than those for whom the accommodation at Sandlebridge was designed. The provision of a recreation room and workshops had also been hindered, and the need of these was strongly urged by Sir Thomas T. Shann and Miss Mary Dendy. The former stated that during the year the new Manor House, providing accommodation for 20 men, had been brought into use. This was the second home for men, and brought up the total number of beds at the colony to 295. At the end of the year there were 285 inmates, of whom 86 were men, 86 boys, 69 women, and 44 girls. Of the £5,000 borrowed to purchase the Manor House estate £1,000 had been repaid. Miss Dendy said a crying need for the nation was a house for little low-grade children, who might be called more nursing than teaching cases. She added that there was plenty of room for extension at Sandlebridge.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, MISS E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BURGESS HILL, SUSSEX.—FURNISHED COTTAGE.—Seven rooms; garden; twenty minutes Station. Plate; linen. Inside sanitation. Any period.—B., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. CANN & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

IRISH LINEN SALE LADIES' HANDKERCHIEFS. Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Size 12 in. Bundle of six, 1*s.* 8*d.* (postage 2½*d.*); twelve, 3*s.* 3*d.* (postage 4*d.*). Send postcard for Sale Catalogue, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

COLEMAN'S R.T.B. Renowned Temperance Beverage.

THE IDEAL HEALTH DRINK. THE NEW INVIGORATOR.

A Delightful, Exhilarating, Non-Alcoholic Beverage.

Contains the principal ingredient used in the manufacture of Sanatogen.

The use of alcohol is terribly seductive, especially to those who fly to the sideboard for little sips of alcohol because they are intensely miserable. The greatest want of the age has been a satisfying non-alcoholic beverage, and at last we have it in Coleman's R.T.B.

Are you willing to Test it? Strongly recommended by Doctors and the Clergy.

It will refresh you. You can drink Coleman's R.T.B. with cold or hot water, or any kind of mineral water. A bottle at 1*s.* 9*d.* (a Champagne Quart) will make 25 half-pints, which make the cost of the drinks less than a penny each. It is a powerful nerve stimulant, but has no after depressing effect like alcohol. It exhilarates, invigorates, and stimulates. It stops the craving for spirits. It is a magnificent tonic for those who are 'run down' and not feeling quite well. The more you drink the better you are. It can be given to children with advantage.

TO SPENCER, LAYTON & CO., BRUNDALL, near NORWICH.
Kindly send me a sample of Coleman's R.T.B. I enclose 6*d.* for postage packing herewith. SEND THIS FORM.

Name .....

Address .....

Sold in bottles at 1*s.* and 1*s.* 9*d.* per bottle.

AGENTS WANTED. INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, January 6, 1917.
 Regarding Advertisement Rates see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3889. NEW SERIES, No. 992.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.

NOW IS THE TIME TO START SUBSCRIBING TO

"YOUNG DAYS."

Our Young People's Own Illustrated Magazine.

Edited by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY NUMBER.

PRINCESS LILY OF THE VALLEY. A Tale of the Present Time. (Serial.) By Theodora Mills.
SANTA CLAUS ON STRIKE.
TRUE COURAGE.
WHAT THE SNOW TOLD.
THE GIVING STORY.
"YOUNG DAYS" GUILD WORK.
PUZZLES AND PUZZLERS.
THE NEW YEAR. Poem by Margaret Chadwick.

PRICE ONE PENNY MONTHLY.
Annual Subscription, by post, one copy, 1s. 6d.

Published by
THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Fcap. 8vo, 64 pages, cloth, gilt edges with ribbon, 1s. net; paper covers, 3d. net (postage 1d.).

For those who Mourn.

Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved.

Edited by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

For Freedom and Right.

Booklet in Case: Readings, Prayers, Hymns for Men on Active Service.
Price 6*d.* net.
Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK, 1917.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.
Roan, gilt edges, 1*s.* 6*d.* net; by post, 1*s.* 7*d.*

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1917.

Price 1*s.* net; by post, 1*s.* 2*d.*

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

14. Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.
21. Lieut.-Col., Rev. C. S. BULLOCK.
28. Rev. J. A. PEARSON, Minister of the London District Unitarian Society.

February

4. Rev. W. L. SCHROEDER, M.A., of Halifax.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY ISSUE include

The Meaning of Reconstruction

The Problem of the Partially Disabled Soldier

The Ministry of Labour

An Educational Outlook

The University Woman and the War

America and Reconstruction

The National Income and The War

REVIEWS, &c,

Scholastic and Secretarial Appointments, &c., &c.

Monthly 1s. Annual Subscription 14s., post free.

Published at
"THE ATHENÆUM" OFFICE
Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

An Examination will be held on JANUARY 18 for an

ENFIELD DOWSON ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIP,

value £20, open to the Sons of Ministers. Candidates must be under 14 years of age, Particulars from THE HEAD MASTER. Willaston School, Nantwich.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.

Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead, London, N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, January 14.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, B.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. H. F. SHORT.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. BULLOCK.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. H. SMITH.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. JOHN H. SMITH.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. S. HITCHCOCK, D.D.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. TYSSUL DAVIS, B.A.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. H. TAYLOR.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. RUDOLF DAVIS, B.A.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. V. MILLS.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

BIRTH.

JARVIS.—On January 7, at 31 Weld Road, Birkdale, the wife of Capt. W. B. Jarvis, 4th Leicestershire Regiment, of a son.

MARRIAGE.

MERCER-DIXON.—On Monday, January 8, at Market Place Unitarian Chapel, Kendal, by Rev. H V. Mills, late of Kendal, assisted by Rev. Helen Phillips, of Carlisle, Annie Dixon, of Carlisle, to Rev. C. E. Mercer, Minister of Market Place Chapel.

DEATHS.

ELSE.—On January 7, at Bournemouth, Eliza, widow of Alfred Else of Bournemouth, formerly of Leicester.

WOOLLEY.—On the 3rd inst., at Fairhill, Kersal, Manchester, Jane Ann, second daughter of the late James Woolley, aged 63.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. D. DAVIS, 32 Windermere Road, Muswell Hill, London, N.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N. W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 15
A QUESTION OF JUDGMENT 17
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . . 18
SIR OLIVER LODGE ON LIFE AND DEATH . 18
WOMEN PATROLS 20
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Possibilities of Peace 21
The Armenian Horror 21
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 22
Lieut.-Colonel Bullock in Leeds . . 22
Hostel and Social Centre at Essex Hall 23
Men and Movements 23
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 24

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE Allied Conference at Rome had about it the secrecy of a great military operation. There was no stage management about it and little to satisfy the curiosity of the journalist. Mr. Lloyd George and M. Briand and the other notable figures suddenly appeared and now they are home again, leaving little for speculation or rumour to feed upon. But the impression has been left upon the public mind that momentous decisions were made and the ties of sympathy and practical agreement among the Allies were strengthened. We can conceive of few things more alarming to the Central Powers than their complete failure to sow dissension among the Allies. On all grounds of human probability the union ought to be weakened by conflicting interests and internal jealousies. That it stands, firm as a rock, is a moral fact the effect of which cannot be lost upon far-seeing minds in Germany. It means that forces are fighting on our side which, in the long run, must paralyse the most powerful military machine. Even when she talks about peace Germany thinks only of her own rights in a world of potential enemies, and because she does so and has no respect for the liberties and ideals of other peoples, her cause is already lost.

THERE is still a good deal of speculation about the motives which lay behind President Wilson's recent Note. One thing we in this country have gained from the discussion, namely a clearer understanding of the sentiments which sway large sections of the population in the United States, especially in the centre and the West, their absorption in their own affairs, their aloofness from the European struggle, and their refusal to support any policy which might destroy the prosperity of business and the comfort of daily life. We have good reason to know and appreciate the very different feeling which prevails in the Eastern States. There the ties created by our common ancestry and a sense of partnership in the same moral and social ideals are much stronger. There too the ennobling memories of the anti-slavery struggle are much more vivid.

* * *

IN this connection the special correspondent of The Times quotes some words of Mr. Roosevelt, giving his view of the reasons why the people of the West responded to the appeal that they should vote for Mr. Wilson in the recent election "because he had kept us out of war and because we were prosperous."

> No sensible man [he writes] wishes to go to war if he can honourably keep out of it; and when to this natural inclination is added the fact that the man is very busy and is puzzled about the issues involved, he is certain to cast his vote on the side that he is told will guarantee peace. Evidently people tend to look at the dreadful crimes committed in Belgium and Armenia, in the sinking of the Lusitania, and in Mexico, as analogous to disasters such as an earthquake or a fire, as properly exciting a discreet sympathy, but not as calling for any action which would jeopardise the comfort and well-being of those not immediately concerned. . . . We are at the moment well off. The cost of living is very high; and the Government is rapidly becoming unable to pay its debts; but business man, farmer, and wage-worker are all profitably busy. Under such circumstances only men of unusual insight and foresight will make a political change because of just concern about future conditions. They did not pay much heed to the forecasts of politicians.

The Times correspondent adds the following comment :—"This is a perfectly fair summary of the conditions and the state of mind that the itinerant analyst finds out here at the present time."

* * *

IN an address in Paris last Sunday M. Maeterlinck made an impassioned appeal to the neutral countries to make an effective protest against the horrors of the deportation of Belgians and French to Germany. After paying a tribute to all that has been accomplished in the way of hospitality and charitable help by Holland, Switzerland, Spain and America, he turned upon them with this tremendous challenge :—

> What is all they have done when weighed in the scale, and what ought to be done if we are to absolve them deep down in our conscience and before history, which will judge them? Suppose, for one instant, that we were in their places—that we Belgians, English French, and Italians had remained neutral in a war between Germany and Russia, and that Switzerland had suffered at Germany's hands the fate reserved for Belgium? What, I ask you, would Paris, Brussels, London have done? Can you imagine the cry of horror, the mighty outburst of indignation, which on one and the same day, in all our capitals, would have shaken the very stones in the streets and caught up Kings and Governments in an overwhelming whirlwind of popular pity and justice? ....Those who commit these crimes are living in your midst, received into your houses, surround you with obsequious yet threatening smiles, shake your hands in our streets, salons, and clubs, grow rich at your expense, sit, perchance, at your table and dare still to treat you on a footing of equality. It is time to make them feel by acts that all this is changed, that they are no longer the equals of any man on this earth, that henceforth, between humanity and them, there is a gulf not to be crossed till after long years of penitence, suffering, and humiliation.

* * *

AT the same meeting M. Vandervelde spoke in similar terms of scathing indignation :—

> A few days ago at Gembloux, the Germans took a man, the father of seven children, whose wife had died the day before. The local authorities implored for delay vainly ; the man was hurried away while the children were weeping around their mother's corpse. Liberty, property, and security are rights denied to those living beneath the German terror, but there still remains one supreme right, which outlives all others, the right to resist oppression. For two years past our masters for the time being have learned to know that Belgium has not abandoned this right. Our workers' last word is that, whatever tortures they may yet have to endure, they will only accept peace with independence and the triumph of justice. We should be unworthy of them if we did not say likewise.

We quote these things because they ought to be as fire in our blood. They should accompany us as a spectre of horror wherever we go. They should make our food bitter in our mouths and turn all our laughter into mourning, until we have done everything that lies in our power to avenge, to liberate and to redeem. Do we even yet realise that we are fighting against some of the grossest forms of wickedness and cruelty that have ever been known on this earth ? Just beneath all this handsome crust of civilisation, just behind our well-padded lives and our smooth religious phrases there is deviltry, gone stark mad, spreading red ruin through the world. Are we yet awake ? Have we taken up the burden which God has appointed for our lot, resolved that we will bear it with a heroism as implacable as His own righteousness, till the captive is set free and Satanic power is cast down into the bottomless pit of shame and defeat ?

* * *

How strange it is to turn from these things to many of our queer little grumblings about discomfort at home. The newspapers are full of letters complaining of the restrictions of the train service and the increase of fares. A stranger to our national habits might conclude that we are really more disturbed about matters of this kind than about the starvation or the massacre of whole populations of innocent people. Of course it is not really so. It is our national habit to be vocal about trivial things which cause us inconvenience, whereas words often fail us or we are ashamed of exposing our feelings in the presence of things which fill the heart with pity and terror. But let us be careful in present circumstances to behave with decency and good manners in presence of a tragedy too horrible for us to understand. We are partners with our friends and allies in everything they suffer, and the happy security of our own land only imposes upon us the duty of a greater dignity of soul.

* * *

IN his presidential address at the meeting of the Classical Association at Leeds Lord Bryce made a strong plea for broad-minded humanism in education. The present conflict, he said, was not "between letters and science, but between a large and philosophical conception of the aims of education and that material, narrow, or even vulgar view which looked only to immediate practical results and confounded pecuniary with educational values." Without contending that the study of the ancients should be imposed upon all, or even on the bulk, of those who remained at school till 18, or even of those who entered a university, he urged that it ought to be retained for that percentage who would draw sufficient mental nourishment and stimulus from the study to make it an effective factor in their intellectual growth and an unceasing spring of enjoyment through the rest of life.

* * *

A NOTEWORTHY plea against over-specialisation in education in the interests of industry has come from Mr. W. L. Hichens, the Chairman of Messrs. Cammell, Laird & Co., and himself an old schoolmaster. Speaking on Tuesday to a conference of headmasters he said that what they wanted to assure themselves when they took a boy into their business was that he had stability and moral strength of character. He submitted that the true function of education was to teach him how to learn and how to live—not how to make a living, which was a very different thing. They were interested, naturally, to know if a boy had an aptitude for languages or mathematics or a mechanical turn of mind ; but it was immaterial to them whether he had acquired this aptitude, say, for languages, through learning Latin and Greek or French and German. What was vital was that he should have a real understanding of the meaning of words and the framework of speech. Never, he continued, had true education been more urgently needed than it was now, when we were face to face with the tremendous problems that war had brought in its train. A want of education, or, worse still, a misguided education, lay at the root of most of our troubles. Strong pressure was being brought to bear to commercialise our education—to make it a paying proposition, to make it subservient to the god of wealth, and thus to convert us into a money-making mob. On which side, he asked, were the forces of education to be found, or were they on the fence ?

* * *

WE are glad to see that under the leadership of Mr. Hodge, the Minister of Labour, there is likely to be an extension of welfare work in our factory system after the war. It seems to be clear to those who have seen the system at work that it has a distinct economic value in the avoidance of friction and slackness ; but our chief interest in it is in the new power it gives to the human factor in industry and the consequent increase of happiness. In a speech at Gorton last Saturday Mr. Hodge said that from reports he had received it appeared that the women who have been appointed as welfare inspectors in munition factories had been uniformly successful. Some of the employers had declared that they will continue the system after the war because they find that it pays. If upon closer examination these opinions are verified, then it must be good for the private employer after the war. It was his intention, as soon as information was collected, to meet representative employers to discuss the problem not only as regards women workers but as regards boys and men as well.

* * *

IT is just two years since the first appeal was issued in our columns for the Belgian Hospital Fund. Since then the Fund has grown in ways of which we had no conception when it was started. We need not recount its really wonderful story, for it is familiar to our readers, but we cannot allow this interesting anniversary to pass without a tribute of admiration and gratitude to Mrs. Bernard Allen on their behalf as well as our own. It requires little imagination to understand the immense amount of labour in organisation and personal service which lies behind the weekly lists and the numerous descriptive articles which have come from her pen. But it is only those who have had the privilege of intimate association with the work and have spent long and happy days with Mrs. Allen in visiting the Belgian Hospitals in France, who really know all that she has done. The work has been a twofold success. It has brought help of a lasting kind just where it was needed, and it has drawn our churches all over the country closer together in a common piece of war service and a common happiness in doing it.

A QUESTION OF JUDGMENT.

THE sentimentalist in religion is usually a person who thinks that difficult situations can be solved by an appeal to emotion. He dethrones judgment in order to exalt pious instincts. He makes his own moral dogma an excuse for turning a blind eye to facts, and snatches at his heart's desire without taking the trouble to unravel the delicate threads of human problems. There is grave danger to Christian standards of righteousness at the present time in the tendency of certain religious people to trust to vague emotional appeals and abstract ideals of virtue, and to overlook the fact that most problems of human duty resolve themselves into doing our best in the circumstances in which we find ourselves. Our chief difficulty consists in deciding what is best, and here we have no infallible guide. The consequences of our actions have to be considered. The drawbacks of rushing forward to snatch at the fulfilment of a noble desire must be weighed. Delay may often be better than action, patient endurance of a hard situation than the acceptance of a quick way of escape. Conscience is not the good man's short-cut to virtue. It intervenes with its divine sanction to give force and effectiveness to right judgment.

Thoughts of this kind have occurred to us several times lately while the hope of peace has been much in the air. There has been danger in some quarters of exploiting the emotional value of the word at the expense of a careful and candid review of all the moral factors in the situation. Few men would confess any liking for peace "at any price," but in their hearts some of them wish that we could somehow patch up the quarrel, and they think, whatever the politicians may say on the matter, that it would be the most Christian thing to do. That way danger lies, danger not only to the military situation but danger also to the integrity of our souls. We have to honour peace so sincerely, that we never become weak sentimentalists about it. Indeed, we may almost go so far as to say that we fall into danger when we make "Peace" our supreme aim at all. Our first, and in a sense our only business, is with righteousness and the fulfilment of our duty, and the guarding of right judgment in a difficult situation, when we are sorely tried by danger and suffering. Peace is the divine touch of quiet happiness which comes to crown right human relations. It is for us to seek for the right human relations even through pain and torment and death. It is not necessarily religious simply to talk about peace, to sing its praises as something holy and blessed and to create an emotional atmosphere in its favour, without any regard to the special circumstances in which we are living. Whether it is right to bend all our efforts to make peace, or with stern resolve to go on with the war till the enemy is beaten, is not a simple matter of right and wrong or of loyalty to Christian ideals. Paradox as it may appear, we believe that we can only be true to the highest demands of pitifulness and charity and further the cause of peace by going on with the war. The whole question must be faced with the utmost conscientiousness, and determined not by pious instinct but by right judgment.

We may illustrate our meaning by referring for a moment to the moral situation in which many of us found ourselves in August, 1914. Was it to be peace? Was it to be war? The problem could not be solved by an appeal to moral dogma or by a simple reference to the court of conscience without any careful study of the facts. We had to realise that we were placed in a situation of immense complexity and that the supreme duty laid upon us was one of right judgment. As rational beings we knew that whichever course we took we should be involved in apparent complicity with evil. The men, who with a full sense of responsibility decided for war, did not do so without counting the cost. They knew the sordid side of war, the cruelty and the pain and the tragic waste of human life, and realising that their action involved some measure of personal responsibility for these things, and hating them in their hearts, they still judged that it was the right thing for them to draw the sword. And the pacifist, if he acted with the rational judgment which entitles him to respect, faced the moral consequences of his action in the same way. He saw that he could only keep the peace by tearing up a treaty and deserting his friends and exposing his country to the risk of horrible outrage, and feeling the shame and dishonour of his own complicity in these things and not trying to blind himself in any way to the fact of his own acceptance of them, he still decided that he must pay the bitter price because in all the existing circumstances, just as they were at that moment, peace was the better course. Our business in August, 1914, was not to confuse ourselves with vague emotional appeals to the beauty of peace or with fierce denunciations of the hatefulness of war, but to keep the cool head and the power of weighing moral values, which are the condition of right judgment.

We need not add many words in order to point out the bearing of this illustration upon our present thoughts and desires. Just as there was no short cut for any man to the decision that this particular war was right or wrong at the beginning, so there is no pleasant instinct inside us, which will save us from the careful labour of judging whether we are right at the present moment, the situation in the world being exactly what it is, to throw our energies into a movement for a quick peace or into a campaign for victory. Either course must involve consequences which all generous and tenderhearted men are anxious to avoid. But, in a world whose salvation must be found in the very heart of tragedy, moral situations are never as simple as we should like them to be. If we try to shuffle off the responsibility of careful and far-seeing judgment we shall soon cease to be the rational servants of God, though the phrases of religion may still linger upon our lips. For ourselves we can only say that we believe without a tremor of misgiving that we shall serve the cause of love and goodness best by taking our part in the campaign for victory. There is here no lust of conquest, no hatred of our enemies. It is the most careful judgment which we can form upon the moral facts of the situation.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

STRANGE, then, nor less than monstrous, might be deemed
The failure, if the Almighty, to this point
Liberal and undistinguishing, should hide
The excellence of moral qualities
From common understanding; leaving truth
And virtue, difficult, abstruse, and dark;
Hard to be won, and only by a few;....
Believe it not:
The primal duties shine aloft—like stars;
The charities that soothe, and heal, and bless,
Are scattered at the feet of Man—like flowers.
The generous inclination, the just rule,
Kind wishes, and good actions, and pure thoughts—
No mystery is here! Here is no boon
For high—yet not for low; for proudly graced—
Yet not for meek of heart. The smoke ascends
To heaven as lightly from the cottage-hearth
As from the haughtiest palace. He whose soul
Ponders this true equality, may walk
The fields of earth with gratitude and hope.

WORDSWORTH.

THEY that love beyond the world, cannot be separated by it. Death cannot kill what never dies. Nor can spirits ever be divided that love and live in the same Divine principle, the root and record of their friendship. If absence be not death, neither is theirs. Death is but crossing the world, as friends do the seas; they live in one another still. For they must needs be present, that love and live in that which is omnipresent. In this Divine glass, they see face to face; and their converse is free, as well as pure. This is the comfort of friends, that though they may be said to die, yet their friendship and society are, in the best sense, ever present, because immortal.

WILLIAM PENN.

O GOD, my God, I am all weakness, but Thou art my Strength; I am ever anew bowed down by any trial, but Thou canst and willest to lift me up. Let me not fail, O God my Strength; let me not be discouraged, O God my Hope. Draw me each day, if it be but a little nearer unto Thee; make me, each day, if it be but a little less unlike Thee; let me do or bear each day something, for love of Thee, whereby I may be fitter for Thee. Let no day pass without my having done something pleasing to Thee. Thus alone would I live, that I may live more unto Thee; thus would I die, longing to love Thee more. AMEN.

SIR OLIVER LODGE ON LIFE AND DEATH.

THIS book, dealing mainly with the question of the reality of life after death, written by a distinguished man of science, and filled with a deep faith in the continued existence of personality beyond the grave, comes at a time when the world is more full of mourning for the dead than in almost any period of history. It is being read with eager interest by thousands. For good or ill it is making an immense impression on many lives. All sorrowing hearts must desire with an intense and eager yearning the confident assurance that their dead are not dead but alive. They are inclined to welcome any kind of proof and to turn in any direction which seems to offer comfort and light.

Sir Oliver Lodge is not merely honoured as a great physicist. He is equally honoured as a man of transparent simplicity and goodness. Even those who knew nothing of him before would feel this guilelessness and beauty of character and a deep faith in spiritual things in the book which he has written. It bears the marks of a great sorrow. It bears the marks also of a joy and confidence deeper than the sorrow.

The book is divided into three parts. The first part is composed mainly of letters from Raymond Lodge, and is the record of a noble and heroic life. It will be read by all with sympathetic admiration and reverence. The third part is called 'Life and Death,' and is mainly philosophical and religious. In the early chapters it is a most valuable and important vindication of the reality of a spiritual conception of life against the doctrines of materialism. Life, mind, consciousness, will, cannot be explained, he contends, in terms of matter and motion. They are for ever different from matter and motion and cannot be resolved into them. "Life is not energy, any more than it is matter, yet it directs energy and thereby controls arrangement of matter."

The value of this part is quite independent of the question whether communications from the dead take place or not. It must be clear to any sympathetic and discerning reader of the book that the author is not, like some so-called spiritualists, essentially a materialist at heart. He is not a man who, having failed utterly to find any hope or faith in the persistence of love through belief in God or through his spiritual perception, resorts to mediums for conviction. I think we may say with confidence that if Sir Oliver were to be compelled to-morrow to admit that the evidence for communication with the dead was inconclusive and unsatisfactory he would still believe firmly in the existence of life after death. His faith does not depend mainly upon these evidences. On the contrary, these evidences gain strength from his faith. Because he believes in the persistence of the soul he sees nothing incredible and absurd in the possibility of communication from the dead. In this we may surely all agree with him. We have no right to start with the assumption that messages from the dead are impossible. There is nothing too wonderful to be true.

The second part of this book is concerned with evidences for such communications. It is mainly the report of various séances with professional mediums in which Sir Oliver or members of his family took part. We are considering here questions of scientific evidence, and what Sir Oliver calls a "healthy scepticism" is the right mood in which to deal with them. We are not challenging his faith in another life, we are not showing any irreverence or want of respect for him in analysing very carefully the evidence adduced

One preliminary remark must be made. Every lawyer knows the importance of cross-examination. However anxious a witness is to tell the truth, his evidence in chief is almost always incomplete and sometimes misleading. There are points which need clearing up; there are omissions or additions or personal point of view which quite unintentionally alter the appearance of the facts. Good cross-examination will often show that even the most genuine witness has not given all the truth.

In these reports we cannot cross-examine. We have to take them exactly as they stand and to believe or disbelieve them. In the case of these reports given by Sir Oliver Lodge there can be no question of disbelief. They are genuine first-hand reports given by a man whose word can be absolutely trusted, but even in his case we cannot help feeling that cross-examination might sometimes throw a different light upon them.

It may be mentioned that Mrs. Kennedy, a friend of Sir Oliver's, is generally responsible for taking down shorthand notes at the time.

It is interesting to find Sir Oliver himself throwing some doubt on the complete accuracy of these notes in one case when the medium Peters had stated Raymond had won prizes in athletics, which was not true. Sir Oliver says: "Possibly some confusion in record here, or else wrong."

It is, of course, impossible to deal with all the evidence adduced. The two first reports are the only ones to which we will refer.

Raymond Lodge was killed at Ypres on September 14. In the beginning of September Sir Oliver received a message purporting to have come from Richard Hodgson through Mrs. Piper, a well-known American medium, and received by her on August 8: "Myers says you take the part of the poet and he will act as Faunus." In this cryptic utterance Sir Oliver sees a reference to Horace, 'Odes,' II. xvii. 27, in which the poet describes how he was saved from being killed by a falling tree through the intervention of Faunus. We may admit that this passage is what the medium or her disembodied "control" had in mind.

---

Raymond; or Life after Death: by Sir Oliver Lodge. London: Methuen, 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

It is an utterance suspiciously like those of the famous Delphi oracle, capable of fitting many different circumstances and being interpreted in various ways. The natural meaning is, calamity threatens you but Myers will save you from it. If Raymond Lodge had been exposed to great dangers and had escaped from them, it would have been in agreement with that. If he had been dangerously wounded and had recovered, it would have been in agreement with that. It suggests escape from death through the intervention of a higher unseen power. The last thing it suggests is that Raymond Lodge is going to be killed. However, in the light of subsequent events this is the meaning which Sir Oliver gives to it. "Your son is going to be killed, and I will take care of him and will lighten the blow by making you aware of his continued existence." This is not an impossible interpretation, but it is not the most natural one. There are two remarks which force themselves on the critical mind. If this is the message of a dead friend wishing to substantiate his reality, why this elusive vagueness which would fit in with any possible event? If he can remember and refer to that passage of Horace and get the word "Faunus" through, why cannot he say plainly and simply, "Your son is going to be killed; I will take care of him and help him to communicate with you"? The difficulty for the dead of communicating what they mean is always insisted on by mediums, but it is very hard for the outsider to see any conceivable reason why it should be easier for the dead to remember clearly an ode of Horace and refer to it than to say simply your son is going to be killed. On the other hand, there is excellent reason why a medium, or a sibyl who does not know the future, should wrap her vaticinations in words susceptible of many interpretations.

The other remark is that if this is a communication from the dead it proves more than their existence: it means that the dead are aware not only of the past and present but of the future. Sir Oliver Lodge sees this difficulty and refers to it elsewhere. He says "Prognostication can hardly be part of the evidence for survival." This difficulty cannot be dealt with further now. It is sufficient to say that if this message came from the dead and meant what it is taken to mean, it suggests that Mr. Myers was able to foresee the exact position of Raymond Lodge on September 14, and that a German shell would kill him on that day. It is the complete destruction of any belief in contingency and free will.

The only other evidence we can discuss is that of the group photograph which Sir Oliver Lodge describes as "rather exceptionally good as a piece of evidence."

On September 27 a medium named Peters said to Lady Lodge: "You have several portraits of this boy. Before he went away you had got a good portrait of him—two—no, three. Two where he is alone and one where he is in a group of other men." Sir Oliver comments on this: "We had single photographs of him of course and in uniform, but we did not know of a photograph in which he was one of a group." On the face of it this medium's statement is incorrect. He says: "Before he went away" you had two single photographs and one in a group. We are not told if it is correct that the family had only two single photographs of him; it seems improbable that they had not more, but they certainly had not a photograph of him in a group before he went away, as the medium stated that they had. On November 29 they hear of a group photograph which Mrs. Cheves, the mother of an officer, promises to send them. They write and thank her for the offer and say they will be delighted to have it, "but fortunately it did not come at once." On December 3, before the photograph had come, Sir Oliver Lodge had a sitting with another medium, Mrs. Leonard. At that sitting he asks his son Raymond, through Mrs. Leonard, to give him some evidential details as to the photograph. The replies, of course, are as usual very vague and elusive. "He has the impression of about a dozen in it. A dozen, he says, if not more." As a fact there are twenty-one in it. "He was sitting down." "He remembers that some one wanted to lean on him, but he is not sure if he was taken with some one leaning on him. But somebody wanted to lean on him," he remembers. Was it out of doors? "Yes, practically. At the back he shows me lines going down. It looks like a black background with lines at the back of them." ("Feda," the supposed control, "has kept drawing vertical lines in the air.") The photograph came on December 7. Raymond is sitting on the grass in a front row with four others. Seven in the second row are on chairs; nine in the back row are standing up against a shed with lines visible on the roof. Like the others in the front row, he is sitting close up against those behind him. The hand of the man behind him is resting affectionately on his shoulder. He is the only one who is being touched in this way. Sir Oliver prints the photograph in the book and to him it suggests that the man behind is leaning upon Raymond. I see nothing but a hand lightly laid upon his shoulder.

The hypothesis that this description was a guess of the medium, whether in a trance or wide awake, must, of course, be considered. What is a medium to do under such circumstances? These photographs of officers nearly always consist of half sitting down and half standing up. They are nearly always taken out of doors and with some kind of background of a shed or trees or palisade or tents. Any of these backgrounds would have given vertical lines. The men are usually close to one another, so that the idea of pressure or leaning might easily be conveyed. There is great caution about this. The medium only says: "He remembers that some one wanted to lean on him, but he is not sure if he was taken with some one leaning on him." How was it that Raymond Lodge was so deeply impressed with the vertical lines when, during the time he was sitting and being photographed, he had his back to them? Why cannot he give the name of one friend who was in the group? He is asked for it in vain. All the medium or he can do is to say: "Somebody called C. was in it with him, and somebody called R. and he says something about K. He also mentions a name beginning with B." There were officers in the twenty figures with names beginning with B., C., R.: no one beginning with K. If only one name could have come through we should have had something in the shape of evidence. We are told that the memory of the dead is so imperfect. It is certainly strangely uncertain. Myers can remember an Ode of Horace and refer to Faunus after having been dead many years: Raymond Lodge cannot remember the name of one friend after a few weeks' separation.

Sir Oliver claims that the evidence is cumulative, and that there are many other stories of the same type. The result of reading a number of such stories is, on many minds, to make them more sceptical. They all have the same character of vague elusiveness when evidence is asked for, and at the same time great readiness to talk at any length about things non-evidential. We are told that some men ask for cigars and even whisky and soda after death and can obtain some sort of likeness to them which soon palls. We are told that at first they are dressed as they were on earth but afterwards walk about in white flowing garments. We are told they are very busy and very happy and many other things. Sir Oliver, of course, does not claim such descriptions as evidential. He rather deprecates attaching much importance to them and suggests they may have been influenced by the medium or the control. But it is this glaring contrast in all the stories between the ease of communication when no evidence is required, and the cryptic character of the words and phrases when proof is in question, that emerges more and more clearly in the cumulative evidence.

The great danger of this book is that at the present time so many may resort to mediums. Sir Oliver does not advise it, but the mediums do. There is a striking little sentence at one sitting: "They try to get to their mothers and they can't—they are shut out....They say, why don't they all go to mediums?" It is to be feared there may be a great revival of the trade in crystal-gazing, palmistry, and all the various forms of attempting to communicate with the dead. It would not be just to say that fraud and deception are at the basis of it all, but Sir Oliver knows as well as any that there is fraud and deception often mixed up with these things. No doubt, in the case of many mediums there is a curious abnormal condition of trance which demands further investigation.

But those who are in deep sorrow are the last people fit for such investigation. It would be so easy for us to leap to conclusions. We should feel a kind of irreverence in doubting what purported to come from the dead. Our critical faculty in such moments of deep emotion and in such possibilities of intercourse would be in abeyance.

The evidence adduced by Sir Oliver and the impression it is making call for a searching and thorough examination of the professional medium. It is most desirable that there should be a committee of inquirers who should take immediate action. On such a committee there ought to be trained psychologists, medical men, barristers, and business men. It is to be doubted whether physicists or chemists or biologists, however eminent, are most suitable for such investigation. Nature is infinitely wonderful, but it plays no tricks. It is those who know human nature in its abnormal as well as in its normal condition who are most fitted to observe and to weigh the evidence. There is no reason to treat the mediums with anything but respect, but the whole subject needs the most careful examination. Until this is done it would be well for most of us to suspend judgment. Superstition and credulity are besetting dangers at a time like this. Whatever the result of such investigations faith in God and faith in love as eternal do not depend on them. Such faith has its source in the deep places of the soul and reveals to us the eternal nature of life and love.

HENRY GOW.

WOMEN PATROLS.

AMONG the various developments of women's work during the war few are more remarkable, though many are more widely known, than that of the women patrols. In the early autumn of 1914 wild rumours were flying about of the widespread evil results among young women and girls of the general upheaval caused by the war. Careful investigation showed that much of this was gross exaggeration, insulting alike to the majority of our soldiers and to their girl friends, but that a very real danger did already exist, which would increase as time went on, was clear to those who were among the leaders in social work. After much careful thought the National Union of Women Workers laid before the Home Secretary and the Commissioner of Police a proposal for the employment of Women Patrols in the neighbourhood of camps and in the streets frequented by soldiers, either in training or home on leave. The scheme was cordially approved; the Metropolitan Chief Constable agreed to sign a card for each worker authorising her to act as a patrol for the N.U.W.W., and desiring the Police to render her any necessary assistance, and the Home Secretary circularised the chief constables throughout England asking them to do the same. With this official sanction, strengthened by the support of Lord Kitchener, the work started in November, 1914; since then 3,074 patrols have been registered in England and Wales, and similar work is being carried on in Scotland and Ireland.

The work is always done in couples and on the beat assigned to them; it is the duty of the women patrols to watch what goes on, to speak to any girl who seems to be in danger, or who, by a kindly word of advice as to her behaviour might be prevented from drifting into difficulties, and in general to become known as the friends of men and girls alike. To every one it must be apparent that this is most difficult work, needing unfailing tact and discretion, sympathy and love, courage and the promptness of action born of experience, and a firm grasp of the aims and ideals of patrol-work. A power of endurance is needed, too, for oftentimes the work is unpleasant, dull and dreary, when nights are bad and cold and nothing exciting happens to make it seem really of value. But from all quarters comes strong evidence of the importance the authorities, both civil and military, attach to this work and their high appreciation of the way in which it is carried on. In spite of its difficuities there are no complaints as to the actions of patrols, a striking testimony to the careful and searching selection made from the candidates, and the thoroughness of the training given to those chosen. The full training, for which there is now a college at Bristol, is a three months' course. The first month includes police-court attendance, patrolling with already trained women, report writing, instruction in the rudiments of Criminal Law, drill, &c. During the second month the Bristol Civic League supplies practical experience of investigation of cases, domiciliary visiting, &c., with insight into the duties and powers of Local Authorities and voluntary organisations and into the home and social conditions of those among whom the work is to be done; and in the third month experience is gained in other towns. Such a full training is not yet possible for all, but it shows something of the scope of the work and of the knowledge required. At any time a patrol may be required to confirm her action of the previous night by supporting the constable at the police-court in the morning, and in one large town, out of twenty-eight cases where patrols had given evidence, twenty-six convictions were obtained, a strong proof of the wisdom and caution that had been shown. Without the constant help of the police the work would, of course, be practically impossible, but the advantage is mutual, and constables have several times expressed the opinion that women patrols have come "to stay." "We cannot do without them now," said one sergeant, and so thought a chief constable in the North, when he sent round to complain that for three weeks the behaviour of the girls in certain streets had been getting bad again, the patrols having been withdrawn from the district. They were at once replaced and improvement followed.

But, after all, preventive work and passing friendly advice and caution are rather negative, and merely to suggest to a girl that she should not hang about the streets is of little use when perhaps the house-door is locked and all the family out, or there is no place for her to sit; and in many cases she wants, and is quite justified in wanting to meet her boy-friends. The Patrol Clubs then became a necessity: large, bright, well-warmed places where a girl can have her fun and enjoyment in a healthy atmosphere instead of in the street; such a place near by enables a patrol to say to a girl: "The street is very dark and unpleasant, do go a little way down and see what a bright and warm club there is that you can go into." There are now about sixty-eight of these clubs, dotted about in various towns and in the neighbourhood of camps. Many of them are mixed clubs, where a girl may bring her soldier-friend, and these are specially valuable, though, of course, in some ways more difficult to manage. Everywhere a kindly reception has been given to the patrols by the military authorities; commanding officers have asked that they may be sent to the neighbourhood of their camps, and one appealed for a mixed club to be started. The soldiers themselves welcome the movement, one man expressing the hope that someone was looking after his sisters in the same way, while another, referring to the dark and cold, said "They cannot like it, but it's splendid work and much needed."

Recently the women patrols in London have been employed directly by the Police authorities; in the summer of 1916 the Chief Commissioner asked for a band of trained workers to visit and report on three hundred cinemas, the work to be paid for out of the police funds. The investigation was carried out and a report made to him. In July he applied again for patrols "to assist the police" in Hyde Park during the afternoon and evening, the work to be paid for at the usual police-rate. This work went on through the summer, the method being as follows. The patrols reported at the police station and a constable was told off to each pair. The three walked quietly along the paths and over the grass, speaking, when necessary, to the couples, the constable always taking the initiative. Generally the friendly hint as to the behaviour was well received, but if trouble followed or the offence was serious the couple were taken to the police station, the woman walking with the patrols. Here would be a golden opportunity for a woman's influence of which the patrols would take full advantage, with the result that many a girl went home sadder but with her heart full of gratitude to the women who had saved her from worse sorrow. In October, this work was transferred to the crowded districts near some of the large stations, and is still being carried on.

This most important development makes us realise that, although it was begun as a war-measure, patrolling by women is not in its essence war-work. The problems of Hyde Park, Waterloo Road, the Strand and Piccadilly are no war-problems, as social workers have realised and urged for years the vital importance of the employment of women in the streets, not as voluntary rescue and preventive workers, but as officials with the authority of the law behind them. The need is not for women to take over the duties already in the hands of the policeman, but to undertake the work among the women which the man cannot, and knows that he cannot do, and which at present is left largely undone. Now we have, throughout the country, trained and educated women gaining a wide experience of the under-life of our large cities, and a knowledge of the details of that night life of which formerly they were supposed to remain in happy ignorance. By the end of the war there will have accumulated a mass of most valuable information, well-founded and well sifted, on which it should be possible to base new legislation of a broader, saner and fairer type than the present laws, and if we can see that out of all the present evil this good may come in the future, then we may all of us join in the heartfelt gratitude of the soldier home on leave, who exclaimed fervently—"Thank God for the Women Patrols." EMMA G. DRUMMOND.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF PEACE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I cannot but think that the Christmas manifesto of the "small group of ministers" might well have provoked somewhat deeper "searchings of heart" than it seems at present to have occasioned.

What degree of truth there is in your own inferences as to the probable views of the signatories on the general question of the origin and the issues of the war I cannot say. But for my own part I have no sympathy with any attempt to represent the blame for the war, or for the turpitudes that have been added to its horrors, as lying six at one door and half-a-dozen at the other. I believe the Allies are upholding the cause of civilisation, and even with the world in ruins about us I am as far from advocating "peace at any price" as I am from desiring "war on any pretext." Moreover, I am convinced that the ranks of our five million volunteers could not have been filled even approximately had not a wave of moral enthusiasm swept the land, and had there not been a firm conviction that we were "entering the war with clean hands" and a chivalrous intention of "coming out of it with empty ones." These are the high ideals of which we are the trustees. We must neither lower them by pharisaic professions and mere barristerial "points," nor blur them by confusing them with other issues, nor profane them by allowing them to act as a cloak to unworthy passions. May I say a few words on each of these three dangers?

1. Far be it from me to belittle the principle of "the sanctity of treaties," but is it not at once pharisaical and unworthily technical to harp so insistently on Germany's violation of Belgium's treaty rights? Pharisaical: For which of the allies—certainly neither England nor Russia—has a clean enough record in the matter of observing and maintaining treaty rights to be entitled to throw the first stone? And technical: Because it seems to make Germany's action an illegality rather than an outrage. Many of your readers will remember the account given by Gilbert Murray in his introduction to 'The Trojan Women' of how the Athenians massacred the men of Melos and sold their women and children into slavery because they, the Melians, persisted in maintaining a neutrality which was inconvenient to Athens. Can anyone who reads the story feel that the guilt of Athens is perceptibly lightened by the absence of any express promise on her part that, just to the Melians, she would not do this kind of thing?

2. We are proud to think that genuine moral indignation was not only a cause but a determining cause of the backing our Governments have had from our people in this war. But our diplomatists, supported, I suppose, by the bulk of popular opinion, and for very obvious reasons, did not want Germany to be established on the Belgian coast, however innocently she might have got there. Germany gave us a good moral case for attempting to thwart her. How many Englishmen, in their hearts, thank her for it? But be that as it may, where the moral consideration directly and explicitly coincides with our national interests (as in the demand for the evacuation of Belgium), or stands on its own independent ground, unsupported by any other consideration (as in the symbolic demand for such poor "compensation" and "restoration" as can be expressed in coin) I have noticed that many of the most earnest, I had almost said desperate, advocates of "peace by negotiation, at the earliest possible moment" are uncompromising in their determination to support the war till these objects are secured.

3. Lastly, there is the constant danger, relentlessly pursuing us, not only in public but also in personal relations, of allowing the mere desire for victory (at best) and the desire to punish, to humiliate, and to crush our opponent (at worst) to mask as zeal for the vindication of the moral law. Is not the very most and best that we can hope from the exhibition of military force that it may convince Germany (and the world) once for all that no vast scheme of aggressive national ambition can, at our present stage of development, be realised by war? Those who look below official bravado and rhetoric, and especially to the temper of the actual combatants, appear to believe that this conviction has already been driven home. If this is so, can adding bitterness to conviction be anything but an evil? I draw no parallel between the German Zeppelin raids and our own "blockade." Our steady refusal, in so many cases, to retaliate is a matter for deep thankfulness. But is it not possible that there may be objects of legitimate desire that may yet not be worth gaining by driving millions of German women and children to the verge of starvation, and we know not how many thousands over it? Might not terms fixed by negotiation leave less rancour on the one side and compunction on the other than intrinsically "better" terms dictated to a starving and broken foe? I know that many good men and women think the exact opposite. I can not. I am not afraid of our being misunderstood if we allow such hopes to weigh with us. I have never admired men who lower either their intellectual or their moral standards for fear of being too good for the world. Nor do I shrink from sharing with the five ministers the reproach of being barren in suggestion. For I have long found clarity and guidance in an early essay of Auguste Comte's on the 'Distinction between desires and opinions." The forming of right general desires and the insistence on a true scale of values is what we must all aim at to the measure of our powers. Only so can such "moral wisdom" as the democracy has attained to, guide and support the "political insight," and closer knowledge of the passing combinations and opportunities, of the statesmen to whom we entrust the realisation of our wishes and the embodiment of our ideals.—Yours, &c. PHILIP H. WICKSTEED.

Childrey, January 4, 1917.

THE ARMENIAN HORROR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—On December 14 a summary was published in the press of the newly issued Blue Book on the recent Armenian massacres. For this careful statement of the evidence we are indebted to Viscount Bryce and Mr. Arnold Toynbee, and in an editorial upon the subject a leading London paper said: "The documents form one long catalogue of horrors for which hardly any parallel can be found either in ancient or modern history." The public mind is so satiated with horrors at the present time, and its knowledge of recent events in Armenia and of their connection with the war is so small, that there is little wonder that a tragedy so apparently remote should have made, hitherto, but a slight impression. The Committee of the Armenian Refugees (Lord Mayor's) Fund desires that there should be a widespread knowledge of the terrible contents of this volume, so that the public may no longer be left in ignorance of a series of events, almost incredible in their ferocious savagery. We earnestly invite our statesmen, and the clergy and ministers of all the Churches, to make themselves acquainted with the contents of the Blue Book ('The Treatment of Armenians in the Ottoman Empire, 1915-16,' with a preface by Viscount Bryce. Hodder & Stoughton, price 3*s.*).

To the statesmen must be left the political implications of this latest Armenian tragedy. We appeal to the clergy, and to the philanthropic public generally, to assist us to obtain further financial help for the relief of the remnant of the earliest Christian nation, who have escaped into territory now under Russian control. Money is needed to feed, clothe, and repatriate these Refugees, to maintain orphanages, rebuild houses and churches, and provide materials for restarting life in the liberated areas. We take this opportunity, also, of pointing out that though the Fund was specially organised for Armenian relief, we have given assistance also to Syrians and, in certain cases, to Mohammedans who were in need of help.

Contributions should be sent to the Hon. Treasurer (Lieut.-Col. Gregory), Armenian Refugees (Lord Mayor's) Fund, 96 Victoria Street, London, S.W.

On behalf of the Committee,
W. H. DUNN (Lord Mayor), President.
ANEURIN WILLIAMS, Chairman.
HAROLD BUXTON, Hon. Secretary.
London.
January, 1917.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

104th LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged 15,757	15	1
Mrs. du Vallon (eleventh donation)	4	0	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (ninth donation)	1	18	7
Mr. Thos. Ballantyne ..	1	1	0
Miss M. B. Lamb (ninth donation)	2	0	0
X. (twenty-third donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. Herbert Roberts	0	5	0
Miss M. E. Swaine (twenty-second donation)	2	0	0
The Misses Pearse (sixth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Green (tenth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Gladys Green	0	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wilson (ninth donation)	5	0	0
Miss Hargrove (second donation)	1	1	0
Miss E. A. Lemann (fourth donation)	5	0	0
K. L. (sixth donation) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. William Kenrick (tenth donation)	10	0	0
Mr. George Banks (twenty-fourth monthly donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. George Webb (seventh donation)	5	0	0
The Leytonstone Congregation, per Mr. J. W. Peterken (third donation)	1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Goadby, Cairo (fifth donation) ..	5	0	0
Z. A. (fifteenth monthly) ..	10	0	0
Mrs. Dendy (twelfth donation)	1	0	0
S. S. D. (eighth donation) ..	5	0	0
Mrs. Suffield (sixth donation)	2	0	0
Mr. Walter Coventry (third donation)	0	10	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (fourteenth monthly donation)	1	0	0
£15,829	16	8

Parcels have been received from: Ullet Road Church Sewing Circle, Liverpool (per Mrs. J. C. Odgers); Mrs. Helsby; "In Memory" (per Miss E. Potter); Anon.; Miss Winkworth; West Grove Women's League, Cardiff (per Mrs. Fox); Miss Swaine; Miss Catherine Scott; Mrs. Jellie; Mr. and Mrs. Birkett Crowe; The Misses Pearse; Miss Mary B. Lamb; Unitarian Church, Southport, Sewing Circle (per Mrs. Harris); Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. Davis) Hendon Women's War Relief Committee (per Mrs. Hunt Cooke); Hampstead War Hospital Supply Depot; High Pavement, Nottingham, Sewing Meeting (per Miss Guilford); Mrs. Babington; Miss Corfield; Mrs. Hanna; Mrs. Walker; Miss Hervey; Miss Lee; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas).

WEEKLY NOTES.

THE wooden hut for the little boys at Wisques, of which I wrote a fortnight ago, is being erected already. It is costing £100. The Director is very happy to think these children will soon have a dry schoolroom, instead of learning their lessons in the wash-house in an atmosphere of steam!

In a letter from a convalescent camp, I have the following appeal for suits of civilian clothes: "At the present time we have none, and the poor men who are sent off discharged clamour piteously for them. The army should arrange to fit out each man going on congé sans solde with civilian clothes, but they do not, though there is hope they may do so later on. In the meantime they all come to us very piteously begging for civilian garments."

I have also received these requests myself and have generally been able to grant them—but just now I have no suits at all in stock.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Pyjamas, vests, pants.
Slippers, shirts, socks.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens.
Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais.

Layettes (on Belgian methods).
Women's chemises.
Bed jackets (in pale colours if possible).

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

LIEUT.-COLONEL BULLOCK IN LEEDS.

LARGE congregations assembled last Sunday at Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, to hear Lieut.-Col. Bullock, minister of Ottawa Unitarian Church.

In his morning sermon, Col. Bullock said that there was a seeming incongruity in a minister of the Gospel of Peace standing in a pulpit in panoply of war, especially when his task in battle was not merely, say, to attend to the wounded. It did not, however, seem so strange in his adopted country, for so he must speak of Canada—he being a Yankee of the Yankees, with every drop of blood in his Yankee body, his ancestors having crossed the Atlantic in 1634, and generation after generation since born on American soil—for him to be a combatant officer, a man who preached the sacredness of life going out, apparently, to destroy life, as it did to some in England. Being of American birth, he was sometimes asked for an explanation of how he came to be in the British Army. Well, he might reply by telling the story of an Irishman newly landed in the United States who, walking along the streets of New York, looked in through the doors of a saloon, saw a fracas, and asked: "Is this a family quarrel, or may any one join in?" Seriously, however, that story had some application to the present conflict, for it was not merely a quarrel in the European family, not even a war between nations, but a struggle between two eternal and antagonistic principles, and on the triumph of the right one rested the future of all civilisation. While the Gospel of Jesus was a Gospel of Peace, it tended to produce men and women who were content to make a temporary sacrifice of peace to procure its lasting future. Unless they were willing to consent to the withdrawal of Christianity from all the questions that pertained to men and women, they must consent to enter into the war and stand for the right. Had Jesus gone along the road which the Good Samaritan trod, and come on it while the man was being beaten by the thieves, he thought the story would have been different. Had he come into the little town of Nazareth while a mob was destroying the carpenter's shop, he would have stood up in defence of his father's property. Had he gone into Judea, and found his mother and sisters being attacked by men who had broken into the country, he would have defended them to the last drop of his blood.

Continuing, Col. Bullock said that he hated war. He loved peace, the smile of the babe, the green fields, the singing of the birds, the nodding of the trees, and yet there were some things better than peace, and some more awful than war. Better a war which produced manhood than a peace in which manhood faded and died. He did not intend, at first, to enter into the combatant ranks, and then he thought it was not right for him to ask another man to do what he was not quite ready to do himself, to ask people to go out to meet the possibility of death, unless he were prepared to go himself. With regard to the attitude of America, he did not ask that they should have plunged into the war, though one of the things that had influenced his decision was the sinking of the Lusitania, but he did say that, after that and similar outrages, the American President should not merely have sent Notes, thus earning for his country the title of "the land of the fountain-pen and the typewriter," but should have cut off all diplomatic and commercial intercourse with a Power that would not observe the decencies of international relations. When his former country refused that, he furled its flag, that its folds should never again be kissed by the sun until atonement was made for abominable outrage.

Turning from this particular question to religion in general, the preacher said that the religion of yesterday would not satisfy to-morrow. The Church of the Ages must readjust itself to the needs of the age. The Church that would do most for the world would be most supported by the world. The Church that cured the lame man had the healed man for its testimony. Magnificent work had been done by the Red Cross Society, on whose behalf the collection was to be taken that morning, but men and women not connected with that body had thrown themselves into work right and left. No people he had met were so buoyed up by enthusiasm as the women he saw every day going to the hospitals in London, to do what they had never done before, peeling potatoes, washing-up pots and the like, some of them starting before the omnibuses had begun to run, and walking four or five miles in the early morning in order to be there in time to give a thirsty man a drink of tea. There were, of course, many other instances, and all this self-abnegation deserved equal praise. That spirit would live on after the war. The Church that allowed itself to be the channel through which that spirit flowed would be the Church of the future.

They had raised such a civilisation as the world had never seen, and yet, over against their churches, they had erected jails and workhouses. Hell was not in being there, but rather in being here. Wherever there was a wicked mind, there was hell. The flag of peace could never float over a State which rebelled against God. Life was an end in itself, and not a means to the future. God was not more interested in the happiness of some other sphere than in that of this one. Too long had the Church frowned upon their smiles, and it must learn the lesson of the cheery optimism which "Tommy" carried with him. He loved to hear his "boys" sing:—

The bells of hell go ting-a-ling, a-ling,
For you, but not for me.
For me the angels sing-a-ling, a-ling,
They have the goods for me.

O death where is thy sting-a-ling, a-ling,
O grave, thy victoree?
The bells of hell go ting-a-ling, a-ling,
For you, but not for me.

INTERVIEW WITH COLONEL BULLOCK.

The following interview with Col. Bullock appeared in The Leeds Mercury on Monday:—

The most interesting personality in Leeds during the past week-end has been the Canadian "Fighting Parson," Lieut.-Col. Bullock, who in ordinary times is minister at the Ottawa Unitarian Church, and who, on Sunday, addressed large congregations in Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds.

In the course of an interview with a representative of The Leeds Mercury, the gallant officer chatted pleasantly on war problems and on the attitude of Canadians and Americans to the great struggle.

Replying to the suggestion that he obviously did not share the view of those who hold that, though it may be lawful, it is not expedient for a minister of the Gospel to fight, Lieut.-Col. Bullock said: "No! I hate war. I hate battlefields strewn with dead bodies, and stained with blood. But I hate treachery and injustice and tyranny more than I hate war, and I felt I could not ask men to enlist, and face the possibility of death, unless I were prepared to do the same myself."

Asked if he would care to express any opinion as to the attitude of America, Col. Bullock said it would not seem fitting for him to enter into a discussion on international relations, but, as a former American, he wished that the President would cease his Note-writing, and refrain from "butting-in" with his endeavours to bring about a premature peace.

"Are we in this country correct in thinking that the majority of Americans favour the Allies' cause?" asked our representative. "Undoubtedly correct, and my correspondence tells me that that view is spreading. Americans recognise more and more that this is not a war between nations, but between two eternally antagonistic principles."

Questioned as to recruiting in Canada, the Colonel said that it continued to be satisfactory. The new method of recruiting men direct for the Service, instead of for particular battalions, was slower in its immediate results, but likely to be more satisfactory in the long run. He did not think that Conscription would be necessary, but if it were the present Premier would not hesitate to do whatever was required for the best interests of the Empire. He knew that the people of Canada were pledged to give the last men, if necessary, to ensure a satisfactory finish. Canadians in London, he added, would regard with disfavour any settlement that did not fulfil the intentions with which the Allies entered the war. Moreover, the living owed some debt, which must be paid, to the dead, for their sacrifices. His correspondence with Canada showed the same feeling there; a satisfactory peace must be secured, no matter what the cost, and a premature peace would be dear at any price.

Discussing some of the "After the War" problems, Col. Bullock remarked that Prohibition had made considerable progress in Canada since the war started, and with such good effect that he did not think that the people would ever consider a return to the old system. Here, too, the same held good south of the Border.

They were expecting a considerable accession of emigration to Canada after the war, particularly from men who would not be content to return to the old life in office, shop, or factory. That was an attitude which the British Government would have to consider and deal with very carefully.

Nearly every Provincial Government was making special arrangements for settling returned soldiers on the land, and the Dominion Government was following on the same lines, as were the Railroad and Transport Corporations. Some of the advantages, especially those offered by the last-named, would be open to soldiers from all parts of the Empire.

The Colonel added that he was not in favour of sending a large number of war-widows to Canada, as they would find it very difficult to live there on a small pension, and they could not very well supplement it by working, as the labour-market for women was well stocked. The only openings were on the land and in domestic service, including under that heading employment in hotels and restaurants.

HOSTEL AND SOCIAL CENTRE AT ESSEX HALL.

Mr. R. M. Montgomery, Treasurer of the Hostel and Social Centre Fund, acknowledges with sincere thanks additional contributions as follows: Mr. E. Focke, £5; Mrs. William Kenrick, £5; Mrs. Kirke, £2 2*s*. Mr. J. W. H. Smith, Sheffield, has generously undertaken to provide six bedsteads with mattresses for the Hostel. Perhaps his example may inspire some others to provide the pillows, bed-linen, and blankets for the six bedrooms!

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

We are busy preparing a special number for the Soldiers, Sailors, and Airmen from our churches and Sunday Schools. It will be sent to them as a message of friendship on March 3. We are anxious to give as full particulars as we can of distinctions gained by our own men. Will ministers, parents and other readers send particulars on a post-card to the Editor, 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, London, N.W., giving name, regiment and rank.

The special number will contain many attractive features. We shall be glad to receive any incidents or stories described in a few lines which strike any reader as good enough to be included.

Lieut. H. D. Roberts writes to us this week: "I am picking up railhead experience in 'warm' corners." He asks us to inform his friends that his new address is

c o. D.A.D.R.T. II.,
A.P.O.A.D. 2,
B.E.F. France.

We leave our readers to solve the conundrum for themselves!

We are very glad to hear that Capt. Richard Roscoe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Roscoe of Hampstead, who owes his rapid promotion to his fine gift for soldiering, has been awarded the Military Cross for distinguished valour.

Another very familiar name comes in for special mention in Sir Douglas Haig's recent despatch. Major Cecil Crosskey is a son of the late Dr. Crosskey, for many years the honoured minister of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. Major Crosskey is closely connected with the congregation and with the social life of the city.

The Church of the Messiah has a further reason for pride in the recent award of the Military Cross to Temp. Lieut. Sayer, son of Alderman Sayer, and a teacher in the Sunday school at the outbreak of the war.

The 'Essex Hall Year Book' has appeared in its usual form, despite the difficulties which surround paper and printing in war-time. It is replete with information, and is edited with the business care and the attention to detail which we expect from Mr. Bowie. The names of four ministers appear for the first time, two layworkers have qualified as full ministers, eight ministers have died, and seven others for various reasons have been omitted. This shows a slight shrinkage, but it must be remembered that there is the unusually large number of seventy-four aged and retired ministers on the list.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Astley.—At the annual prizegiving in connection with the Sunday school which was held at the Unitarian Chapel on January 6, forty prizes were distributed to scholars for regular attendance. A dramatic performance was also given, and carols were sung.

Altrincham.—The Rev. E. I. Fripp, B.A., of Leicester, has accepted an invitation to the pulpit of Dunham Road Chapel in succession to the Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A.

Birmingham : Old Meeting Church.—The following statement appears on the front page of the Old Meeting Church Calendar:—The Old Meeting Church is unfettered by dogmas, creeds, formularies or ritual of any kind. In its constitution it is absolutely independent of sectarian ties and dogmatic limitations. No creed is imposed on either Minister or Members. It is recognised that, while among earnest seekers after Truth there must needs be wide diversities of opinion, these may coexist with a true unity of spirit. Membership of the Church is open alike to men of all theological schools, and the Church stands now, as through all its long history, for perfect intellectual liberty, looking to its Members for the inspiration of personal piety. The assured heritage of the past is reverently and gratefully accepted, but changes in the order of worship are made from time to time as the need for fresh adjustments to Life and Thought is felt. In the spirit of Jesus Christ the members freely join in the worship of God and the service of Man. The sympathy and support of all who value a progressive faith and an unfettered religious communion will be cordially welcomed. It is frequently said that the people attending places of worship are allowed repeatedly to come and go without being greeted by any sign of friendliness. We earnestly desire that there should not be any ground for such complaint against this Congregation. The position however is more difficult than is usually realised; for it is not always possible to distinguish and approach those who would like to be welcomed, and there are some visitors who definitely prefer to worship unrecognised and unnoticed. We wish, however, to assure all of our eagerness to receive them in a hospitable spirit of good-will. Any who desire to make friends amongst those who attend our Services, or wish to join the open fellowship of our undogmatic Church, may leave their names and addresses with the sidesmen or wardens, or write to the minister.

Birmingham.—On Sunday, December 31, special collections were taken at the Church of the Messiah on behalf of the Red Cross Society, and realised over £96.

Dundee.—A Christmas Sale and Social in connection with the Free Religious Movement was held on December 23. The opening ceremony was performed by Mr. William Honeyman, of Cupar, Fife, Mr. Alex. Anderson presiding, and a sum of £35 was raised. The meetings of the Hibbert Journal Club during the past session have all been extremely interesting, and in spite of the conditions which make it difficult just now to hold successful meetings at night, there has been an average attendance of forty. Among the lecturers for the next two months is Mr. Fred Maddison, who will speak on 'Conscription and Protection.' A course of evening addresses dealing with the question 'Did Jesus Live?' is announced for February. In connection with these lectures Dr. Carpenter, of Manchester College, has sent an interesting letter to the minister, the Rev. H. Dawtrey, on the historical reality of Jesus, which is published in the January calendar.

Lewes.—The congregation of Westgate Chapel gave a New Year's party to fifty wounded men from The Shelleys and School-hill House in the Chapel Hall on Wednesday evening, January 3. After tea a most enjoyable programme of music, games and other items was gone through, under the direction of Mr. C. Severs. In the course of the evening the Rev. J. M. Connell expressed the pleasure it gave his people and himself to entertain the men, and the hope that the New Year would bring peace and the complete triumph of the cause for which the men had risked and suffered so much.

Liverpool : Ullet Road Church.—On Sunday morning, January 7, a Confirmation Service was again held in the Church, and was conducted by the Revs. J. C. Odgers and H. Taylor. Twelve young men and women were confirmed. This service was a fitting sequel to attendance at a special Confirmation class conducted since the beginning of October by Mr. Taylor. All those confirmed took part in the Communion Service which followed the Confirmation. The service seems to have been in accord with a felt want. Its object was to emphasise the call of the Church to the individual, to remind young people of the need of self-government as they became more and more conscious of life's duties and responsibilities, to accentuate their discipleship to Christ, and to offer them a warm welcome into fellowship with the congregation. Each of those confirmed received a copy of 'Echoes of Holy Thoughts' as a memento of the service.

THE FEEDING OF CHILDREN IN WAR-TIME.

'The Feeding of Children in War-Time,' by Mr. Charles Hecht, reprinted from The Child, is issued by the National Food Reform Association as a pamphlet. It should be extremely useful to those who are concerned with the dietary in schools, hospitals, canteens, hostels, and other institutions, whether for children or adults, and who are striving to adjust it to existing conditions so as to combine economy with undiminished, if not increased, efficiency. The leaflet will be found equally valuable by parents and guardians, Health Visitors, and social workers. It can be obtained from the offices of the Association, 178 St. Stephen's House, Westminster, post free 2½*d.*

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, MISS E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BURGESS HILL, SUSSEX.—FURNISHED COTTAGE.—Seven rooms; garden; twenty minutes Station. Plate; linen. Inside sanitation. Any period.—B., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. CANN & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

LADIES' HANDKERCHIEF SALE. Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Fine quality. Size 13½ in. Bundle of six, 3*s.* 3*d.* (postage 2½*d.*). Send postcard to-day for the Sale Catalogue, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

COLEMAN'S R.T.B. Renowned Temperance Beverage.

THE IDEAL HEALTH DRINK. THE NEW INVIGORATOR.

A Delightful, Exhilarating, Non-Alcoholic Beverage.

Contains the principal ingredient used in the manufacture of Sanatogen.

The use of alcohol is terribly seductive, especially to those who fly to the sideboard for little sips of alcohol because they are intensely miserable. The greatest want of the age has been a satisfying non-alcoholic beverage, and at last we have it in Coleman's R.T.B.

Are you willing to Test it? Strongly recommended by Doctors and the Clergy.

It will refresh you. You can drink Coleman's R.T.B. with cold or hot water, or any kind of mineral water. A bottle at 1*s.* 9*d.* (a Champagne Quart) will make 25 half-pints, which make the cost of the drinks less than a penny each. It is a powerful nerve stimulant, but has no after depressing effect like alcohol. It exhilarates, invigorates, and stimulates. It stops the craving for spirits. It is a magnificent tonic for those who are 'run down' and not feeling quite well. The more you drink the better you are. It can be given to children with advantage.

TO SPENCER, LAYTON & CO., BRUNDALL, near NORWICH.
Kindly send me a sample of Coleman's R.T.B. I enclose 6*d.* for postage packing herewith. SEND THIS FORM.

Name .....

Address .....

Sold in bottles at 1*s.* and 1*s.* 9*d.* per bottle.

AGENTS WANTED. INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, January 13, 1917.
* Regarding Advertisement Rates see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3890. NEW SERIES, No. 993.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

At the Annual General Meeting to be held on Tuesday, February 13, 1917, the Contributors will have to elect three Managers in place of Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke and Messrs. T. Oliver Lee and G. J. Notcutt, who retire by rotation, and are eligible for re-election.

Any Contributor may be nominated by two other Contributors to fill a vacancy on the Board of Management. Such nominations must be sent to me before FEBRUARY 1, 1917.

W. H. DRUMMOND, Acting Secretary.
23 Cannon Place, Hampstead,
London, N.W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Fcap. 8vo, 64 pages, cloth, gilt edges with ribbon, 1s. net; paper covers, 3d. net (postage 1d.).

For those who Mourn.

Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved.

Edited by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

For Freedom and Right.

Booklet in Case: Readings, Prayers, Hymns for Men on Active Service.

Price 6*d.* net.

Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK, 1917.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.

Roan, gilt edges, 1*s.* 6*d.* net; by post, 1*s.* 7*d.*

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1917.

Price 1*s.* net; by post, 1*s.* 2*d.*

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

21. Lieut.-Col, Rev. C. S. BULLOCK.

28. Rev. J. A. PEARSON, Minister of the London District Unitarian Society.

February

4. Rev. W. L. SCHROEDER, M.A., of Halifax.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY ISSUE include

The Meaning of Reconstruction

The Problem of the Partially Disabled Soldier

The Ministry of Labour

An Educational Outlook

The University Woman and the War

America and Reconstruction

The National Income and The War

REVIEWS, &c.

Scholastic and Secretarial Appointments, &c., &c.

Monthly 1s. Annual Subscription 14s., post free.

Published at

"THE ATHENÆUM" OFFICE
Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon. Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation. Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead, London, N.W

Crown 8vo 216 pp. 2s. 6d. net.

ETHICAL & RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS OF THE WAR.

Addresses by Prof. GILBERT MURRAY, Sir HENRY JONES, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, Prof. J. H. MUIRHEAD, Dr. P. H. WICKSTEED, Principal L. P. JACKS, and others.

Edited by Dr. J. E. CARPENTER.

"The general value of this little book, beyond the particular merit of its constituent parts, is that it comes from the Extreme Left in English Thought, both in politics and religion."—The Spectator.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, January 21.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, B.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. W. STEPHENS.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSEN; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 6.30, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Mr. E. CAPLETON.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. H. O. MONTAGUE.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Lieut.-Col. Rev. C. S. BULLOCK.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. COLEMAN.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. H. TAYLOR; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6, Rev. J. W. LEE.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATHS.

CARLIER.—On Wednesday, Jan. 10, suddenly, Christian Carlier, wife of Egbert Carlier, of Lewisham, but in charge of Deptford Chapel. Deeply lamented.

HARROP.—On Jan. 15, at Chapel Hill, Dukinfield, Ann Elizabeth Harrop, in her 83rd year.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. D. DAVIS, 32 Windermere Road, Muswell Hill, London, N.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 27
THE CHURCHES AND AFTER-WAR PROBLEMS 29
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 30
A HOME FOR BELGIAN REFUGEES IN FRANCE 30
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Possibilities of Peace 31
Sir Oliver Lodge on Life and Death . 32
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 32
Yorkshire Unitarian Union 33
Letters from our Sailors and Soldiers . 33
Sheffield District Association of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches . . . 34
Men and Movements 34
MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
Miss Woolley 35
Mrs. Carlier 35
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 35

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE Reply of the Allies to President Wilson's Note was published too late for any comment to appear in our columns last week. It is the most important diplomatic document since the beginning of the war, as firm in purpose as it is admirable in tone. There is nothing even in its phrasing which can jar upon the most sensitive American nerves, and from all accounts it has made an excellent impression on the other side of the Atlantic. The outbreak of heady anger against it in Germany is a tribute to its strength, and to the fear which it inspires. Germany's "holy wrath" is a confession before the world that she cannot argue about peace on the basis of respect for liberty and justice and the rights of other peoples.

* * *

THE Note declares that it is impossible to-day to bring about a peace "that shall permit the establishment upon firm foundations of the future of the nations of Europe." After throwing the whole responsibility for the war upon "the aggressive will of Germany and Austria to ensure their mastery over Europe and their economic domination over the world," the Note makes the following reply to Mr. Wilson's desire that we should define, in the full light of day, our aims in prosecuting the war :—

> The Allies find no difficulty in answering this request. Their war aims are well known ; they have been repeatedly defined by the heads of their various Governments. These war aims will only be set forth in detail, with all the compensations and equitable indemnities for harm suffered, at the moment of negotiation. But the civilised world knows that they imply necessarily and first of all, the restoration of Belgium, Serbia, and Montenegro, with the compensations due to them ; the evacuation of the invaded territories in France, in Russia, in Rumania, with just reparation ; the reorganisation of Europe, guaranteed by a stable regime and based at once on respect for nationalities and on the right to full security and liberty of economic development possessed by all peoples, small and great, and at the same time upon territorial conventions and international settlements such as to guarantee land and sea frontiers against unjustified attack ; the restitution of provinces formerly torn from the Allies by force or against the wish of their inhabitants ; the liberation of the Italians, as also of the Slavs, Rumanes, and Czecho-Slovaks from foreign domination ; the setting free of the populations subject to the bloody tyranny of the Turks ; and the turning out of Europe of the Ottoman Empire as decidedly foreign to Western civilisation.

* * *

THE foregoing is the crucial passage of the Note. It is upon this bold and open confession of the rights of nationality that the Allies take their stand ; and it is round these aims, as the fortunes of war enable us to reduce them to practical shape, that the grave political discussions of the near future must turn. At the same time it will be observed with lively satisfaction that the Allies give an unqualified support to the international ideals, still vague in outline but inspired by strong humanitarian feeling, which have won a large measure of support among the American people. "They associate themselves whole-heartedly with the plan of creating a League of the Nations to ensure peace and justice throughout the world. They recognise all the advantages that would accrue to the cause of humanity and civilisation by the establishment of international settlements designed to avoid violent conflicts between the nations—settlements which ought to be attended by the sanctions necessary to assure their execution, and thus to prevent fresh aggressions from being made easier by an apparent security."

* * *

MR. BALFOUR, as Foreign Secretary, has sent an open letter to our Ambassador at Washington, which may be read as a commentary upon the Allied Note from the British point of view. His treatment of the problem of Turkey is particularly valuable at a time when some people even in our own country are inclined to treat it as "no proper or logical part of the general scheme." Why, Mr. Balfour asks, should the cause of peace be associated with a complete reversal of our traditional policy towards the Turkish Empire ?

> The answer [he writes] is that circumstances have completely changed. ....Under German officers Turkish soldiers are now fighting in lands from which they had long been expelled, and a Turkish Government controlled, subsidised, and supported by Germany, has been guilty of massacres in Armenia and Syria more horrible than any recorded in the history even of those unhappy countries. Evidently the interests of peace and the claims of nationality alike require that Turkish rule over alien races shall, if possible, be brought to an end, and we may hope that the expulsion of Turkey from Europe will contribute as much to the cause of peace as the restoration of Alsace Lorraine to France, of Italia Irredenta to Italy, or any of the other territorial changes indicated in the Allied Note.

* * *

THE speech of the Prime Minister at the Guildhall last week contained no momentous disclosures. It simply repeated in impassioned language the aims which are familiar to us all, and pleaded for all the money that can be spared from the necessaries of life in order to bring the war to a victorious end. "Let no money be squandered in luxury and indulgences which can be put into the fight. It counts, every penny of it." "The more we get the surer the victory. The more we get the shorter the war. The more we get the less it will cost in treasure, and the greatest treasure of all is brave blood. The more we get the more you will be enriched by your contributions, by your sacrifices of extravagance. I want to bring this home to every man and woman. This extravagance during the war has cost blood, valiant blood, the blood of heroes. It will be worth millions to save one of them." This is the sort of language which we can all understand. It goes straight to the heart. We hope that there is a multitude of men and women who will give their money just for the country's sake, in order to save brave blood, and not because the new loan is a sound investment. We know that it is the business of the Government to get the money they need as quickly as possible; but we wish that it had not been necessary for the Chancellor of the Exchequer to assure us that any one who invests in the Loan will get better terms than have ever been possible in the past or than he will ever get in the future. Patriotism at a safe 5 per cent is not a very heroic virtue.

* * *

ONE other feature of Mr. Lloyd George's speech we cannot pass over without a word of comment. He spoke very hopefully of the prospects of the country after the war. He is convinced that the stock-taking of the national resources and the discipline of the national character, which have been forced upon us, will leave us a happier and more efficient people.

> I do not know [he said] what the National Debt will be at the end of this war. But I will make a prediction. Whatever it is, what is added in real assets to the real riches of the nation will be infinitely greater than any debt would ever acquire. The resources of the nation in every direction are being developed and directed. The nation itself, disciplined, braced up, quickened, has become a more alert people. We have thrown off the useless tissues. We are a nation that has been taking exercise. We are a different people.

This is a very different picture from the prophecies of misery and reaction and a terrible labour-war, of which we hear in some quarters; but it agrees in its broad outlines with what we have heard from other good observers, who base their anticipations not upon a priori arguments of what always happens after a big war, but upon intimate knowledge of the resources of modern industry when they are controlled with skill and good temper.

* * *

WE print to-day a further instalment of letters which we have received on the recent plea of five ministers for a speedy peace by negotiation. For the moment the whole question has been wiped off the slate. But for ourselves it never had even a faint tinge of reality, because we could not discover any evidence of the existence of the elementary moral agreements without which any attempt at negotiation would be ignoble trifling. The discussion seems to reveal a fundamental difference of temperament in presence of the decisive moral conflicts of the world. There are apparently some people who dread a victory and would despise themselves if they took any pleasure in it. If only the war could end in compromise, and both sides come out of it heartily ashamed of having taken any part in such a dirty business, they would perhaps feel some mild satisfaction. For ourselves such an end would have about it the humiliation of defeat. We want victory. We work for it, and we pray for it. We long to hear the joy-bells ringing all over the world for the victory of freedom and right. In saying this we believe that we are obeying the deep call of religion and the noblest instincts of our blood. We are not ashamed of the proud memories of Trafalgar. We do not wish that we had settled with Napoleon instead of beating him at Waterloo. Or, if we are suspected of some unfair partiality for our Englishmen, let us remember that one of Lincoln's highest claims to our veneration is his refusal to temporize upon a clear moral issue or to enter into negotiations of peace with men who treated slavery as an open question.

* * *

SPEAKING of Lincoln it is well for us to remember that the noble passage about "a just and lasting peace," which has become very familiar to us apart from its context, is no plea for mildness or hesitation in the prosecution of a righteous war. It marks his stern resolve not to think of peace until victory had crowned his arms. Let us venture to place it in its proper setting.

> Fondly do we hope—fervently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said: "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations.

* * *

THE Social Union connected with the Fitzwilliam Street Unitarian Church, Huddersfield, of which the Rev. R. A. Dickson is minister, is to be congratulated on its enterprise in inviting Lord Haldane to deliver an address on 'The Future of the Nation' last week. Lord Haldane, who said that he came among them as a preacher of the gospel of education, made a powerful plea for an educated democracy. Education, he said, was the great leveller. While they could not have flourishing industry without a great deal more science, the development of the human mind, of the human spirit, was an end in itself which solved every problem. In an ignorant democracy vast reservoirs of talent lay wasted. The cause of education, the elevation of education, and the bringing out of democracy what was latent in it was to him the most sacred cause, from the point of view of pure nationalism. With knowledge there came an idealism which lifted people above the difficulties of everyday life, and delivered them from squalor and misery which could no longer be tolerated when indifference had given place to zeal. For this reason the root of the whole social problem lay in the education question—education in its widest sense.

* * *

IT is with special pleasure that we print to-day a small selection of the replies received to the New Year greeting which was sent from Essex Hall to the men of our churches and Sunday schools, who are serving in the forces. They are typical of hundreds of others. In their simplicity and friendliness, and their happiness in being remembered, they give us a heartening vision of good men doing their best and finding the secret of courage and cheerfulness in their religion.

THE CHURCHES AND AFTER-WAR PROBLEMS.

WE notice a tendency in some quarters to speak of after-war problems as though they were the chief concern of the churches at the present moment. Conferences are being summoned to discuss them, and speakers vie with one another in evoking every type of emotion from high hope to severe depression as they gaze into the unknown. In all this, religion is once again showing its preference for the future tense. The present may be dark, but the future is bright with hope. Vague expectations take the place of urgent duties, and Christianity itself is something about to be instead of the power of God in the soul here and now. We do not despise the far horizons which beckon us forward to adventures more marvellous than we have ever known; nor do we deny that foresight is a large part of practical wisdom. But there are days in a man's life when every moment is crowded with duty, when personal suffering and loss rain stinging blows upon his head, and all his need is for strength to trust in God and to fight on bravely, be the future what it may. To such a man, and he is representative of all that is noblest and most faithful in the nation in this critical hour, after-war problems are not a matter of first importance. What he asks of his Church is the straight, clear, heartening word, which will make him a better soldier in the great campaign, whether in the army abroad or in civilian life at home. What he needs is not so much the vision of a new heaven and a new earth, as the sense of God's presence and protecting power in his heart while he pays the price of faithfulness to the last farthing.

The future with which the churches ought to be chiefly concerned just now is the remaining weeks and months of this year 1917. It is going to be a testing time of faith and endurance and self-denial and brotherly kindness more severe than any of us have dared to picture to ourselves. The deposit of faith in the churches and the vital religion in our own hearts have got to arm us against weakening fears, and sentimental dreams of peace divorced from the victories of righteousness, and the temptation to lose heart, to which even good men may yield when they see their friends falling around them and their own homes threatened with disaster and gaunt poverty stalking through the land. What is needed is a tremendous concentration of spiritual energy upon our task. It needs our prayers as well as our money, the spiritual qualities which lie closest to the heart of Christ as well as the discipline of the camp. The service that is asked of us is that of a complete manhood, and everything that ennobles manhood makes the service more efficient and the hope of deliverance more secure.

But what of the future and its problems? Are these to be left to look after themselves? If the people who study after-war problems find in this pursuit some excuse for their own withdrawal from sterner tasks, or imagine that from a point of vantage "above the battle" they can discern the dangers that beset their fellows in the dust and heat of the struggle, we can only express our belief that their labour is entirely vain. It is not they, but the others, who are creating the future and safeguarding its interests. The best laid schemes of the neutral mind are of small account when the precious things of life can only be saved by the blood of sacrifice. Our highest service to the future, and perhaps under present circumstances the only service that is of sterling value, is to see to it that we bring our present duty to a clear and decisive end, counting not the cost to ourselves if only we leave the generations that come after us the noble memory of men who never faltered in their day of trial.

And for the rest, we can open our own hearts and all the common channels of our religious life to the cleansing and renewal of days unsurpassed in their glory and terror in the history of the world. It will be our humiliation and defeat if the churches settle down quietly into the old grooves, and go on in the coming days with the same faults and the same limited outlook as they did before. But whatever changes appear before the world must first take place in our own hearts. And here the Holy Spirit is already at work. Amid much that has been discouraging in the failure of the churches to get out of deep ruts of habit at a time when all their strength was needed to kindle and inspire and unite, hidden forces have been at work of which we are conscious in our own lives. Every Church or denomination carries with it the memories of ancient controversies. The fires are rekindled, the battles are fought over again long after most people have ceased to take any interest in them. They fill our religious assemblies with their dissonant cries. They weaken our common witness for God, and divide human hearts which ought to be united in devotion to the weightier matters of justice, mercy and faith. We cannot argue these things out of existence. A larger interest must come in to displace them. It is this strange and illuminating experience which has happened to us. We see that many of the things about which we once disputed are really dead. We are being slowly forced back from insistence upon our own point of view into a new and deeper care for the things which really matter for human souls. And at the same time we are being filled with a richer power of human fellowship. Not only do the duties and sufferings which we all share make us more tolerant of one another; they reveal qualities of heart and mind, which we never took the trouble to admire before, because the men who possess them are not of our fashion. Days of stress hallow old ties and open the door wide to new friendships. The prejudice, the pettiness of mind, the party antagonisms, the critical temper which once kept good men apart lose their power when the big issues of the world are faced together.

We dwell on these unseen but far-reaching influences, because more than any fresh schemes of work or good resolutions of amending our too lukewarm Christianity they appear to us to be the things that really matter. Our schemes will possibly never bear fruit, and we have made innumerable good resolutions before. But here are forces of the Spirit called into activity by the stress of the hour, which will change the world for us if we do not resist them. They are setting our duties in a new light. They are filling our lives with a sense of untried opportunity. They are making us better men. The future depends not upon the plans which we make for it, but upon the living forces of character which we bring to the service of its needs. Never before have the churches had such a signal opportunity of showing that they know how to be schools of great character. It is by their power of making men large-hearted and brave for the duties of this present time, be the future what it may, that they will be judged, and against this judgment of worth, tested on many a field of goodness and valour, there can be no appeal.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

In the corrupted currents of this world
Offence's gilded hand may shove-by justice;
And oft 'tis seen the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: but 'tis not so above;
There is no shuffling,—there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: what can it not?
Yet what can it when one can not repent?
O wretched state! O bosom black as death!
O limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd! Help, angels! Make assay:
Bow, stubborn knees; and, heart with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe!
All may be well.

'Hamlet.'

He who sets before him, as in a picture, this vast image of our mother Nature in her entire majesty; who reads in her aspect such universal and continual variety; who discerns himself therein, and not himself only but a whole kingdom, to be but a most delicate dot,—he alone esteems things according to the just measure of their greatness.

Montaigne.

Almighty God, who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves, keep us both outwardly in our bodies and inwardly in our souls, that we may be defended from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from all evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul. Amen.

A HOME FOR BELGIAN REFUGEES IN FRANCE.

During my recent visit to France, I spent two most interesting days at a Carthusian Monastery, in which, before the expulsion of the monks, no woman had set her foot. The institution now within its walls is one of the finest examples of organisation which Belgium has to show since her exile.

During the battle of the Yser, the population from the extreme Front fled back into the villages behind the lines, which rapidly became seriously overcrowded. When it is remembered that the army also was billeted in these villages, and that the hygienic arrangements were never very highly organised, it was not surprising that infectious diseases, and especially typhoid fever, soon became a serious problem. The army doctors did their best, but from all points of view the situation was extremely grave. There was danger to the efficiency of the army from these crowds of civilians—the danger to the health of the civilians themselves was sufficiently obvious.

But directly the worst of the battle was over, M. Berryer set himself to reorganise the sanitary service, and a large hospital at St. Idesbald was opened for the typhoid cases among the civilians. The number of patients was so great that the next step was to provide a hospital in the rear, to which patients could be sent, as soon as they were fit to travel, for the long convalescence necessary. There were also, in the military hospitals, a considerable number of civilians, wounded during the bombardments, and it was impossible to keep them there after they had received the first attentions necessary for their wounds.

La Chartreuse de Neuville, in the valley of the Canche, was discovered by Dr. Rulot, who was appointed to the work by M. Berryer. Facing full south, on high ground, and large enough to take five or six hundred patients, it seemed to be a suitable building, and the grounds and gardens attached offered scope for extensions in the future. The French Government consented to allow the buildings to be used for this purpose, and from March to May, 1915, the patients arrived in a steady flow. One hundred beds were set aside for soldiers recovering from typhoid fever—all the rest were for civilians.

With many of these patients came their aged and dependent parents—or their little children. In their state of misery, it would have been a piece of cruelty, of which the kind-hearted officials would have been quite incapable, to separate these families. Many of the old people were helpless and even bedridden; it was not possible to board them out in French families, as was done in the case of most refugees. La Chartreuse became not only a hospital but a civilian hospice. All these varieties of cases gathered under one roof presented a very difficult problem, and all agree that the fact that difficulties were got over and dangers diverted is largely due to the devotion of the sisters of charity who looked after the household arrangements, nursed the sick, and cared for the moral and spiritual needs of their patients.

The present Director, Dr. Jonlet, besides being a physician of great repute before the war, is one of the best organisers I have ever met. My first knowledge of the work he was doing dates from January, 1916, when he came to visit me in London to see if the Belgian Hospital Fund could help him to give better beds to the children under his care. We sent out one hundred children's beds at once to replace the wooden planks, which were all the beds that any of the civilians had at that time. In March, 1916, I paid my first visit to La Chartreuse, and saw for myself its vast organisation. I was bewildered by the extent of the building and the cold, dark cloisters, and all the human misery I saw. In the old days each of the Carthusian Fathers had his four-roomed house with his own little garden. Now, in each room, there were three or four of those wooden "beds," with a poor sick old woman in each. At first sight one's feeling was what wretched old creatures they were, how unattractive, how dirty. But fortunately, outward appearance is not everything, and one remembered that these were the mothers of sons, perhaps of heroes, and in their helplessness and old age they had a right to gentle services and as much comfort as circumstances would permit. Many of them were reduced almost to a state of imbecility by the horrors they had seen. So these houses of the "fathers" practically take the place of what we might call the workhouse infirmary.

After that visit funds permitted us to send out fifty more beds for the adults to replace the worst of the wooden beds. Subsequently, last summer, we sent one hundred and fifty more, and applied to the King Albert's Hospital Fund on behalf of these old people, with the result that they sent the remaining one hundred and fifty—and now everybody has a good iron bedstead and suitable bed clothes.

In the "cells" formerly occupied by the brothers, the women and girls suffering from tuberculosis are housed. This seemed to me one of the saddest sights on my first visit. The rooms were stuffy and cheerless, the beds very uncomfortable, and the patients sad and depressed. Last week these wards were some of the brightest and most cheerful. All had learned to keep their windows open, and there were two girls in each cell, in comfortable beds with pretty coverlets, and each pair had decorated their own room as they pleased, and very pretty and bright they were. All doors were open to the corridor, where were good stoves, and the sisters passing constantly to and fro to supply all needs. Dr. Jonlet, who took me round, had a word for each, and knew their names and histories. They all responded so eagerly, and it was clear that just to have a word from him was a happiness for them. One felt everywhere his personal influence, and though a perfect martinet when there was any question of lack of cleanliness or hygiene, he was yet always willing to hear the reason, and to suggest means of meeting the difficulties which led to the fault. The old men were in wards in what was formerly the printing office. Those who were well enough to be up were sitting round the stoves, gossiping, and perhaps smoking or playing some simple card game, as happy and contented as their sad circumstances and bitter memories would permit.

But the really delightful spot was the children's side. There were many little patients in the early days—some typhoid convalescents, some wounded. These children gradually recovered, and became perfectly fit to continue their studies, and accordingly the Minister of the Interior sanctioned the building of huts for a school. These buildings are nearly finished and already partly occupied. They are sufficiently removed from the main building to keep the children quite to themselves. The huts are painted gaily in green and white stripes, and a nice playground is being prepared. Their dormitories with their new beds and pretty coverlets were very clean and tidy. Dr. Jonlet never ceases to preach the doctrine of scrupulous cleanliness to them, and woe betide the child who tries to escape washing thoroughly and brushing his teeth!

Some of the convalescent men are now engaged in installing baths and lavatories for them on a very simple but thoroughly hygienic principle. The school work is inspected by the representative of the Minister of Education from time to time, and though the children are naturally rather behindhand with their work, they are now making up for lost time. Even in the sick wards a bright-faced sister was beginning to teach a little—going from bed to bed, and giving each child the little tasks which they were able to perform without fatigue.

One other department was of great interest to me—the maternity wards and the crèche. It is only the unmarried mothers who are sent here, as the married women are received elsewhere. The character of the girls is studied, and help given just where needed. In the case of a first fall, all kindness is shown; the young mother is encouraged to be proud of her child, and is taught to care for it, to prepare its food, to make its clothes. She is kept for some months, under good influences, and then either employed in the institution, or sent to a carefully selected home in a district where she can make a fresh start.

To bridge the gap between crèche and school is a colonie scolaire on the seashore, not far off, where are one hundred little ones from 3 to 7 years old. I have described this before in the pages of THE INQUIRER, but the special pleasure of this visit was to see the little ones wearing the good and pretty clothes sent them by the London school children, and to see the pride they take in them.

To return to La Chartreuse and to its household arrangements. There is a good laundry, kitchens where food for both invalids and convalescents is prepared, workrooms where the mending and making of clothes is done, a "saboterie" where sabots are made for children and adults; a cobbler's shop, a laundry, a bakery, and many other workshops for the necessary work of so large an establishment. The fruit and vegetable gardens, which had quite gone out of cultivation, are being well worked now, and a farm has just been hired where cows are kept, where pigs are fattened, and where potatoes (of which the hospital requires 100 tons a year) are grown. Each section has its own dining room, which also serves as the sitting room; and besides there is a large recreation room called the Salle Berryer (in honour of the Minister of the Interior) where one of the staff has installed a cinema which he bought himself, and where performances are given twice a week—once for the soldiers and men, and once for the women and children. I saw the whole community together on Sunday morning at mass in the beautiful chapel of the monastery. It was a pathetic sight to see so many wrecks of lives together, but for the moment their hearts were uplifted together in the act of worship, for the Flemish peasants are very devout. They form a little community of exiles in a strange land, and no one who has not watched the process of building it up can have any idea of the amount of hard work and organising ability necessary to produce the result that one sees to-day. It is a great pleasure to feel that our Fund has had a share in this fine piece of work. In a report issued by the Director he gives us almost more than our share of praise, and I know that he sets a real value on the sympathy and interest our Fund has always shown to this institution.

ROSE ALLEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF PEACE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have just received copies of THE INQUIRER of December 23 and 30, 1916, but I trust I am not too late for practical comment upon the manifesto of five ministers upon 'The Possibility of Peace.' Your own comments of the 23rd are most pertinently to the point, and I cordially agree with the letter of the Rev. R. B. Drummond in your issue of the 30th. Mr. Shone's suggestions are couched in a broad spirit, but an admirable sentence of his puts entirely out of count the immediate possibility of his well-intentioned proposal for a World Conference: "For any nation might well be proud to concede to the general good that which it would never yield to the threat of force." Does Mr. Shone really think that Germany (in my opinion the real instigator of this war, and I surmise in Mr. Shone's opinion also) would accept any adverse decision? If not, his Conference would be futile; and again in his own eloquent terms, because "the peace settlement must be a part of the new era of justice, and not of the old evil era of force." For what sane man can possibly associate Germany with "a new era of justice"? In bluntest language, the bully, whether of the individual or of the national order, needs an unquestionable lesson. At present, he might well say he had received no such lesson. His own magnanimity and his new-found pacifism alone urged him to head the new "League for the Enforcement of Peace after the War"!

All this may appear brutally irreligious to the five signatories of the manifesto for peace; and I expect that it certainly will be designated as the natural outburst of a confirmed pagan. Let me hasten to add, however, that if my estimate be not found far wide of the mark, I shall deem myself happy, for I have not a single shred of sympathy with the religion of five ministers who, from a de haut en bas point of view, can be blind to the inequalities and fundamental differences, say, for conciseness' sake, between French and German ideals of justice.

Sir Roland Wilson, in your columns, has clearly stated the position in regard to the triumphantly trumpeted test question of the five respecting Russia and Constantinople. I confess to a thrill of satisfaction on hearing that a Russian statesman had explicitly announced the desires of his country in the matter of Constantinople; for then I was certain that Russia would not bow down to the German idol. The main difference between us poor mortals and the five ministers lies in the prosaic fact that we feel bound to start with world-conditions as they stand and as they have been made by the German-provoked war, and not with the conditions of the void Land of Nowhere.

And let me say this in answer to their merciless accentuation of the present distress of our world-home, and of "our mothers and sisters," that the men of the British Empire willingly give their lives as the necessary sacrifice for human liberties. No man is enamoured of the conditions out here; not a man but would gladly welcome the end of this human devastation; but it must be ended so that no such hell shall ever again rage rampant. I give a simple illustration. Three men this very evening messed together over a simple dinner. One told the other two that he was about to write in order to confute some acquaintances of his who were talking of the present possibility of peace, with reliance upon German good-will. "What do you say?" he asked them. "Tell your friends," replied one, "that I have a brother whose hair has turned grey in the conflict; another lies hard hit in hospital; another is a prisoner in Germany." "Ah!" replied the interlocutor, "I don't think that will carry any weight." "Well, then," was the earnest return, "tell them this: that I am carrying on here until Germany is beaten, so that my little baby two months old, whom I kissed and left just a fortnight ago, shall never go through this same devilish business." That answer seemed more pertinent. Do the five realise that this man and millions of other men are giving themselves to die, in order that the children of the five shall not experience the same hellishness in their day? Realise, too, the scene of the conversation: a railhead within sound and sight and reach of a terrific bombardment; the father of the babe (whom he had just seen on his last leave), a Canadian, who may be in the very thick of shells to-morrow; the other a man who lately took to himself a wife, and was taken as a husband by a brave woman, an Englishman given his commission for daring dispatch riding on the very edge of yawning disaster. The guns roar; the house shakes; the sky is aflame; not one of the three fails to recognise that the slightest deviation in the sight or angle of a single gun will complete the tale of his years on this earth, his home, and the home of his loved ones.

Do the five think this is gone through for love of a game? Or that men of peace such as I myself have been assumed to be have become mad? I can only repeat a conversation held in a train from the North with the Secretary of the Peace Society. Had I changed in my peace views? Changed in my views? I disliked and detested militarism before; now I loathe and hate it. One of my bitterest charges against Germany is that the German greed of domination drove me to any form of soldiering whatsoever. Had I changed in my advocacy of peace measures? Not in the slightest degree. If, as a British citizen, I have a voice in the world-settlement, and even as a soldier I shall claim the right, it will but emphasise, with the emphasis acquired by the expenditure of £5,000,000 a day by my own country alone on war, exactly what I said when lecturing under the auspices of the Liverpool District Missionary Association, the substance of which appeared on various occasions in the columns of THE INQUIRER. And I know men who, however personally disinclined to discount my earnestness, were still in doubt about the possibility of my plans. Their doubts are now resolved. Nor do they stand isolated: the whole civilised world is with them.

Before the war I was fully alive to the untoward and wrecking part taken by the representatives of Germany at the Hague Conferences; but I did not impute to them any very evil aims. To-day, on the other hand, we all know that had these representatives assented to the most elementary proposals, it would have been impossible for Germany to make one fell swoop on France without a flagrant violation of her solemn compact. Further, one remembers that to Russia's eternal honour it was her Czar who put the Hague Conference in being. Most Englishmen in this third year of war recognise that Germany is the world-criminal; and in the name of all that is good I personally claim that she confess her sins before God and men. She chose the judgment of arms: by arms she shall be judged. A "peace," with Germany considering herself as an equal, means a generation of suspicions, huge standing armies and a retrograde world.—Yours, &c.,

H. D. ROBERTS, Lieut.

France. January 11, 1917.

[We have had to omit part of Lieut. Roberts's letter owing to pressure on our space.—Editor of INQUIRER.]

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you permit me, as one about to leave for combatant service at the Front, to make a prosaic contribution to this discussion? None of your readers can dissent from the wishes and prayers of the five ministers for peace. The desire for peace is not recent. We have wanted peace since and before August, 1914, but only on terms. Mr. Asquith's great words, "We shall never sheathe the sword until...." still ring true.

During the last few days the Allies have stated their terms: Germany has also issued a manifesto to neutrals. Let Germany be as explicit as the Allies, and your readers will be in a better position to estimate the relative value of negotiation or further warfare. Meanwhile, a sure instinct is at work heartening our people to fight on.

I have read and re-read Dr. Wicksteed's letter, and, knowing his passion for beauty and social justice, wonder why he cannot frankly and strongly support men like yourself and Dr. Jacks in patriotic endeavour. You, Sir, have been sure of yourself all through, and Dr. Jacks' onslaughts against bad-will have acted like tonic. We soldiers have been treated as Crusaders by THE INQUIRER, and we fare forth with increased confidence in the strength of our ideals. But Dr. Wicksteed's questions perplex and grieve, and but for other teaching, would weaken allegiance to our country's fair name and fame. Fortunately, straight answers to the questions he puts help to reach the "true scale of values" he speaks of. Take, for example, his query about the Athenian outrage against Melos. The answer is—"Yes, most assuredly." An outrage becomes unspeakably more horrible when accompanied by broken faith. For Dr. Wicksteed to pay a tribute to our moral enthusiasm and then charge us with pharisaism in our attitude towards Belgium is to take away more than he concedes. If so cynical about treaty obligations, why so partial to negotiation? In the next place Dr. Wicksteed asks how many Englishmen, in their hearts, thank Germany for giving us a good moral case for attempting to thwart her. Before a desolating indictment of this kind is launched, the prior question as to the grounds for attempting to thwart Germany should be fairly met. It is not a matter for heartfelt thanks, but for genuine pain, that Germany compelled us to intervene, vide Sir Edward Grey's dispatches. Lastly, Dr. Wicksteed is afraid lest our ideals be smirched by a resort to unworthy passions. Let the nation that deliberately plotted this war see to that! It is the Germans who have denied God and broken the brotherly covenant. If under the exigencies of war we use fleshly weapons, we are free from the crime of having calculated in peace time and under the cloak of friendship the re-conquest of Europe. Ideals are only safe so long as we are prepared to die for them. The Navy and Army are seeing to that: God forgive us if we do not express burning indignation! Germany damned the consequences, and now timid people seem hurt at the prospect of her suffering the consequences of her criminal policy.

I wish every newspaper in the land would day after day set forth the significance of 1864, 1866, 1870, 1914. If Germany is allowed to emerge from this war in possession of one inch more territory, our children will rise up and curse us, for we shall have weakly succumbed to the view that might is right, and thrown upon them the ghastly task of resisting the further encroachments of a nation that has succeeded in making war pay.—Yours, &c.,

WALTER SHORT, 2nd Lieut.

20 St. Albans Road,
Bootle, Liverpool.
January 13, 1917.

SIR OLIVER LODGE ON LIFE AND DEATH.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Many people will have read with great interest Mr. Gow's review of 'Raymond,' and have felt admiration for its fine spirit, as well as respect for its acute criticism. I daresay it is true that in faith born of undying love most of us have our confidence in immortality. Certainly in these matters it is difficult to ground our convictions on reported facts which are overwhelmingly influential in other people's experience. Where we have our own the case is different. What happens is the natural expression, to us, of pre-existing belief, which may rank even as certainty. To me the chief evidential value of the book is not in the detailed evidence but in this, that for that family, the larger part of whom were previously sceptical as to intercommunion of persons in different worlds, the member who is no longer visibly and tangibly with them does veritably remain a member. They at least have no doubt that Raymond is living, and continues in many ways to share in the common life. No criticism can touch that. No scepticism can alter what for them is fact. In their experience, whatever the world may say, the family circle is unbroken. That is the really wonderful thing. To me no evidence offered approaches it in significance and worth. For taking the world so intimately into his confidence I feel that we are under a debt of gratitude to Sir Oliver Lodge which cannot be easily overestimated.—Yours, &c.,

ADDISON A. CHARLESWORTH.

Highgate.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

105th LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	15,829	16	8
Miss Amelia Williamson (third donation)	0	10	0

Mr. W. N. Martin (thirteenth monthly donation) ..	0	6	0
Mr. F. Maddison (twenty-second donation)	0	10	0
Mr. F. Martelli (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Miss S. J. Gregg (eighteenth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Evelegh (sixth donation)	5	0	0
L. G. A. and R. F. (fourth donation)	0	10	0
Miss J. M. Rhodes	0	10	0
Mr. Woolcott Thompson (thirteenth donation) ..	25	0	0
Mrs. Barnes and family (seventh donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr L. N. Williams (tenth donation)	1	1	0
Mr. S. Arthur Gittins ..	1	5	0
	£15,867	8	8

Parcels have been received from :—Stockport Branch Women's League (per Miss New) ; Mrs. Mayer ; Miss S. Partridge ; Mrs. Philip Vizard ; Miss Ashton ; Mrs. Notcutt ; Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Miss E. M. Buckley) ; Mrs. Freeston ; Miss Mellor ; Anon. (by hand) ; H. J. ; Mrs. Leys ; Mrs. and Miss Carter ; Miss Else ; The Misses Thomas ; Miss Dora Harris ; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas) ; Wimbledon War Workers' Depot.

WEEKLY NOTES.

I AM sorry to have been obliged to disappoint so many people about the wool. I had only 200 lb. and it has been all applied for twice over, so I was unable to send any to the later applicants. The Fund has benefited by £20, which was acknowledged some weeks ago in the name of the donor of the wool. I should be very glad of some games of chess, if any one has any to spare. I have several applications for sets for hospitals and they are very difficult to buy except at very high prices now. Men's civilian suits would be very welcome also.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Pyjamas, vests, pants.
Slippers, shirts, socks.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens.
Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais.

Layettes (on Belgian methods).
Women's chemises.
Bed jackets (in pale colours if possible).

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

YORKSHIRE UNITARIAN UNION.

A ROLL OF HONOUR is printed in the Annual Report of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union. It contains the names of 530 men who have joined H.M. forces since the outbreak of the war. Of these 26 have been killed, many wounded, and a number have won military promotion and distinctions. The Yorkshire Unitarian Union has issued the following letter to the men now with the forces :—

This message to our men with the Navy and the Army has been written at the request of the Committee by the Rev. W. L. Schroeder, M.A., of Halifax.

Dear Friend,—Sir Philip Sydney, a gallant gentleman and chivalrous soldier, wrote that he never heard the old song of Percie and Douglas that he found not his heart "moved more than with a trumpet."

We, to-day, our minds echoing with the music of deeds in full keeping with the traditions of British pluck and constancy recorded in the ancient ballad of Chevy-Chase, are moved in like fashion. As we hear the story of the fight on land and sea and in the air, and of the patient endurance of our men amid circumstances harassing and exhausting, our hearts are moved "more than with a trumpet."

Great traditions are in the making, great life is being wrought, great ends are in the process of achievement ; and with it all, great sorrows and great hardships are being endured with a fortitude that speaks well of the soul of the nation.

From under many skies, where our men are striking hard for life and freedom of development, comes the challenge to the nation to keep faith. We who remain at home, conscious of our deep indebtedness to all who are risking their lives for our sakes, and proud of the kind of response that leaped from the hearts of some of the bravest and best in the land, would, in all humility, send a message of trust and good-cheer to the lads who from our own little religious communion in the county of Yorkshire, have gone forth on land and sea to fight in the fulfilment of a national duty.

Fine things have been done by Yorkshire boys, and fine things yet will be done. Great sacrifices already have been made by the county, and the price of victory here and there has meant unspeakable and undying sorrow in many homes.

To all, but at this moment especially to the members of our own churches and schools, we would like to say, "Thank you !" for what is being done.

We pray that all may be well with you, that your heart may be nerved to meet the close demands of the time, and that God may bless you in life and in death.

When the war is over, and that for which we are fighting has been achieved, it will be for you a great memory that you did what you could, even to the offering of your body, that the soul of liberty might be saved. And for the sacrifice made, we honour you, in that for England's sake you fought—

That her name as a sun among stars might glow,
Till the dusk of time, with honour and worth.

GROSVENOR TALBOT, J.P.,
President.

JULIUS HESS, Treasurer.

W. R. SHANKS Secretary.

LETTERS FROM OUR SAILORS AND SOLDIERS.

HEARTY RESPONSE TO THE NEW YEAR MESSAGE.

OUR readers already know that copies of the New Year's Message by Dr. Carpenter and the booklet containing Readings, Prayers, and Hymns, have been forwarded to nearly five thousand sailors and soldiers belonging to our churches and Sunday schools ; and it is expected that two thousand additional names will be sent in. This work has been done from the Social Centre established at Essex Hall, as a result of the very generous response to the appeal made by Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C.

Letters are now arriving daily in large numbers from these sailors and soldiers. From a score or more of the pile at Essex Hall we have culled a few extracts. All the writers without exception speak of their pleasure and gratitude at being remembered by the President of the Association ; and the Booklet in its neat buff case evidently attracted attention. Many of the men say that when they pass through London on leave they will certainly do their best to visit the new Social Centre ; while several make the remark that it is a real pleasure to know that people are interested in their welfare and happiness.

A. writes : "I do not know how you received my name, but I am pleased all the same. I hope to make the acquaintance of that Room at Essex Hall when I am on leave."

B. writes : "'For Freedom and Right' is an excellent production. I should like to hand a copy to the men in my Battery." Later he writes : "I could do with another twenty-five copies so as to give one to each of my men."

C. writes : "It came as a great surprise to me, but I am sure it was a pleasant one. It will help me to pass many weary hours." (Hospital in France.)

D. writes : "I was thankful to think that out of so many men in the army some one remembered me. I hope it will help me in the future. I find in a soldier's life many temptations."

E. writes : "The Booklet is a great help to me out here (France), its contents being so full of straight sensible words. It was one of my happiest moments to visit the old chapel at High Street, Portsmouth, and hear the Rev. G. W. Thompson preach ; and even though I was quite young it broadened my mind. My dear old father is quite a veteran Unitarian, and he asked me if I would like to hear Mr. Thompson preach, for I was then a member of the Wesleyans, and I went and had quite an enlightening time."

F. writes : "The Booklet I may say will come in very handy, and I can pass away a few minutes with it before going to sleep. I am a scholar of the Ancient Chapel, Liverpool. Mr. Craddock and Major and Mrs. Burroughs have been very good to me. I joined this ship the second week of the war."

G. writes : "I have shown the Booklet to some of the men out here (in France), and they all like it because of the simple, straightforward wording. I shall make a point of calling at Essex Hall."

H. writes: "As I was reading the Booklet it brought back to me pleasant memories of the happy time I had when at home. I am still in hospital (France), but I hope to get back to my battalion as I am gradually improving in health."

I. writes: "I know what a help it will be to me to face many an hour of darkness and very likely pain. I have been on active service now two years, and have not had the good fortune of ever being able to go home on leave. I should like to hear from you, for a letter cheers one up so at times."

J. writes: "It is very helpful to receive remembrances from the dear people at home. I will try and keep in touch with you when I go up the line which may be any day now."

K. writes: "I was very delighted to receive the precious little book of Readings, Prayers, and Hymns. I have often looked at the bookstalls for such literature without success. Might I ask as a special favour that you would send a Booklet and Letter to my wife as we could mention the life and thought in our correspondence."

L. writes: "Mr. Tarrant's verses are splendid." "Great" is the term applied to the verses, 'To ours, among the Rest,' by another soldier.

M. writes: "I am in the best of health and good spirits, but I am waiting for the time to come when there will be peace, and we can return to our homes and families."

N. writes: "I think very dearly of my Sunday school at Rawtenstall."

O. writes: "I have been in the army two years and five months. I took part in the landing at Gallipoli, where I was blown up by a shell, and was invalided home suffering from concussion of the brain; but I am quite fit now and ready to do my duty when they want to send me. Since joining the army I have always done my best and tried to keep in the path I was taught to walk in at my school in Todmorden, and to Mr. Fox I owe a great deal."

P. writes: "I can assure you we are doing our bit cheerfully, under very bad conditions, to lower the flag of outrageous Huns. Being a sapper, the change of work seemed very hard at first, it being so much different to the kind of work I used to do. Some people are under the impression that it is just like work in the coal mine, but there is a lot of difference, but I have got quite used to it now, and feel quite as contented as I used to be in the coal mine."

Q. writes: "I am now on Home Service having been invalided home from France suffering from shell shock. I am now looking after some wounded Germans. I spent about twelve months on the Somme front, and was present at the recent great battle. In my work there as stretcher-bearer, I have seen death in all its forms. I can truly say that the great principles of our faith as Unitarians helped me and strengthened me in my hours of danger and stress. On the field of battle men have death around them every day: they are soldiers and sextons too."

These are a few quotations from the letters that the Secretary at Essex Hall has received. They show the importance and value of keeping in touch with the men who have gone out from our churches and schools.

We are informed by Mr. Montgomery that the Committee have now obtained vacant possession of No. 1 Essex Street, and that the alterations to the building, which will be known as "Lawrence House," will be proceeded with as quickly as possible. We hope to announce the date of the formal opening of the building in our special number for sailors and soldiers, which will be published on March 3.

SHEFFIELD DISTRICT ASSOCIATION OF UNITARIAN A ND FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

THE Fifth Annual Meeting of the Association was held on Thursday, January 11, at Sheffield. In the afternoon a service was held at Upper Chapel, the preacher being the Rev. Dendy Agate (Manchester), who said, in the course of his sermon, that though the war was a terrible thing, it was not without its compensations, for it had turned our boys into men of courage and determination, and trained them for tasks which a short time since seemed beyond their powers. It had opened up to them possibilities of self-sacrifice and service of which they had merely dreamed. Some part of that manliness had been learned in the churches and in the schools.

The service was followed by a Conference on 'The Churches after the War,' introduced by Dr. Mellor, the Revs. A. H. Dolphin, C. J. Street, W. R. Shanks, and others, taking part in the discussion. Dr. Mellor said he did not think the position of the churches would improve on the cessation of hostilities. On the contrary, he thought their difficulties would increase. A committee on which he served, and which had considered the subject, believed that one of the effects of the war upon the life and religion of the people of their own and other churches would be a deepening of the consciousness of the things in which all Christians were agreed and a lessening of the importance of things upon which Christians differed before. As to the effect of the war upon the men at the front, Dr. Mellor said it would be hard to diagnose, because he could find no two cases of returned men alike. Whatever might be said about the glory of war, it always had a brutalising effect, and the only way to deal with it was to strike the personal note in religion.

The Rev. A. H. Dolphin had great difficulty in understanding what was meant by the unity of the churches. The Free Church Council were trying undoubtedly to do something, but there was no hand being held out to them. As an instance he criticised the Y.M.C.A. authorities, who refused to accept them, and in order to get over the difficulty sent an honorary member's ticket, which he scorned.

The Rev. C. J. Street believed human nature was going to remain the same after the war as it was before. They would have, as now, those who did not want to learn anything, the half thinker, and the thinker. The time might come when churches would cease to be.

Tea was served at Channing Hall, where the annual meeting was held in the evening, the President, Mr. W. R. Stevenson, presiding. The Annual Report, District Minister's Report, Lay Preachers' Union Report, and the financial statement were adopted on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. J. R. Wigfull. In the course of the evening the subject of the afternoon's Conference was again referred to, and the Rev. D. Agate agreed with Dr. Mellor that it was best for them to go their own way and do their own work, and not be discouraged because other people did not give them that recognition which, if they took a different point of view, they would give.

Dr. Mellor felt, with the Bishop of Liverpool, that if the Christian churches had taught Christianity as it should have been taught there would have been no war. He had been told that men were fighting and dying for him. He took no merit for that; he was rather ashamed of it. Sacrifice of itself was not enough: there must be atonement. That was the challenge of the hour; it was the opportunity offered to the Christian churches, and he hoped God would give them strength to rise to the level of the opportunity.

The Rev. Kenneth Bond (North Midland Association) thanked the Rev. Dendy Agate for his sermon, and the Rev. A. H. Dolphin moved a vote of thanks to the officers, at the same time proposing their reappointment, the Rev. W. J. Pond seconding. Thanks were also given to the Lay Preachers by Mr. W. G. Turner, to which Mr. E. Meadowcroft responded, and to the Women's League for providing tea, by the Rev. J. W. Lee. After the meeting musical items were rendered by Mrs. Andrew King, Miss Erica Stevenson, L.R.A.M., and Mr. Claud Dolphin.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

As we mentioned last week we are busy preparing a special number for the Soldiers, Sailors, and Airmen from our churches and Sunday Schools. It will be sent to them as a message of friendship on March 3. We are anxious to give as full particulars as we can of distinctions gained by our own men. Will ministers, parents and other readers send particulars on a postcard to the Editor, 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, London, N.W., giving name, regiment and rank.

THE special number will contain many attractive features, including a special message from Lord Bryce and several portraits and other illustrations. We shall be glad to receive any incidents or stories described in a few lines which strike any reader as good enough to be included.

MAJOR BRONSON CROTHERS, son of the Rev. S. M. Crothers, D.D., visited Essex Hall this week. He is on leave for a few days. He has been very hard at work as a doctor in France since coming over to England in 1915. He is one of the group of American citizens who volunteered for medical service in the British Army.

AMONG the officers mentioned in Sir Douglas Haig's dispatch was Lieut. Arthur M. Champion, R.F.A., son of Mr. J. Kenrick Champion of Castle Bellevue, Redland Hill. Lieut. Champion is Intelligence Officer on the staff of his brigade and has been at the front for the last fourteen months. He was educated at Clifton College and Sandhurst; passed into the Indian Army; was "invalided out," and afterwards entered the Administrative Service of British East Africa. Shortly after the war broke out he obtained permission to take up temporary military service.

MR. T. N. RILEY, M.Sc., who at the outbreak of war was on the teaching staff of the Plymouth Municipal Technical School, joined the ranks of the Royal Naval Division in the Engineers Signal Company. His abilities quickly marked him out for promotion. He rose from the ranks to the post of captain. For conspicuous services in Gallipoli Capt. Riley was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and mentioned in the dispatches of Sir Ian Hamilton. Before the war Capt. Riley occasionally occupied the pulpit of the Treville Street Unitarian Church and served as local treasurer for the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. He is now in France.

THE War Office has amended the Rev. T. P. Spedding's authorisation by giving him permission to visit the Military Hospitals as well as the Home Camps. He is named in the letter, issued by the War Office, "Missionary Agent of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association."

THE Rev. David Edwards, who was ordained Unitarian Missionary in the Khasi Hills on the occasion of the visit of the Rev. J. T. Sunderland to India, died some weeks ago. His son, at present a student at Calcutta, hopes to succeed his father. The Rev. Milmani Chakvabarti, after twenty-seven years' service as Brahma Somaj minister in the Khasi Hills, has retired. He also superintended the Unitarian Mission stations.

WE have received The Social Service Quarterly for January, the organ of the National Conference Union for Social Service. Copies may be had gratis from the Rev. H. H. Johnson, the Orchards, Croft Road, Evesham. If we may venture upon a suggestion it is that in future issues some trouble should be taken to give a more adequate account of the social service which is being performed by the churches which the Union represents. A few study circles and the annual Interdenominational Conference at Swanwick only represent a very small corner of the field.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MISS WOOLLEY.

OUR losses at Cross Street Chapel, Manchester, by death, within the last few years have been very severe, and we are again trying to reconcile ourselves to one of the most serious of these losses in the death of Miss Woolley. Though Cross Street Chapel was not her first spiritual home—she was one of those whose spiritual home is everywhere—she was a regular worshipper. Her name, of course, was known far beyond the limits of our household of faith. My knowledge of her, though only extending over a few years, was sufficient to prepare me to hear without surprise any judgment of her character that might at first have struck me as rather the judgment of loving kindness, in the moment of bitter grief, than the judgment of knowledge; and yet a remark I heard lately was the remark of one who knew her quite intimately: "If ever there was a saint, she was," it was said. Thoughts and deeds and intentions that she would have jealously guarded from the general gaze, have not escaped the eyes of a discerning affection. Her finest qualities she would readily disguise. She loved the quiet unobtrusive ways of life. As there are such things as "comfortable words" that help us so there is such a thing as a comfortable presence, and that quality of true goodness of character Miss Woolley possessed, so that one felt at home at once in her company; and even her frankness of expression, amounting at times almost to bluntness, was never disconcerting. The edge was taken off her bluntness (if I may use such a solecism) by a consciousness that a kind heart was near a blunt word, and a curious chuckle or light-hearted laugh often betrayed the truth. For many a long day she will be thought of lovingly by many friends. Her presence and support in Cross Street Chapel were highly esteemed. One is almost filled with dismay as strong helpers like Miss Woolley leave us. The light has gone from an honoured house and home and all our hearts sympathise with that well-known household. E. L. H. T.

MRS. CARLIER.

ON Wednesday evening, January 10, Mrs. Christian Carlier quite suddenly died. She had occasionally complained of her health, but to the last she had the outward appearance of being well, and was always ready for the many good works in which she was engaged. In earlier life she had been a Sunday school teacher and member of Deptford Chapel. In 1894 at the George's Row (Dingley Place) Domestic Mission she was married to Mr. Egbert Carlier; and it is now interesting to notice that amongst the signed witnesses to the ceremony was the late Miss Emily Sharpe, whose Unitarian bookshop in City Road Mr. Carlier was managing. Till nearly four years ago these friends were faithful members and devoted workers at their now adopted religious centre. The time, however, came when they were to be called to work on their own account. Deptford Chapel was without a minister, and Mr. and Mrs. Carlier and their family resolutely stepped into the breach, and for nearly four years this ancient cause has been flourishing under their united guidance and management. It was partly to encourage this work that the London District Unitarian Society raised and spent £1,000 upon the repair of this old-time chapel.

Mrs. Carlier's death was absolutely sudden. Going to her Girls' Class, and nearing her destination, she felt faint, had at once to go into a small shop, and (luckily in the presence of her husband) almost immediately passed away. In various other good works, her time—yet never to the neglect of her home—was fully occupied. Greatly respected, her loss will be sorely felt. After service in the chapel she was interred in Brockley Cemetery, the Revs. F. Summers and J. A. Pearson officiating. She was 51 years of age.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Blackpool: South Shore.—The members of the Unitarian Free Church, in trying to "do their bit" in the national struggle raised £3 3*s.* for the Army Christmas Pudding Fund, £1 3*s.* 4*d.* for the Belgian Children's Fund, and £1 1*s.* for the Joint Red Cross and St. John's Ambulance Fund. A War Savings Association has also been carried on since July, and the ladies have made many garments for the soldiers out of material provided by the Blackpool Voluntary Aid Association. The Rev. B. C. Constable has just completed an interesting series of twelve Sunday evening discourses on "The Great Verities of Religion." The annual Christmas party was very successful. The children's annual Party and Prize Distribution was held on January 10, when the prizes were given and presented by Mr. J. J. Bowles.

Carlisle.—A carol service was held in the Unitarian Church on the last Sunday in the old year, with the object of aiding the funds of the National Institute for the Blind. The sermon was preached by the minister, the Rev. Helen L. Phillips. On the following day a New Year's Party was given for the Sunday scholars and friends, when a presentation was made to Miss A. Dixon, who has rendered the church good service in both choir and Sunday school, and whose family have been connected with the Unitarian cause since it was first established in Carlisle. The presentation took the form of a silver inkstand, suitably inscribed, and was made with many congratulations and good wishes in regard to Miss Dixon's approaching marriage with the Rev. C. E. Mercer, of Kendal.

Chesterfield.—For the first time the minister of the Unitarian Chapel at Chesterfield was this year included in the annual exchange of pulpits amongst the Nonconformists of the town, and on Sunday morning, January 14, the ministers of Soresby Street Congregational Church (Rev. Will Reason, M.A.) and Elder Yard Unitarian Chapel (Rev. Kenneth Bond) made an exchange. Speaking from his own pulpit in the evening, and referring with pleasure to the fact that such an exchange had become possible, the Rev. Kenneth Bond said: "One swallow does not make a summer, but the appearance of the first venturesome bird is a token that others are on the way." Is the utterance prophetic? And is the fulfilment near at hand? Mr. Bond also spoke at some of the week evening prayer meetings that have been held at the various nonconforming churches during the past fortnight. It is worthy of note that Elder Yard and Soresby Street are the two oldest nonconforming churches in Chesterfield.

Horsham.—The Sale of Work, held just before Christmas, realised a little over £22. A series of Library Lectures by Miss Churchman on 'Russia and England: a Comparison in Developments'; by the Rev. R. Smyth on 'How the Earth grew from Childhood to Motherhood'; on 'John Bright,' by the Rev. N. J. Hawthorn Jones; and on 'Socrates,' by Mr. W. Kensett have taken place during the winter months, and others are being arranged.

Huddersfield.—Lord Haldane delivered a fine address on 'The Future of the Nation,' dealing mainly with the question of Education, at a meeting of the Fitzwilliam Street School Union which was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday, January 10, Mr. Owen Balmforth, J.P., presiding. The chairman was supported on the platform by a representative gathering of gentlemen interested in educational work in the West Riding. At the close of the address an enthusiastic vote of thanks was accorded to Lord Haldane, on the proposal of Alderman J. Blamires, seconded by Sir Swire Smith, M.P.

Leigh.—On January 10, a cordial welcome into the ministry was given to Mr. Frank A. Bullock, who has been in charge of the Unitarian Church for the past eighteen months as a lay worker, and has now received the ministerial certificate of the National Conference. The Rev. Rudolph Davis, secretary of the Western Union, gave the charge to the congregation, and the Rev. J. J. Wright, of Chowbent Chapel, welcomed Mr. Bullock into the ministry, offering him the right hand of fellowship. Mr. T. W. Collins, on behalf of the congregation, congratulated Mr. Bullock, and spoke with warm appreciation of what he had done since he came to Leigh, when he found the forces of church and school at a low ebb. In the course of an earnest address the Rev. F. A. Bullock dwelt upon the fact that in this hour of darkness they were waiting for the coming of God—the God that was slowly unfolding himself in all the deeper things which were bound together by a firmer grasp of chivalry, idealism, and spiritual beauty. He only asked that together they might serve in the dawnland until, by and by, with patient endurance or suffering, if need be, they stood together in that dawn where the shadow of evil and death could not come. In the evening a meeting was held in the church, Mr. Richard Ridyard, chairman of the committee, presiding, when a purse of gold was presented to Mr. Bullock as a mark of the esteem and affection in which he is held by the congregation.

London: Bermondsey.—On Saturday evening, January 13, a social evening, organised by the members of the Ladies Needlework Guild, was held in the Schoolroom at Fort Road. A collection, amounting to £3, was made, which sum will be entirely devoted to the provision of comforts to be sent to the soldier members of the congregation. During the evening a presentation was made to Miss Malier, the leader of the Ladies' Needlework Guild.

London: Essex Church.—Last Saturday, January 13, forty-one wounded soldiers from Endell Street Military Hospital were entertained in the Essex Church School. Ladies of the congregation provided and served tea, and the children of the school performed a Christmas Operetta. The soldiers seemed genuinely to enjoy the party, and it was a great pleasure to the Church to have such gallant and modest guests.

London: Plumstead.—The children attending the Unitarian Sunday school in Herbert Road, between sixty and seventy in all, had their New Year's tea and entertainment on Thursday evening, January 11. At the entertainment the minister-in-charge presided. The superintendent, Miss Daisy Hopkins, having distributed the awards for good attendance and behaviour, a little ceremony (not on the programme) was, on behalf of the scholars, performed by Mabel Truman, who, stepping on to the platform, in a pretty speech of twenty-four words presented Miss Hopkins with a box of pocket handkerchiefs "as a small token of our love, and in gratitude for your devoted good work among us." Taken by complete surprise at this unexpected manifestation of thoughtfulness on the part of the children, the recipient acknowledged the gift in a few graceful words.

Manchester: Bradford.—A meeting was held on Saturday evening, December 13, to welcome Mr. and Mrs. Heale, the new minister and his wife. Mr. Broadbent, the President of the Manchester District Association, took the chair, and addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. Morley Mills, T. P. Spedding, and Mr. Lee of Monton. The Rev. J. Morley Mills, in welcoming Mr. Heale, said that although the times were different, yet there was never a greater need for the work of the church than there is to-day. The Rev. T. P. Spedding bore testimony to Mr. Heale's work in London, and in connection with the Y.M.C.A. among our soldiers. Under his ministry the church could look, he said, for a successful future. Mr. Lee, on behalf of the Governing Body, assured Mr. Heale that in coming to Mill Street he came to a church with a good tradition. A hearty welcome was also extended on behalf of the congregation, Sunday school, Women's Own, &c. Mr. and Mrs. Heale responded in suitable terms.

Stockton-on-Tees.—The Sunday school is at present in a very active condition, and the interest of the scholars is demonstrated by the very high percentage of attendances in all the classes. In spite of the loss of three male teachers who have joined the colours, the boys' side of the school has been admirably sustained, an especially hopeful sign being the zeal shown by the Senior Boys' Class. At the other end of the scale the popularity of the Cradle Roll augurs well for the future. The Sunday School Choir, which has been in training since last spring, gave a proof of its abilities on December 31 with an admirable rendering of a special New Year's Eve Cantata, arranged by the Choir trainer, Miss E. L. Watson. Christmas parcels were sent from the teachers to our boys who are serving their country in France and elsewhere. We are glad to say that the lastest reports from them are all favourable. Mr. Douglas Scruton, the son of the Rev. A. Scruton, who was wounded while serving with the Black Watch in France, has recovered sufficiently to be recalled to his military duties, and is at present stationed in Ireland.

Suffolk Village Mission.—The members of the Bedfield Chapel held their New Year's Party on January 3, under the leadership of the Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Sands. On the following Wednesday the Sunday school children had their Christmas tree. Hearty thanks are due to the kind friends in London who, every year, send a welcome parcel of gifts for this occasion, and also to the esteemed secretary, Miss E. M. Smith, who so thoughtfully supplements them.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, MISS E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

BURGESS HILL, SUSSEX.—FURNISHED COTTAGE.—Seven rooms; garden; twenty minutes Station. Plate; linen. Inside sanitation. Any period.—B., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. CANN & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

GENTS' HANDKERCHIEF SALE. Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Size 18 or 19 inches. Bundle of six, 3s. 3d. (postage 3d.). Send postcard to-day for the Sale Catalogue, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

COLEMAN'S R.T.B. Renowned Temperance Beverage.

THE IDEAL HEALTH DRINK. THE NEW INVIGORATOR.

A Delightful, Exhilarating, Non-Alcoholic Beverage.

Contains the principal ingredient used in the manufacture of Sanatogen.

The use of alcohol is terribly seductive, especially to those who fly to the sideboard for little sips of alcohol because they are intensely miserable. The greatest want of the age has been a satisfying non-alcoholic beverage, and at last we have it in Coleman's R.T.B.

Are you willing to Test it? Strongly recommended by Doctors and the Clergy.

It will refresh you. You can drink Coleman's R.T.B. with cold or hot water, or any kind of mineral water. A bottle at 1s. 9d. (a Champagne Quart) will make 25 half-pints, which make the cost of the drinks less than a penny each. It is a powerful nerve stimulant, but has no after depressing effect like alcohol. It exhilarates, invigorates, and stimulates. It stops the craving for spirits. It is a magnificent tonic for those who are 'run down' and not feeling quite well. The more you drink the better you are. It can be given to children with advantage.

TO SPENCER, LAYTON & CO., BRUNDALL, near NORWICH.
Kindly send me a sample of Coleman's R.T.B. I enclose 6d. for postage packing herewith. SEND THIS FORM.

Name .....

Address .....

Sold in bottles at 1s. and 1s. 9d. per bottle.

AGENTS WANTED. INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, January 20, 1917.
 Regarding Advertisement Rates see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3891. NEW SERIES, No. 994.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

At the Annual General Meeting to be held on Tuesday, February 13, 1917, the Contributors will have to elect three Managers in place of Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke and Messrs. T. Oliver Lee and G. J. Notcutt, who retire by rotation, and are eligible for re-election.

Any Contributor may be nominated by two other Contributors to fill a vacancy on the Board of Management. Such nominations must be sent to me before FEBRUARY 1, 1917.

W. H. DRUMMOND, Acting Secretary.
23 Cannon Place, Hampstead,
London, N.W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Fcap. 8vo, 64 pages, cloth, gilt edges with ribbon, 1s. net; paper covers, 3d. net (postage 1d.).

For those who Mourn.

Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved.

Edited by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

For Freedom and Right.

Booklet in Case: Readings, Prayers, Hymns for Men on Active Service.

Price 6*d.* net.

Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK, 1917.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.

Roan, gilt edges, 1s. 6*d.* net; by post, 1s. 7*d.*

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1917.

Price 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2*d.*

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

January

28. Rev. J. A. PEARSON, Minister of the London District Unitarian Society.

February

4. Rev. W. L. SCHROEDER, M.A., of Halifax.
11. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.
18. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY ISSUE include

The Meaning of Reconstruction

The Problem of the Partially Disabled Soldier

The Ministry of Labour

An Educational Outlook

The University Woman and the War

America and Reconstruction

The National Income and The War

REVIEWS, &c.

Scholastic and Secretarial Appointments, &c., &c.

Monthly 1s. Annual Subscription 14s., post free.

Published at
"THE ATHENÆUM" OFFICE
Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

Crown 8vo 216 pp. 2s. 6d. net.

ETHICAL & RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS OF THE WAR.

Addresses by Prof. GILBERT MURRAY, Sir HENRY JONES, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, Prof. J. H. MUIRHEAD, Dr. P. H. WICKSTEED, Principal L. P. JACKS, and others.

Edited by Dr. J. E. CARPENTER.

"The general value of this little book, beyond the particular merit of its constituent parts, is that it comes from the Extreme Left in English Thought, both in politics and religion."—The Spectator.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, January 28.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. H. SMITH.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH; 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Rev. Dr. GEO. S. HITCHCOCK.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. WM. LEE, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Miss M. B. BURTT.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. C. S. BULLOCK.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. C. HARGROVE, D.Litt.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. CHAS. PEACH.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11. Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. H. TAYLOR.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATH.

SOLLY.—On January 19, at Letchworth, Louisa Florence Solly, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Henry Solly, aged 67.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 39

THE RELIGIOUS CHALLENGE OF THE WAR 41

GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 41

AN OPEN-AIR SCHOOL IN LONDON . . . 42

CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Possibilities of Peace 43
John Pounds Home 44
Girls' Clubs and the War 44

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 45

MEMORIAL NOTICE:—
The Rev. Hubert Clarke 45

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 45
The Reconciliation of Prayer 46
Ministers' Income Tax 46
Hostel and Social Centre at Essex Hall . 47
Men and Movements 47

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 48

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

OUR first word this week must be one of deep and respectful sympathy to all who have suffered through the explosion in the East of London. There have been similar disasters since the beginning of the war, but none about which the newspapers have been allowed to give such full details. Fortunately the death-roll is not nearly so heavy as was feared at first, and the Government has issued the reassuring statement that the destruction of the factory will not make any practical difference to the output of munitions. London has been more deeply stirred by it than by Zeppelin raids or the news of terrible fighting, partly perhaps because the veil of secrecy was withdrawn, and the shock of it was near enough to make even the least imaginative citizen realise how close he is to the grim destructiveness of war.

* * *

ONCE again the noblest traits of our national character have shone out brightly. All the accounts of eye-witnesses agree in their tribute to the splendid behaviour of the people. There was no panic, and even little children, who were hurt and maimed, seemed to realise that they must be as brave as the men in the trenches. Notable tributes have been paid to the firemen and police who took great risks themselves in order to save others, and to the numerous helpers who were quickly on the spot to succour the victims. But the one name that will be long and gratefully remembered in connection with the disaster is that of Dr. Angel, the brilliant Oxford chemist, who walked calmly into the burning building to warn the workpeople of their grave danger and was never seen again. It was a simple act which requires no adornment of praise; and it seems to us all the more beautiful because it is just what we expect every true man in a similar position to do.

* * *

ON Monday President Wilson read a carefully prepared statement to the United States Senate. It has been accepted by the world at large as the next step in his diplomatic discussion with the belligerent Powers, though he himself, possibly only with the rhetorical artifice which is permitted to public men, gave it a more domestic application. "I thought that I owed it to you," he said to the members of the Senate, "as the council associated with me in the final determination of our international obligations, to disclose to you without reserve the thought and purpose that have been taking form in my mind with regard to the duty of our Government in the days to come, when it will be necessary to lay afresh and upon a new plan the foundations of peace among the nations." The immediate result of his words is that everybody is wondering once again what he means, and why he has spoken; and the newspapers bristle with the most contrary opinions on the subject.

PAST experience has taught us that it is unwise to rush to conclusions about any of Mr. Wilson's utterances, or to be annoyed because he does little to conciliate people who have quite as much claim to be accepted as the prophets and spokesmen of liberty as himself. He has a gift for the unfortunate phrase, which leaps to the eye and obscures the real intention of his mind. It has not been necessary for us to come to conclusions about his latest message in a hurry, but reflection is far from leading us to coincide with the judgment of The Manchester Guardian, which hails it, after a good many futile and ingenious explanations, as deserving to be received "with infinite friendliness and respect." These seem to us to be words which would only be justified if it really gripped the needs of the present situation in a practical way. But the pose of neutrality keeps President Wilson among the clouds and encourages the suspicion that political prudence forbids a plain declaration of his meaning. Many of his countrymen see this as clearly as any of his friendly critics on this side. His programme seems to be that the belligerents are to arrange ideal conditions of peace and brotherhood without a decisive victory being gained by either side, and then America will step in to guarantee their permanence.

* * *

HERE indeed is the ostensible object of his speech. He disclaims any wish to interfere with the terms of peace, but he desires to make it known that they must fulfil certain conditions or the United States will take no part in a league of nations to protect them. On the surface this may appear reasonable enough. No one could expect a great neutral country to accept any sponsorship for terms which are manifestly impolitic and unjust. But it may be doubted whether it is wise, or likely to assist in future efforts to secure international co-operation, for one people to take up an intransigeant position of this kind even in loyalty to its own highest ideals. It is usually a nobler course to consent to sacrifice our own inclination and to use the imperfect instruments which are ready to our hand than to wait in prayerful inactivity for the millennium. Any one who reads President Wilson's conditions and attempts to apply them to the present political condition of Europe may well despair of his League of Nations ever coming into existence.

* * *

WE shall not be surprised if some wholesome scepticism of this kind is the chief practical result of President Wilson's speech. We use the word "wholesome" advisedly, because we have an uneasy feeling that the scheme of a League to enforce Peace is being accepted in many quarters on the strength of a vague emotional appeal without any candid examination of its inherent difficulties, and the dangers to justice and freedom which might be involved in its success. By no skill or contrivance can we impose immobility upon international relationships, nor does a policy of "hands off" from every country but your own strike us as very hopeful for the victims of outrage and oppression. A system which aims at shutting up every nation within its own barriers, and leaves men indifferent to the iniquities which are done on the other side of the fence, would soon be shattered to bits by the liberating forces of the human spirit. We hope with all our hearts that the war will end in a peace "worth guaranteeing and preserving," but we believe that we have a better foundation for the tranquillity of Europe in the friendship of the Allies, resting as it does upon deep moral agreements, than in more ambitious schemes. In any case President Wilson has given us a useful warning that America is only prepared to abandon her policy of isolation and accept a place in the League of Nations to enforce Peace when the world is approaching political perfection. For the long long way which we have to travel before that day arrives it will be wise not to turn a deaf ear to more modest proposals.

* * *

SOME stir is likely to be created in ecclesiastical circles by the announcement that Dean Henson has accepted an invitation to preach at both services at the City Temple on Sunday, March 25. In a letter to the secretary of the Church Committee he recalls the fact that eight years ago he was inhibited by Dr. Gore from preaching in a Nonconformist pulpit in Birmingham, and then dexterously suggests that in matters of this sort the Bishop of London has fortunately shown himself to be more broad-minded.

> I have observed with very great pleasure [he writes] that the Bishop of London is reported recently to have authorised the loan of a parish church within his diocese to Presbyterians in circumstances which called plainly for an exercise of Christian fraternity. I cannot, indeed, satisfy myself that his lordship had any legal power to do this, but I applaud his frank recognition that (in the words of Archbishop Tillotson), "Charity is above rubrics," and I admire his intelligent refusal to plead a morally obsolete law against an evident public duty. You yourself say that at the present time "relations between Anglicans and Nonconformists are more cordial than they have ever been." That assurance is infinitely welcome to me, and I infer from it you own clear persuasion that, if I accept your kind invitation to preach in the "City Temple," I may be well assured that the general sentiment of religious people in London would approve my action.

After this the Bishop of London may feel himself compelled to remonstrate, just to show that he is not to be headed off in this dexterous fashion.

* * *

IN a later passage of the same letter, after paying a warm tribute to the value of the apostolic labours of Nonconformists to English Christianity, Dr. Henson speaks clearly on the subject of re-union.

> I hold it the plainest duty of the parent Church of England [he says] to draw closer and make effective for service the spiritual links which unite the divided sections of English-speaking Christendom in an unexpressed but conscious unity. I believe that the only re-union of Christendom which would be sound, or could be permanent, must be built on those evangelical principles which were re-affirmed at the Reformation, that the method of spiritual advance is forwards from what has been already gained, not backwards to what was once and is no more. Therefore, I would gladly labour for the closer association in work and worship of Anglicans and Nonconformists.

* * *

THE welcome announcement has been made this week that the output of beer is to be reduced by another 30 per cent. The total reduction on pre-war brewing will thus be 50 per cent. In other words 286,000 tons of barley and 36,000 tons of sugar will be released for food. There will be also a considerable saving on transport. At the same time the Government announces its intention of restricting the amount of wine and spirits which may be released from bond by a similar amount. This is a tardy measure of reform and in the opinion of many of us quite inadequate in view of the grave situation which has arisen in connection with our food supply. Lord Devonport is quite blunt in his repudiation of any possible connection between the new measure and the ideal of a more sober and efficient nation. "These steps," he said in an interview reported in The Times, "are in no way to be deemed measures of temperance or social reform. The bald fact is that the barley, sugar, and other ingredients used in brewing are required for food. In fact, I may say it is really a question of 'bread versus beer.'"

* * *

IN the course of his address to the York Diocesan Conference on Tuesday the Archbishop of York said that, while he was impenitent as to the wisdom of the Bishops' decision to discourage the clergy from entering the combatant service, he recognised that some of the clergy must be set free, wholly or partly, for other branches of national work. Readjustments and restrictions would become necessary. He suggested that the answer to the problem might be found partly in the lessening of the many services in their churches, in concentration upon things that really mattered, in the "scrapping" of a number of superfluous organisations, and in the union, if only temporary, of country parishes, but chiefly in the ministry of the laity to redress the deficiency in the ministry of the clergy. These are words of far-reaching application. The responsible leaders of every denomination ought to take stock at once of their resources in men. There is no profession that has suffered so little as the ministry from the war. It has accepted, with very few murmurs of dissent, privileges for itself which it has been impossible to grant to other men. If the new demand for national service is quietly ignored by theological colleges and ecclesiastical bodies on the ground that nothing must be allowed to interfere with a sacred profession, the outlook for the churches in the future will be grave indeed. Any attempt to plead "benefit of clergy" during the present crisis can only be a prelude to disaster.

* * *

IT is with special pleasure that we make the announcement that a gift of £200 has been received from the American Unitarian Association for the new hostel at Essex Hall. It is one more proof of the large-hearted kindness of our American brethren, of their constant sympathy with us in our time of national anxiety, and of the closeness of the tie which binds us together as partners in the same religious ideals and fellow-seekers for the freedom of the truth.

THE RELIGIOUS CHALLENGE OF THE WAR.

CHRISTIAN worship brings with it to many of us a sharp challenge from the War, a challenge to the group of religious ideas and feelings which gather round the conceptions of an Almighty and Merciful God, Christ the Good Shepherd, and Love the bond between God and Christ and man. How can these be reconciled with the awful fact of the War, for that is fact whatever the others may be? It is not sufficient for such to suggest that, as in the realm of Nature so in that of morals, God may have bound Himself as well as us by law, and cannot consistently with His own nature interfere with the seed bearing its appropriate fruit. That seems only to push the difficulty back a stage. Why, they ask, such law, such seed, such fruit at all, and so on to the final and useless questions: why God, why man at all? No way out is to be found in that direction.

There is another way of facing the difficulty. It may be that our premises are wrong, that we are starting from incomplete conceptions of God and Christ. They are not the only ones which have found a place in the Christianity of the past. God, the Supreme Law-Giver, Christ the Judge, disobedience and sin, judgment and punishment, these conceptions also have been part of the Christian tradition, repugnant as they are to many in these softer times when we would have all things, including our religion, made comfortable and easy. We have thought as little as we could about judgment. Are we not undergoing it now? We have discarded the idea of Hell, and have awakened to find ourselves there.

Many who have stood in the Sistine Chapel and pondered over Michael Angelo's great pictures must have come away with a suspicion that all was not right in our modern easy-going religious ideas. They went to see a great work of art, but they have found themselves also face to face with an expression of the thoughts of a strong, good man, living in very evil times. Christ, no longer a gentle shepherd but an awe-inspiring Judge, pronounces judgment and doom upon sinners, while Prophets and Sibyls in sad silence, remembering their own neglected warnings, bear solemn witness to the justice of God. Was it all superstition and ignorance, nothing but art expressing false ideas? Has it no meaning or warning for us to-day, no application to what is happening now?

We need not abandon our thought of the merciful God and the Good Shepherd, but we may well ask ourselves whether under some circumstances the only true way of mercy does not lie through judgment and punishment; whether, supposing that it be the Divine Will that in the end all the sheep shall be folded and some will not be led, it may not be necessary that there should be drivers if need be with the goad; whether, instead of questioning the action or inaction of God, it would not be more fitting to cry "This madness has come on us for our sins."

"Our sins?" Do I not mean "Germany's sins"? Not altogether. Granted, as indeed is the case, that she has been the greater sinner and is primarily responsible for the War, we also have offended and were getting ripe for judgment. For what are the qualities that we specially condemn in our enemies as the cause of this terrible calamity? Are they not their lust for power and pride of place, their disregard of the rights and interests of others, their intolerances and hatreds, their intense combativeness, their gross materialism? Can we say that as a people we were free from these defects, that, in the easy-going days before the war, these noxious weeds did not begin to flourish here also? Think of our political and class and sex animosities, of the greed which in our trade was manifested in many of our combines and trusts and gambling operations—the desire to get as much and give as little as possible in return—the growing luxury and neglect of spiritual things. Were not the same noxious qualities underlying these? Did we not deserve to be brought into judgment for those? It may be that the action of Germany has made our punishment greater than it would otherwise have been. That comes of the brotherhood of man, which entails that we suffer for the sins of our brethren whether we love them or not. But punishment of some kind was our due and might have taken the form of Civil War.

We had not gone so far on the downward path as they. They had come to this pass that many of them had said "Evil be thou my good." We had not got past acknowledging in our better moments that much that we were doing was evil, only we did not love the good sufficiently to cry halt.

Therefore it may be, and not because of a spotless virtue which was not ours, it is that in this great world struggle the championship of the good has been entrusted to our hands, and a chance given to us, if we be but staunch to the end, of redeeming ourselves and the world from the hell into which sin has plunged us all. Let us not try to escape from that hell by any short cuts, any declining of the combat to which we have been called. Let us accept our sufferings as the punishment of our own sins, while we thank God that, notwithstanding those sins, to us has been given the solemn responsibility and privilege of contending for the right and upholding His law, and with it an opening for return into a nobler kind of life—God's mercy to us manifested through His judgment upon us.

IGNOTUS.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

HENCEFORTH I learn that to obey is best,
And love with fear the only God, to walk
As in His presence, ever to observe
His providence, and on Him sole depend,
Merciful over all His works, with good
Still overcoming evil, and by small
Accomplishing great things—by things deemed weak
Subverting worldly-strong, and worldly-wise
By simply meek: that suffering for Truth's sake
Is fortitude to highest victory,
And to the faithful death the gate of life—
Taught this by His example whom I now
Acknowledge my Redeemer ever blest.

MILTON.

HE [Wordsworth] does not excuse or justify his country at all costs. He condemns England for her trespasses, and for her luxury and extravagance.

Riches, he says, are akin to fear, and selfish interests pervert the will. Nor will pride of intellect avail. His hopes rest on the simple, rugged, strong natures whose patriotism, in our own country as with our allies, comes straight from the heart, the "sound healthy children of the God of heaven." It is they who keep the unvanquished soul. Matched with them, "policy" proves vain, "her arts, her strength, her iron and her gold." They will perish rather than yield. Despair comes not near them. They know the danger, but they lay to their heart the faith that the nation will survive and be victorious. There are indeed times when, against the unholy deeds that ravage the world "on earth's groaning field," England seems to the poet to be alone, and

Freedom now
Stands single in her only sanctuary.

Many a fear he has for his country, and he "trembles at the sorrow of the time." But there is a spirit which at such moments knows how to transmute fear, sorrow, and suffering to "glorious gain." Each of us has to carry with him his own fortitude and self-devotion even in the darkest hours. Then the collective soul of the nation will be invincible. The spirit of national resistance, rising from the sacred feelings of the human heart against the wickedness which acknowledges no limit but the extent of its own power, will in the end prevail....To Wordsworth unconquerable hope is the first and last duty. Thinking of the sufferings of ourselves and our allies, he yet gathers "triumph and thoughts no bondage can restrain." In the destiny which Nature has allotted to our island he finds its special consecration as the Land of Liberty. "Nature itself," he says, "by encircling with the ocean the country which we inhabit has proclaimed that this mighty nation is for ever to be her own ruler, and that the land is set apart for the home of immortal independence." ARTHUR H. D. ACLAND.

O FATHER, this day may bring some hard task to our life, or some hard trial to our love. We may grow weary, or sad, or hopeless in our lot. But, Father, our whole life until now has been one great proof of Thy care. Bread has come for our body, thoughts to our mind, love to our heart, and all from Thee. So help us, we implore Thee, while we stand still on this side of all that the day may bring, to resolve that we will trust Thee this day to shine into any gloom of the mind, to stand by us in any trial of our love, and to give us rest in Thy good time as we need. May this day be full of a power that shall bring us near to Thee, and make us more like Thee; and, O God, may we so trust Thee this day, that, when the day is done, our trust shall be firmer than ever. Then, when our last day comes, and our work is done, may we trust Thee in death and forever, in the spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord. AMEN.

AN OPEN-AIR SCHOOL IN LONDON.

MISS McMILLAN'S WORK IN DEPTFORD.

IT was in the spirit of hopefulness aroused by the consciousness that England is awake, at last, to certain plain truths which we have often been reluctant to face in peace times, that the present writer journeyed across London a few weeks ago to talk to Miss Margaret McMillan about the Camp School, Open Air Nursery, and Clinic, which she has established in Deptford. Miss McMillan's work is not unknown to our readers, but so modestly has it been carried on, and so little advertisement has been given to it, that few people realise how much she has done, and is doing, to educate public opinion in regard to some of the fundamental necessities of healthy child life. We were all startled last year by Sir George Newman's statement that, out of a total of six millions, not less than a quarter of a million children of school age are seriously crippled, invalided, or disabled, while not less than a million are so physically or mentally defective as to be unable to derive reasonable benefit from the education which the State provides. This reveals a condition of things which none of us can admit without a feeling of shame; but Miss McMillan has known all about it and has tried to make us aware of the facts for over twenty years, and as you go over the humble premises where she carries on a work of supreme national importance almost entirely at her own expense and that of the generous individuals whose sympathies she has been able to enlist on the children's behalf, realising something of the quiet courage and persistent optimism which has supported her in the face of innumerable disappointments and hindrances, you begin to understand that the National Mission was justified in calling us to repentance even at a time when we are espousing the right cause in Europe, and endeavouring to secure freedom for the weak and oppressed.

Miss McMillan's plan for regenerating her country is a very simple one, practical and economical enough to appeal to the most prudent. Starting with the knowledge that we have in this country an enormous number of children arriving at school age who are suffering from one, two, or three definite ailments which render them feeble, inert, stupid, and slow—she puts the number considerably higher than Sir George Newman, by the way—she asks, how are we to counteract the evils resulting from this impoverishment of the national life? Obviously the first thing to be done is to ascertain the facts through the agency of school clinics. Then the children who are found to require special attention, and are incapable of profiting by the State system of education without it, must be separated from their more vigorous companions and kept under medical supervision, at least for a time, or, if prolonged treatment is necessary, withdrawn from the elementary school altogether, and given the benefits of education, good food, physical exercise, and sleep, in the open air. You can do better if you capture the sickly child in the infant stage, and give it all these things from the start; but where that is out of the question, it is still possible to work wonders, even with the worst cases, if they can be given the conditions necessary for sound health for three or four years, receiving that individual thought and love and care which is the key to all social reform. The ideal is that there should be camp schools and clinics attached to groups of schools in populous centres all over the country. There the constitutions of the defectives would be systematically built up, and their minds trained at the same time. Such a system can safely be advocated on grounds of economy alone, for not only would children so cared for be handed over to the educational authorities at a later stage with improved physique, good habits, and quickened intelligence, but they would be guarded against many evils in the future which swell the nation's "drug-and-lotion" account, increase the burden of National Insurance, and foster tendencies which help to fill our reformatories and prisons. The raising of the school age comes in here, of course, but that is too big a subject to enter upon now.

The Camp School at Deptford has been established and fitted up at a minimum cost, for it is Miss McMillan's aim to prove that the working of her scheme does not necessarily involve considerable expense beyond the payment of properly qualified teachers and the provision of a plentiful supply of nourishing food. A long, spacious shelter, which was erected for £120, with corrugated-iron roof, screened on three sides and entirely open on the fourth side, serves both as class-room, dining-room, and sleeping apartment—or did so serve up to a comparatively recent date. For many reasons it is considered desirable that, just at present, the children should spend the night, as well as the week-end, in their own homes, although this rather mitigates against the beneficial results of camp school treatment, as it is obviously of the greatest importance, from the health point of view, that they should not sleep in small, stuffy rooms, in squalid streets, sometimes two or three in a bed. Before the war, forty boys were sleeping nightly under the shelter on simple trestle beds which are tidily stowed away under the eaves during the day, each one, after a hot bath followed by a cold shower in an adjoining shed, being ensured a good night's rest in warmth and comfort and uncontaminated fresh air. Miss McMillan will not have it that Deptford is unhealthy, in spite of its dense population and evil-smelling streets, and she claims that, with a due observance of hygienic laws, and other conditions needful to maintaining life and vigour, an "Imperial race" can be reared on its fine gravel soil, near the wind-swept river, as successfully as in Belgravia. There is wealth, too, she reminds us, behind the poverty of the people of this neighbourhood, for they are descended from some of the best blood of England, "from highly skilled craftsmen, barge-makers, and builders of fine cruisers; poets, too, of the great Elizabethan era, and mariners of renown."

Space will not permit of a detailed description of the Camp School, but one may point out that Miss McMillan and her sister, who ably supports her in this work, are always ready to welcome visitors and give them information; and if anyone is disappointed at first because there is nothing to be seen in the way of fine buildings or beautifully laid out grounds, they must remember that this "open-air residential school" (for that is exactly what it is) has been established purely as an individual enterprise, without any permanent funds from the authorities to support it, on a piece of dumping-ground originally strewn with brick-bats which has been turned over to the founder because there was practically no other use to which it could have been put. It is estimated that the average capital expenditure per head is £3, as against £13 to £15 for ordinary schools of the new and large type, and a child can be kept and educated for £9 a year, though better results can be obtained with £10. The scholars have two good meals a day, going home for their dinner, and Highland oatmeal and milk enter largely into the diet. In summer as many as seventy children have been cared for in this way, but, in winter, the numbers range from twenty-five to thirty-five. So long as they are allowed to remain at the school the health of the children shows a marked improvement, and they thoroughly enjoy both their lessons and their play. They are carefully trained in habits of orderliness and cleanliness, and there has never been any outbreak of infectious disease since the scheme came into operation.

We must briefly refer to the babies' open-air Camp—a most attractive place, filled, when we visited it, with between fifty to sixty happy little mites, some cosily lying in their canvas cribs, others seated in little chairs at very low tables in a vociferous after-supper mood. These infants make, perhaps, the strongest appeal to a woman's heart, and no one who looks at the little pinched, white faces of the latest comers can doubt that here, at any rate, is a fine field of activity for any woman of leisure with the "mothering" instinct who wants to do some really patriotic work. In this connection Miss McMillan points out that the Board of Education is now prepared to make a grant of fourpence per day per head for all children under five who can be collected into open-air nurseries; to this, as at Deptford, few parents who are in employment find it difficult to add another fourpence, which ensures to their little ones three meals a day (the babies do not go home for dinner), every care and attention on the part of capable nurses, medical treatment, and, in normal times, open-air sleeping accommodation. A group of energetic women in any district who will form themselves into a committee for the purpose of saving the babies for the future, and who can obtain the necessary money—a relatively small amount—for erecting a building and equipping it somewhat on the lines adopted at Deptford, can claim this grant, and they will also receive help in other ways from the Board of Education, which is thoroughly alive to the necessity for encouraging this particular kind of social activity. Some of the parents object, of course, that their little ones cannot stand so much fresh air when the weather is cold and inclement, but it is found, in practice, that most of them do even better in winter than in the summer months, and, owing to the precautions which are taken to avoid undue exposure, and the unremitting watchfulness of the devoted nurses and matron, the babies at the Deptford crèche seem to be in little danger of contracting severe colds or being laid up with pneumonia.

In the clinic, every stick and stone of which is dear to Miss McMillan's heart because it symbolises a long struggle to secure for English children the elements of a healthy and joyous existence, there is a beautiful picture entitled "The Guardian Angel," which was presented by a friend at Nottingham. It is the work of a notable Austrian painter, Franz Dvorák, and was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1911. The picture represents a beautiful and gracious figure in saffron robes bending over two little peasant children, who are gazing up into her face from the darkened foreground where they are kneeling. Behind her head is the purple light of dawn, and round about her is a ring of light, "the aureole of the future," as Miss McMillan explains, with the voice and look of one to whom the future is in very truth the Land of Promise and the fulfilment of dreams. The connection between this shining figure and the hundreds of children who are brought so trustfully by their tired and anxious mothers to the spotless upper chamber where the picture is hung (there are sometimes as many as 1,000 attendances in a week!) is not very far to seek. For here, year in and year out, protective agencies are at work searching out the causes of pale faces and listless limbs and lack-lustre eyes, and in the spirit of love and hope seeking to undo the evil consequences of over-crowding, malnutrition, bad heredity, or sheer ignorance of the elementary laws of health. That this is a work of practical utility and immediate urgency there can be no doubt whatever, and surely we may hope that, at a time when the minds of our people are said to be "more malleable, more free from prejudice, more open to conviction, and, therefore, more ready for movement in the cause of real reform" than they have ever been before, such an extension of it will be called for that we shall, at last, begin to evolve a true system of education aiming at the mental, moral, and physical fitness of every man and woman in the United Kingdom.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF PEACE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—The failure of the manifesto of the "five ministers" to provoke a controversy does not prove that our hearts are unsympathetic towards their desire for peace; it rather indicates that our minds appreciate the stupendous obstacles in the way, and the futility of seeking peace at this stage by negotiation. This racial struggle cannot be stayed by a word. Perhaps, too, there is at the back of our mind some slight feeling of resentment against the implication that we are less humane, less sensitive to the horrors of war than the pacifists. Even Dr. Wicksteed's illuminating letter is open to this criticism, since he suggests that we are "pharisaical" in our abhorrence of Germany's violation of Belgium's treaty rights. If so, we are paying a terrible price for our Pharisaism. But does such Pharisaism exist to any noteworthy extent? I doubt it. The mere fact of past denunciations of treaties by Britain and Russia is not to the point; since it does not affect the genuineness of our present feelings. Nor can any act in our dealings with Belgium for a century past be rightly placed in the same category with Germany's ruthless betrayal of that stricken land. It is said that self protection was a motive. Possibly. But it is a Government's paramount duty to protect its territory. And it is indisputable that we could have done this effectually without placing a huge army in France. It so happened that honour and duty pointed to the same path, and we followed their direction with purity of motive and singleness of mind. No useful end can be served by suggesting otherwise. In any case such suggestions might be left to our foes.

Perhaps it is dangerous to generalise; but I believe that many of the noblest men and women of the nation, lovers of peace and workers for international confraternity, who formerly believed in Germany, have set their faces like flint to fight her, because by her betrayal of Belgium she not only broke her pledged word but destroyed faith in fact and law. Prior to the war it seemed as if European peace, possibly even universal peace, might be secured by multiplying buffer and neutral states on the Belgian pattern. Germany has shattered that hope, and it will take many decades to recreate the fabric of international law which she has ruthlessly destroyed.

Dr. Wicksteed suggests that beneath the flamboyant rhetoric of certain officials some sagacious people can see signs of the conviction that "no vast scheme of aggressive national ambition can at our present stage of development be realised by war." Not possessing such discernment I am unable to see, either in the peace note of Germany or the bellicose utterances attributed to its megalomaniac monarch, any such signs. Nor do I believe that the facts support the assertion. Germany has only missed the attainment of her criminal ambition by a very little. If the pacifists had had their way she would have attained it. Had Joffre been less adamantine, or England less true, or France less heroic, not Flanders only but Calais, Boulogne, Havre, and Paris would now have been in German power. My fear of peace coming at this stage arises from the conviction that it is even yet possible, in certain contingencies, for Germany to achieve her diabolical aims. For, the moment peace came, Germany would set herself to work to break up the Alliance which has thwarted her efforts, and her task would be infinitely easier then than now.

To all this I know our pacifist friends would say: "What does it matter?" Twenty million brave men, hazarding their lives in defence of our freedom, supply this answer: "The object of existence is not peace but progressive life. This can only be secured when power reposes in the hands of the righteous. Therefore we fight to wrest it from the wicked who, for selfish ends, use it as a menace to human freedom. Until Anti-Christ is restrained Christ cannot establish his kingdom." Antichrist is not yet restrained.—Yours, &c.,

ALBERT THORNHILL.

Brookfield Parsonage, Gorton.
January 16, 1917.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Dr. Wicksteed tells us that it is Pharisaical to harp on Germany's violation of treaty rights since England and Russia have not a clean record in such matters. But, surely, the present generation has a right to preach and practise a higher morality in international affairs than that preached and practised by its ancestors. We have no responsibility for what occurred a century ago, while we have a very direct responsibility for our thoughts and doings to-day. At the time of the Crusades such an atrocity as the massacre of half a million men, women, and children in Armenia would not have met with general condemnation in this country, if the massacred Armenians had been Mohammedans and their butchers Christians. To-day we believe it to be a hellish thing without even asking the religion of the victims. Are we Pharisaical in this? Are those people Pharisaical who preach and practise a high morality and yet believe that Adam sinned? I am glad to think that they are not. It is, maybe, more justifiable to suspect a touch of the Pharisaical in the attitude of those who, while almost glorying in "being barren of suggestion," are yet ever ready to hamper those who are suggesting, and working and wrestling with the difficulties of the situation, by charges that they are harbouring the most vicious passions.

There are many facts quite overlooked by those who signed the, so-styled, "manifesto," and some are overlooked even by Dr. Wicksteed. There is the obvious fact that by her declaration of war and invasion of Belgium Germany made it quite impossible that both the Belgian boundary should be restored, and also the Alsace-Lorraine question remain as it was. A German victory must alter the one, a French victory the other. And when Turkey came into the fight then automatically it was decided that, in case of victory, Russia would obtain access to the Mediterranean. When Germany, in Belgium and Serbia, and Turkey in Armenia, committed the long series of barbaric atrocities, much more serious questions were raised than whether "aggressive national ambition can be realised by war." It is the settling of these questions, and of those, which cannot yet be done by negotiation, as the reception by Germany of the reply of the Entente Powers to President Wilson's Note will prove.

Vindictiveness is a great sin, but it pales into insignificance before the crime against God and humanity of too readily and weakly palliating, forgetting and forgiving the hideous orgies allowed by the Germans to the Turks in Asia, and indulged in by so large a part of the German army in Europe. The greatest "danger relentlessly pursuing us" is, I venture to think, that, having entered the war with moral fervour, we abandon it in an unmoral state, seeing no difference between the aims and methods of the belligerents and only anxious ourselves to return to the fleshpots.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR GOLLAND.

London, N.W.
January 16, 1917.

JOHN POUNDS HOME.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Were it not that necessity compels me, I would not ask you to insert this appeal for the John Pounds Home in your paper at this time, when all our kind friends have so many calls upon them. Like many other Institutions we are feeling greatly the increase in the price of food, coal, and clothing, and as this year we have received fewer donations, we shall at the end of our financial year in March, unless help is forthcoming, find ourselves considerably in debt, from which it would be most difficult now to extricate ourselves, and we may be compelled to close the Home. After twenty years' arduous work this would be a calamity, many girls having no other home. Never was our help more needed, for at no time were dangers and temptations so great. It has been suggested to me that now when there is such a demand for servants, girls can find situations and do well without our help. I grant that intelligent girls who have been brought up to understand what work and cleanliness mean, can easily do this, but I want our kind friends to remember that the girls who come to us are the very poor, mostly uncared for, and neglected, with either bad homes, motherless, or orphans. We get many, also, who, without being feeble-minded, are backward and slow, needing patience and perseverance in training.

I will mention two cases we have recently taken: A girl of 14, motherless, her father at the front. She had been placed with a woman who neglected her; was ill and in the Infirmary for some time; when well enough to come out, we were asked to take her. She needs care, feeding, and much teaching, for she is very backward for her age. The second girl was brought to us by her aunt, mother and father both dead, leaving a family of seven children. "I have heard of this Home," the aunt said, "and that they treat the girls well and kindly here, not as prisoners, so have brought you this one. She can scrub well, and did for her mother and the little ones, so if she has some clothes she will get on." Poor little soul! she was a pitiful object, small and white, with an old, old face, and a black net dress pinned on her, much too large. Now I look at her with pleasure, years seem to have been lifted from her, she is young again and doing well.

At this sad time when the future of our country is occupying the minds of thinking people, it must occur to them that if England is to be better and wiser after the war is ended, much lies in the hands of its future wives and mothers. I have seen much of the homes of the very poor during the last twenty years, and know that it is almost impossible for a girl to grow into a woman fitted to be a mother without some such help as we give. With the object in view, therefore, of uplifting these girls and making them understand their great responsibilities, it is hoped that all who can will send us some help on February 8, which is to be our Pound Day, and so assist in keeping the Home open and free of debt.—Yours, &c.,

(MRS.) MARY ROGERS, Hon. Sec.

John Pounds House,
St. Simon's Road, Southsea.
January 22, 1917.

GIRLS' CLUBS AND THE WAR.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—If it is not too late to enter into correspondence with the writer of an article recently appearing in your columns, I should much like to put a question concerning the work of Girls' Clubs at the present time. I refer, of course, to the article by Miss V. E. Crafer on December 30. It seemed to me that in that arresting record of work done, experiments tried and ideals to be realised there was opened up to us a new field of endeavour and possibility: those of us who have worked amongst girls and know the difficulties to be faced were, by the enthusiasm and zeal of the writer, given fresh hope and new courage to fight on and fare better than ever before. But—and here is my difficulty—has the fault lain entirely at our door that we meet with so little response, that our results are so meagr.? Suppose a room in a mixed Club were put aside, made holy by its beauty and its quiet, and that there—free from all cant or compulsion—girls and men might come apart and realise the Presence of the ever-present Divine, should we find the room as much used as the writer anticipates? I admit I am frankly sceptical, and should like to know whether such a plan has ever been tried, and if so, with what results? Granted there have been many mistakes on our part (and who would deny it?) are we and our obtuse self-conscious methods the only stumbling-block? Christ himself warned us that in these things we must not look for success, that though many might hear the call, few would answer it—in short, that to be on God's side in the game of life was a hard thing, necessitating an ever uphill fight; that it meant unpopularity, to be permanently in the minority. Therein it seems lies the crux of the matter—we are tempted now to think and act as if we were canvassing for some great election (as in a sense we are), and our Candidate's chances of success rested entirely on our efforts. "God or Mammon" is the choice in our minds, and the more eager of us cry shame on our party's methods because Mammon looks to have the largest polling. Yet our leader scorned results, He laid no stress upon the numbers of his adherents: I am inclined to think we should have more cause for anxious heart-searchings than we already have if Christianity became a popular religion and its followers were in the majority. But I wander from the point. I should be much interested to know if your correspondent can give further details of practical experience on this most vital side of the work attempted.—Yours, &c.,

E. M. MOORE.

8 Carlingford Road, Hampstead, N.W.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.—Your Part in Poverty: George Lansbury. 1*s.* net.

THE BLACKFRIARS PRESS, LTD.—Peace with Security: G. C. Armstrong. 3*d.*

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.—Year Book, 1917. 1*s.* net.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.—The Cambridge History of English Literature. Vols. XIII. and XIV. 9*s.* net each. Ezra and Nehemiah: T. W. Crafer, D.D. 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON.—Scraps of Paper. 1*s.* net.

MESSRS. LAWLEY & CO.—The Lack of Science in Modern Education: Sir Napier Shaw. 1*s.* net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.—Mens Creatrix: William Temple. 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Free Catholic. The Harvard Theological Review. The Hibbert Journal. Mind.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

THE REV. HUBERT CLARKE.

IT is with deep regret that we have to announce the death of the Rev. Hubert Clarke, minister of Mead Row Chapel, Godalming. Mr. Clarke was seized with sudden illness on his way to evening service last Sunday and died next day, aged 63. He was the son of the Rev. Charles Clarke, formerly minister of the Old Meeting, Birmingham. He was educated at Manchester New College, London, and entered the ministry in 1879. After short periods of service at Stockton, Darwen, Halifax, and Altrincham, he settled at Godalming in 1894, where he did quiet and useful work, beloved of his own people and little marked by the world. Mr. Clarke suffered all his life from the severe handicap of lameness and ill-health. He never had the physical vigour to make the best use of the sterling qualities of his mind and character in the pulpit, and as the years passed he seemed to shrink more and more from contact with public life. He was never seen at meetings, and to the younger men in the ministry he was probably quite unknown; but at Godalming he found a great deal of happiness, especially in his work among the young people. He cared for the boys and girls of his little flock with loving sympathy, he encouraged their gifts, and when they went away from him into the great world he followed them with wistful affection. He kept up his classical reading, not simply as a solace for his own loneliness, but because now and then there was a promising boy who wanted to learn Latin. Music was a great delight to him and he had skill as a teacher. To see him with his orchestra at a Harvest Festival was to win a new sense of the beauty of the simple things, which make a good man happy. Much hindered in the battle of life he kept an undefeated soul and did what he could. He has left behind him the fragrant memory of a faithful country pastor and of a steadfast friend.

The funeral took place on Thursday at the Old Cemetery, Godalming. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. H. Drummond.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

106th LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	15,867	8	8
Mrs. Fellows Pearson (tenth donation)	7	10	0
Miss Pearson (sixth donation)	4	10	0
Mrs. Jos. Webb	0	10	0
Miss C. Wells (second donation)	0	10	0
Liscard Memorial Church and War Sewing Society, per Mrs. Johnson (twenty-second and final monthly collection)	3	3	6
Mr. John Sale (fifth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. and Miss Hirst (fourteenth donation)	2	2	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (thirtieth monthly donation)	4	0	0
Mrs. Harriett Kelsey Fay, Michigan, U.S.A.	1	0	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (twenty-fifth monthly donation) ..	10	0	0
Mr. Kenrick (seventh donation)	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Pratt (second donation)	1	0	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. Yates (twentieth donation)	1	10	0
Miss Emmeline Rawson (eleventh donation) ..	2	2	0
Mrs. Mary P. Fearing, U.S.A.	15	13	2
Mrs. Mary F. Bartlett of King's Chapel, Boston (second donation)	5	4	2
Mr. E. Braithwaite (fourth donation)	0	10	0
	£15,941	13	6

Parcels have been received from:—Miss S. S. Dowson; Mrs. Bowen Evans; Miss C. H. Rawlins; Miss Hetty Ebbutt; Miss Louisa Evershed; Miss Gertrude Ready; Cairo Street Chapel, Warrington, Branch of the Women's League; Miss M. C. Smith; Miss Corfield; Mr. Thomas Cobb; Miss E. S. Hollins; Miss Mary T. Worsley; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee.

WEEKLY NOTES.

I HAVE just received the following letter from the Director of the Colonie Scolaire at Wisques: "The two bales of clothes and two cases of toys have arrived in excellent condition. What a delightful collection of useful and necessary things—clothes, towels, knitted goods, blue apron cloth, bandages, toys! What new proof you give us of your generous sympathy, what new claim you establish to our gratitude. Thank you from my heart. The wood for the hut of the little boys' class room has arrived. The contractor thinks it will be finished in three or four weeks.

"In our workroom we have several old sewing machines rescued from Ypres, but they are worn out and cannot be mended. A new machine would be immensely useful to us, as would also a knitting machine. At the moment we are in need of knitting wool, especially black wool, and cottons and small haberdashery. I do not know if you can provide any of these things, but I know you will do what you can. On Tuesday last the Queen of the Belgians, with Princess Marie-José, came to wish the children a happy New Year. I spoke to her of your goodness to us."

Several friends have started to make layettes on the Belgian model for our new maternity home at Calais. I have patterns here if any one else wants to know how these little garments are made.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Pyjamas, vests, pants.
Slippers, shirts, socks.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens.
Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais.

Layettes (on Belgian methods).
Women's chemises.
Bed jackets (in pale colours if possible).

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE RECONCILIATION OF PRAYER.

THE following letter, touching in its simplicity and earnestness, from a Catholic priest to a Protestant pastor, was quoted recently in The Christian Register from the Bulletin Protestant Français. The prayer referred to in it is read every Sunday at the Oratoire du Louvre, one of the principal Protestant churches in Paris :—

"June 1, 1916.

"MONSIEUR LE PASTEUR,—I have learned of the very beautiful and religious prayer, 'We bend the knee before Thee, O Father,' &c., which, as I am informed, you are using in your Sunday worship. Thinking that it might prove a spiritual stimulus to my parishioners, I have permitted myself to read it every Sunday at the close of mass. In acting thus I have not thought myself to be indiscreet, or to be making use of alien property. Have we not one and the same Master? Are we not sons of the same Father? I am sure you will agree with me in this, and it is on that account that I am impelled to make a request of you.

"Several persons, deeply touched by the accent of devotion and of reality in the prayer, have asked for copies of it as an inspiration for their private meditations. I am neither willing nor able to circulate such copies without your authorisation. If then you will kindly permit me, I will print the text of your prayer in my Parish Bulletin. Unfortunately the state of mind of some of the weaker brethren will not permit me to give the source from which it comes. Do you see any objection to this omission? Furthermore, it is the custom of our churches to use the plural of respect [You, instead of Thou, in addressing the Deity] in prayers in the vernacular; but this is not a modification of great importance.

"I would be very grateful to you, Monsieur le Pasteur, if you would give me a favourable answer as soon as possible. Will not this modest act of fraternal union have the value in the sight of God of a prayer to hasten the blessed day when the sheep of all folds shall form one flock under Christ, the one shepherd?

"I follow with interest and emotion the sermons published in leaflets by the Fischbacher Press. Several of my best parishioners read them with real religious profit.

"Accept, Monsieur le Pasteur, the expression of my respectful regards in Christ. "——, Rector of ——."

MINISTERS' INCOME TAX.

THE following report on Income Tax has been prepared by Mr. A. E. Piggott of Manchester for the Committee of the Ministerial Fellowship. We may point out that its value is not confined to ministers, but applies equally to all our readers whose income entitles them to either partial or total exemption.

MINISTERS' INCOME TAX (SCHEDULE D. OR E.).

To the Committee of the Ministerial Fellowship.

DEAR SIRS,—I have pleasure in putting before you a few points that may be of service to ministers in enabling them to fill in their Assessment forms without injustice to themselves, or to obtain repayment of any sum to which they might be entitled. Tax overpaid, or which has been deducted, and is reclaimable, can be reclaimed for a period of three years.

ABATEMENTS AND RATES OF TAX.

The following table gives the abatements allowed, and the rates chargeable for the Government financial year, ending April 5, 1917, for incomes up to £1,000 :—

Income.	Abatement.	Amount on which tax payable.	Rate of tax. Earned Income.	Rate of tax. Unearned Income.	Rebate on Tax at 5/- deducted from Dividends, etc., and charged on Schedule A. Assessments (Property Tax).
Up to £130	£130	Nil.	Nil.	Nil.	5/- in £ on such amts.
£131 to £400	£120	£11 to £280	2/3 in £	3/- in £	2/- in £ on such amts.
£401 to £500	£100	£301 to £400
£501 to £600	£100	£401 to £500	2/6 in £	3/6 in £	1/6 in £ on such amts.
£601 to £700	£70	£531 to £630
£701 to £1000	None.	Full Income.

ALLOWANCES.

In addition to the "abatement" mentioned above, an "allowance" of not more than 3*s.* in the £ is authorised for annual premiums paid on the claimant's own life, or that of his wife (not exceeding a sum equal to one-sixth of the net income from all sources).

An "allowance" may also be claimed at the rate of £25 in respect of each child living on April 6, 1916, and under the age of 16 years, where the claimant proves that his total income does not exceed £700.

DEDUCTIONS FROM GROSS PROFITS OF EMPLOYMENT.

16 and 17 Victoria, chap. xxxiv., section 52, provides that in assessing duty chargeable on any clergyman or minister in respect of the emoluments of his profession, it shall be lawful to deduct expenses incurred by him "wholely, exclusively, and necessarily, in the performance of his duty as such clergyman or minister." The gross amount of salary should not be stated on the assessment form, but a net amount after deducting necessary expenses. The practice of surveyors in admitting particular items varies, and they should not be specified except when demanded. Generally speaking, the deduction allowed varies from perhaps £10 to £25. Rent of study, books and stationery, travelling expenses for visiting, or district denominational meetings, may well be taken into this reckoning.

SURRENDER OF EXCESS AMOUNTS.

An important matter is the rate at which tax should be levied, and it will be noted from the table given above that the rate rises as soon as a certain amount has been passed—and the increased rate applies not merely to the excess sum but to the whole amount payable.

Thus a person with an income of £130 or under would be free of taxation, while one whose income reached £131 would only be allowed an abatement of £120, and be liable to taxation on £11 at 2*s.* 3*d.* =£1 4*s.* 9*d.*, or, if the income were from investments ("unearned"), then at 3*s.* in the £, or £1 13*s.* Manifestly in this, as in other matters, "excess" is to be avoided! Take the case of a person whose income has exceeded £400—say £401—he will have to pay on £21 more than he would if his income were only £400 ("abatement" being reduced); but if he will pay over the "excess"—£1 in full to the Revenue Authorities—his assessment will then be £400 less £120 "abatement," and he would pay tax on £280 at 2*s.* 3*d.*=£31 10*s.*, instead of on £401 less £100 "abatement"—£301 at 2*s.* 3*d.*, amounting to £33 17*s.* 3*d.*, a saving of £2 7*s.* 3*d.*, less the £1 surrendered.

ASSESSMENT.

The correct assessment of Income Tax and the obtaining of allowances, and the repayment of tax to which a person might be entitled, is admittedly a somewhat complex and difficult procedure. It is dependent upon the correct filling in of the "Return of Income for Assessment." This form, in the first instance, is issued by the "assessor" for the district, but the official who deals with the taxpayer, and with whom the adjustments in each individual case are made is the "Surveyor of Taxes," and if any of your members are in doubt as to their position, they should apply to the Surveyor.

CLAIMS FOR REPAYMENT.

Claims for repayment of tax are addressed to "The Secretary, Inland Revenue (Claims Branch), Canada House, Kingsway, London, W.C."

Though Income Tax deducted from dividends, chief rents, mortgage interest, and other investments, or assessed on property (Schedule A.), is at the rate of 5*s.* in the £, that rate is reduced by stages down to 3*s.* on incomes ranging between £131 and £500. The difference can therefore be recovered, either by an equivalent allowance being made off the Schedule D., or Schedule E., tax payable by the persons interested, or by direct repayment from Somerset House of the amount.

Two illustrations will make this clear. In the first instance we will assume that the "Return of Income for Assessment" has been duly made in complete form, and that the person's total net income is £400. This might be made up in the following manner :—

Income derived from "Trade, Profession, Employment, or Vocation," e.g., "Ministerial Stipend and Fees received, less expenses, say				*£350 0 0
"Income from Property."
Annual Assessed Value of Private Dwelling House (address given)...				†29 3 4
Income from "Interest, Annuities, Dividends," &c., including wife's property, tax deducted				†33 0 0
				£412 3 4
"Charges on Income."
Ground Rent. Oldmans Trustees	£4	13	4
Mortgage Interest, "Perseverance Bldg. Society." £200 at 4 per cent.	8	0	0
				†12 3 4
				£400 3 4

*From this sum of £350 would be allowed :—

Abatement	£120
Life Insurance, say...	10
Allowance children, say...	75
	—— £205, leaving

as the sum to be assessed for Income Tax, £145 at 2/3 = £16 6*s.* 3*d.*

The items marked † have all paid or been subject to deduction of tax on "unearned" income at the rate of 5*s.* in the £. Of these £29 3*s.* 4*d.* and £33 are receipts (income) amounting to £62 3*s.* 4*d.*, against which payments have been made of £12 3*s.* 4*d.*, leaving a net sum of £50—as income which has already paid the highest rate of 5*s.* in the £. Now as the total income does not exceed £500, the "unearned" income tax rate should only be 3*s.* in the £, and the notice of "Assessment of Income," which shows, as stated above, a liability for £16 6*s.* 3*d.*, should show against this amount "Relief of 2*s.* in the £ on taxed dividends or interest, &c., allowable in the case of incomes not exceeding £2,000," £5 (being 2*s.* rebate on the £50 of unearned net income) and reducing the amount payable in two instalments in January, 1917, and July, 1917 (and for which a demand note will be sent by the Collector of Income Tax) to £11 6*s.* 3*d.* If this adjustment should not have been made then the full tax, £16 6*s.* 3*d.*, would have to be paid, but a claim for repayment of the £5 could be made to the Secretary of the Claims Branch, mentioned above.

The notices of dividend showing the amount of dividend and the tax deducted, as well as the similar debit notes for chief or ground rent and mortgage interest, should be retained, as they would be required to substantiate any claim made.

War Loans, 1914 and 1915, are not taxed at the source if inscribed and not exceeding £100; above that sum they are subject to tax by deduction from interest payable. War Loan 1917 is not taxed at the source up to any amount. Exchequer Bonds, if to bearer, subject to tax (taken off coupons), but if inscribed, not subject to deduction of tax. In all such cases, the return must include income from this source, and tax has to be paid if over £130 a year. War Savings Certificates, free of tax.

In the second case it is assumed that the income, whether "earned" or "unearned" is under £130, but if any part is derived from investment, that portion will have been taxed at the rate of 5*s.* in the £ (except in regard to War Savings Certificates and Inscribed Exchequer Bonds), and the whole of the tax so deducted can be recovered on filling in the necessary forms (to be obtained from the Claims Branch, Canada House, Kingsway, on written application), and submitting the vouchers for the deduction made.

What is Assessable Income?

As to the receipts returnable as income, the elaborate "Instructions" issued with the return form, states: "All persons resident in the United Kingdom ....are liable to Assessment....in so far as they derive income from Property, Trade or Employment ...." (Note 2 of Instructions), while Note 18 gives it as "Income from Trade, Profession, Employment, or Vocation." It would be right, I think, to include in the return, in addition to ministerial stipend, any fees received for services rendered, even if such were voluntarily given, and not in the nature of a "Charge for Services," though these are not always set forth in the return, or their inclusion demanded. But, surely, voluntary grants in regard to which the recipient has no claim, i.e., items which are not "income from a profession....employment, or vocation," need not, I am of opinion, be included.

Inquiries on this point have been made from the leading denominational societies by your Hon. Secretary, the Rev. C. J. Street, who states :—

"1. Positive annuities, whether from the Minister's Pension and Insurance Fund, or from the Widow's Fund, are clearly 'income,' to be returned as such, and liable to tax.

"2. Grants, which are purely voluntary gifts, and only occasional, ought not to be treated or returned as 'income' or subject to tax. This will apply to the occasional £5 or £10 given by the Ministerial Fellowship, e.g., to a minister who is in temporary difficulties, and to grants of the kind, made only occasionally and for special need, by any other society.

"3. The Stipend Augmentation and Sustentation Fund Grants, which under ordinary circumstances are pretty reliable and continuous, must be treated as 'income' for tax purposes.

"4. The real difficulty—and difference of opinion and practice—comes in when you consider the Benevolent Grants which are pretty continuous to needy and deserving cases, but for which there is no kind of claim made, e.g., by the Ministers Benevolent Society."

I do not consider Benevolent Grants can be regarded as "Income from profession, employment, or vocation," and they need not be returned "for assessment," nor when accounting for "Income from Miscellaneous Sources."

Yours faithfully,

Arthur E. Piggott,
Incorporated Accountant.
56 Mosley Street, Manchester.

HOSTEL AND SOCIAL CENTRE AT ESSEX HALL.

GENEROUS CONTRIBUTION FROM AMERICA.

The President of the American Unitarian Association, the Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, D.D., in a letter received by the Secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association on January 24, writes :—

"I have just had the pleasure of sending Dr. Carpenter, in care of Essex Hall, a modest contribution of £200 for the Hostel and Social Centre in connection with Essex Hall. I have asked Dr. Carpenter to expend this sum wherever he thinks best, and I have ventured to suggest that if immediate and pressing needs are provided for it might be pleasant to furnish one of the rooms with this money and that it be known hereafter as the 'American Room.'"

The Treasurer desires to acknowledge with thanks the following additional contributions which he has received: Miss G. Bradshaw, £1 1*s.*; Miss A. A. Gamble, £2; Miss C. E. Gibbs, £2 2*s.*; Miss Lawrence, Brighton, 10*s.*; Mrs. C. F. Pearson, £5; Women's League, Bank Street, Bury, £1 1*s.*

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

We have received several complaints lately from subscribers of serious delay in receiving their weekly copy of The Inquirer. In other cases parcels of copies for local sale have been held up for two or three days. May we point out that the fault lies with the postal arrangements and not with our office. We are doing our best to probe the matter and have it remedied. It is clear that the Post Office is finding it very hard to maintain the high standard of speed and efficiency to which we are accustomed.

We desire to call the special attention of our readers to the appeal on behalf of John Pound's Home, which appears in another column. Work of this kind, with its gracious beneficence towards those who are ill-fitted to help themselves, must not be allowed to suffer in spite of the absorbing claims in other directions. It would be little to our credit if Mrs. Rogers's worst fears were realised, and the Home had to be closed.

The National Unitarian Temperance Association has done an excellent piece of work in preparing a number of cards suitable for hanging in a public place, which point out in plain language the danger of the use of alcoholic drink by men in His Majesty's Forces. The appeal is made on the ground both of unselfish patriotism and of personal health and efficiency.

THROUGH the generosity of two friends a supply of these Temperance Cards has been sent to the Y.M.C.A. for use in their huts and canteens. The Secretary, Mr. E. F. Cowlin, 19 Northwood Road, Forest Hill, London, S.E., will be happy to send a few of the cards to any one who can make good use of them.

AMONG the officers mentioned in Dispatches this month we notice with pleasure the name of Lieut.-Col. Stanley Chatfeild-Clarke, V.D. Artists' Rifles. Like his eldest brother, Mr. Howard Chatfeild-Clarke, he is a member of Essex Church. Another brother, Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke, who takes a prominent part in public life in the Isle of Wight, is President of the Sustentation Fund and formerly for many years acted as its Treasurer.

WE are glad to see that Capt. Harold Brown, Yorks Regiment, son of Mr. G. W. Brown of Hampstead, has been promoted to the rank of Brevet-Major. Major Brown has already won the D.S.O., the Military Cross, and the Croix de Guerre.

AMONG recent recipients of the Military Cross we notice the names of Lieut. James Boyle (R.E.), the Choir Secretary at Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, and Lieut. W. P. Moss, a member of the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Lieut. Moss has been wounded three times.

LIEUT. H. D. ROBERTS asks us to correct the address which appeared in this column on the 13th inst. His present address is R.T.O. ; A.P.O.R.C.I. ; B.E.F. He writes : "I am in full charge of a Railhead now, in a secluded spot."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Accrington.—Much sympathy is felt with Dr. Arthur Greenhalgh, Medical Officer of Health for the town of Accrington, in the loss of his wife. Mrs. Greenhalgh (née Burgess) sprang from an old Presbyterian family in Monaghan, Ulster, was trained as hospital nurse at the Adelaide Hospital, Dublin, and subsequently held appointments in London, Nottingham, Blackburn, and finally as first Matron at the Victoria Hospital, Accrington. On her marriage to Dr. Greenhalgh thirteen years ago, she became a member of the Oxford Street Church, Accrington. Unfortunately, her health began to fail after a few years, and in spite of every effort to arrest her disease, both on the continent and at home, she gradually lost strength and passed away on January 13, at 7 Rossall Road, Ansdell, in her 47th year. She leaves besides her husband two sons aged 11 and 7, two sisters, and other relatives to mourn her loss. The interment took place on Thursday, January 18, at the Accrington Cemetery, the Rev. J. Islan Jones, M.A., of Bolton, officiating.

Midland Sunday School Association.—The Annual Meeting was held at the Hurst Street School on January 20, and was well attended. The Secretary gave a brief report of the year's work. During his term of office, the president, Mr. W. Cheshire, has visited most of the schools on the roll, and read a very interesting and helpful report of his impressions. In the sixteen schools comprising the Association there are now about 3,000 scholars and 200 teachers. Mr. Cheshire mentioned that at one school several old teachers, whose time is now much occupied with important public work, have come forward with their help and experience to fill vacant places. The Rev. A. W. Fox, President of the Sunday School Association, and the Rev. H. W. Stephenson, of Loughborough, addressed the meeting, and music was contributed by Hurst Street friends. The Rev. H. Warnock, of Walsall, is president for the current year.

Stockport.—The annual interchange of pulpits among the Free Churches of the town took place on Sunday last, and for the third time St. Petersgate Church was included in the exchange. The Primitive Methodist minister, the Rev. William Barker, preached at St. Petersgate, and the Unitarian Minister, the Rev. H. E. Perry at Bethesda Chapel.

Suffolk Village Mission.—Another pleasant gathering in connection with the Mission took place on Monday, January 15, when the congregation and members of the minister's class at Framlingham were hospitably entertained by the Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Sands. Some of the members kindly helped to provide the tea, after which small tokens of goodwill were given by "Santa Claus" to those assembled. A very pleasant evening closed with a few appropriate words from the minister.

A PROHIBITION CHRONICLE.

In spite of the great advance which has been made towards the prohibition of the drink traffic in various parts of the world, it has hitherto been no one's special business to collect and distribute information concerning the movement for the benefit of writers and speakers as well as the general public. The International Record, the first copy of which is just to hand, is intended to supply this need, and the fact that Mr. Guy Hayler, author of 'Prohibition Advance in All Lands,' is acting as honorary Editor will be sufficient assurance to temperance workers as to the comprehensive character and accuracy of the information published in its columns. The Prohibition movement is making astonishing progress, and the interesting surveys in The International Record encourage most optimistic predictions for the future, especially in regard to the American Continent. "By means of the Canadian Temperance Act," the leading article points out, "Local Veto was extensively adopted. Each Province in Canada has now Prohibition with the single exception of Quebec ; yet even there 84 per cent of the townships have no licence. In the United States the progress is perhaps even more startling. Nine years ago there were three Prohibition States. To-day there are no less than twenty-three States—and Alaska—where the people have adopted State-wide Prohibition ; and if the counties, cities, and towns of the other States are added, then fully 60 per cent of the entire population and 80 per cent of the territory is free from the common sale of intoxicating liquors. It is not in the nature of exaggeration to say that by 1920 it is expected the whole of the United States will be under Prohibition."

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, MISS E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. CANN & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

HUCKABACK TOWELLING in bundles of Remnants. Will make six full-size Bedroom Towels, only 6*s* (postage 6*d*.). Send postcard for Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

COLEMAN'S R.T.B. Renowned Temperance Beverage.

THE IDEAL HEALTH DRINK. THE NEW INVIGORATOR.

A Delightful, Exhilarating, Non-Alcoholic Beverage.

Contains the principal ingredient used in the manufacture of Sanatogen.

The use of alcohol is terribly seductive, especially to those who fly to the sideboard for little sips of alcohol because they are intensely miserable. The greatest want of the age has been a satisfying non-alcoholic beverage, and at last we have it in Coleman's R.T.B.

Are you willing to Test it? Strongly recommended by Doctors and the Clergy.

It will refresh you. You can drink Coleman's R.T.B. with cold or hot water, or any kind of mineral water. A bottle at 1*s*. 9*d*. (a Champagne Quart) will make 25 half-pints, which make the cost of the drinks less than a penny each. It is a powerful nerve stimulant, but has no after depressing effect like alcohol. It exhilarates, invigorates, and stimulates. It stops the craving for spirits. It is a magnificent tonic for those who are 'run down' and not feeling quite well. The more you drink the better you are. It can be given to children with advantage.

TO SPENCER, LAYTON & CO., BRUNDALL, near NORWICH.
Kindly send me a sample of Coleman's R.T.B. I enclose 6*d*. for postage and packing herewith. SEND THIS FORM.

Name .....

Address .....

Sold in bottles at 1*s*. and 1*s*. 9*d*. per bottle.

AGENTS WANTED. INQUIRER.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, January 27, 1917.
* Regarding Advertisement Rates see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3892. NEW SERIES, No. 995.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors and Friends will be held at Dr. Williams's Library, Gordon Square, London, W.C., at 12.30 P.M., on TUESDAY, February 13, 1917, to receive the Report and Accounts, elect three Managers, appoint Officers, and transact other Business.

W. H. DRUMMOND, Acting Secretary.
23 Cannon Place, Hampstead,
London, N.W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Fcap. 8vo, 64 pages, cloth, gilt edges with ribbon, 1s. net; paper covers, 3d. net (postage 1d.).

For those who Mourn.

Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved.

Edited by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

For Freedom and Right.

Booklet in Case: Readings, Prayers, Hymns for Men on Active Service.

Price 6*d.* net.

Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK, 1917.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.

Roan, gilt edges, 1*s.* 6*d.* net; by post, 1*s.* 7*d.*

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1917.

Price 1*s.* net; by post, 1*s.* 2*d.*

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

4. Rev. W. L. SCHROEDER, M.A., of Halifax.
11. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.
18. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.
25. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE ATHENÆUM completed with the December Number a series of papers the object of which was to set forth not only the changes made in the direction of our national activities during the War, but also the modifications in thought and outlook. The papers are not primarily concerned with future policy and developments, though they may, perhaps, indicate the lines upon which the future appears to be shaping itself.

The following is the complete List :—

No. 1. The War and Education. By A. G. [September.
„ 2. The War and National Temperance. By H. G. Chancellor, M.P. [September.
„ 3. The War and Women. By M. S. Reeves. [October.
„ 4. Agriculture and the War. By Arthur W. Ashby. [October.
„ 5. The War and Wages. By R. Page Arnot. [November.
„ 6. The War and Labour. By A. G. [November.
„ 7. The War and Wealth. By X. [December.
„ 8. The War and Religion. By H. G. Wood. [December.

Copies of THE ATHENÆUM containing the above may be had price 1*s.* each, by post 1*s.* 1½*d.*, or the papers separately 1*d.* each, by post 1½*d.*, from

The Publisher, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:
H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

Crown 8vo, 216 pp. 2s. 6d. net.

ETHICAL & RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS OF THE WAR.

Addresses by Prof. GILBERT MURRAY, Sir HENRY JONES, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, Prof. J. H. MUIRHEAD, Dr. P. H. WICKSTEED, Principal L. P. JACKS, and others.

Edited by Dr. J. E. CARPENTER.

"The general value of this little book, beyond the particular merit of its constituent parts, is that it comes from the Extreme Left in English Thought, both in politics and religion."—The Spectator.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, February 4.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. Dr. HITCHCOCK.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. J. W. GALE.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. R. W. SORENSEN; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. W. L. SCHROEDER, M.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Lieut.-Col. Rev. C. S. BULLOCK.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. A. W. FOX, M.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

MARRIAGES.

BREWITT-TAYLOR—ELLIS.—On January 27, at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, by the Rev. H. Gow, Raymond Brewitt-Taylor, M.B., younger son of C. H. Brewitt-Taylor of China, to Evelyn, youngest daughter of Henry Ellis of Potter's Bar.

HOLT—THOMSON CLAY.—On January 31, in Edinburgh, Alfred Holt, son of the late Alfred Holt of Liverpool, to Jean, daughter of A. Thomson Clay, W.S., of Edinburgh.

DEATHS.

HARDING.—On Friday, January 26, at 18 Antill Road, Bow, Joseph Harding, in his 78th year.

HASLAM.—On January 28, at White Bank, Bolton, William Haslam, aged 72 years. Cremated at Manchester Crematorium on Thursday, February 1.

THOMSON.—On January 27, at Lady Murray's Hospital, Le Treport, of wounds received on January 22, Second-Lieut. Ronald Thomson, R.E, 185th Tunnelling Co., second son of the late Andrew Thomson and Mrs. Thomson, Melton House, Rotherham, aged 30 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

NURSE ATTENDANT seeks post. Now disengaged. Can lift. 1½ years' Mental experience. Good references.—BISS, Darlington Road, Bathwick, Bath.

CAPABLE, well-educated Unitarian LADY desires post as Secretary, Companion, or any Position of Trust. Highest references.—Apply in first instance to S. G., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 51
THE MORAL VALUE OF NEUTRALITY . . 53
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 54
VERSE 54
CORRESPONDENCE:—
New Pictures at the National Gallery . 54
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
Dr. Carpenter on Early Christianity . . 55
The National Spirit of Japan . . 56
MEMORIAL NOTICE:—
Mr. W. D. Cliff 56
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 56
Letters from our Sailors and Soldiers 57
The Hostel at Essex Hall . . 58
South-East Wales Unitarian Society. . . 58
Men and Movements 58
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 59
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 60

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.*

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE Prime Minister has chosen once again to make an important pronouncement by means of a press interview. In cases where the precision of official language is not required it has the advantage of riveting the attention of a large public. Certainly the distant parts of the Empire will be encouraged by his frank way of taking them into his confidence about the hopes and purposes which gather round the approaching Imperial War Council "The people of the Dominions know," Mr. Lloyd George said to Mr. Keith Murdoch, "that I am not a Jingo. My record contains no journeys into flamboyant Imperialism. Yet I regard this Council as marking the beginning of a new epoch in the history of the Empire. The war has changed us. Heaven knows, it has taught us more than we yet understand. It has opened a new age for us, and we want to go into that new age together with our fellows overseas just as we have come through the darkness together, and shed our blood and treasure together."

MR. LLOYD GEORGE went on to point out that the immediate purpose of the Conference is not to discuss constitutional questions which may arise after the war, but to take effective measures for the prosecution of the war and the settlement of terms of peace. "Nothing," he said, "affecting the Dominions, the conduct of the war, or the negotiations of peace will be excluded from its purview. There will, of course, be domestic questions which each part of the Empire must settle for itself—questions such as recruiting in the United Kingdom, or home legislation. Such domestic matters will be our only reservation. But we propose that everything else should be, so to speak, on the table." Among special topics which will come up for discussion mention was made of the fate of the German colonies, the problems of demobilisation, the migration of our own people to other parts of the Empire, the settlement of soldiers on the land and commerce and industry after the war.

* * *

To the question whether he was sanguine about the future of the Empire Mr. Lloyd George replied in terms of glowing confidence:—

> If we see the war through I certainly am. You do not suppose that the great combination of peoples who make up the Empire can have stood stedfastly together, with their Allies, in order to discredit and overthrow the most brutal and inhuman machine for the destruction of human liberties which the world has ever seen, and not have discovered a new bond of unity and a new ground of friendship. We stand at this moment on the verge of the greatest liberation which the world has seen since the French Revolution. And do you tell me that the peoples who have stood together and staked literally everything in order to bring that liberation about are not going to find some way of perpetuating that unity afterwards on an equal basis? I am certain that they will.

* * *

The Westminster Gazette uses exactly the right word when it says that we read of the salute of the Allied flags in Athens last Monday with satisfaction but with no pleasure. The pity of it is that such an act of reparation, humiliating as it must have been for many proud men, should have been necessary. The scene in the Zappeion Square at Athens, in full view of the Acropolis, was evidently a striking one. By such an act conspirators do not lose their sullenness, and the suspicious elements in the population are not at once turned into friends, but we hope that it marks the end of the régime of sordid intrigue which has debased the mind of Europe. Much has been said about the failure of the diplomacy of the Allies to deal effectively with the court and military party in Greece. If, however, a settlement has been reached without plunging the country into the horrors of civil war, history may see just cause for a revision of the popular verdict.

* * *

GENERAL SMUTS received a great welcome on his arrival at Pretoria from the seat of war in East Africa. He confessed that the difficulties of the campaign against the German coloured troops with their tough fighting qualities had been greater than he had anticipated; but he had been surprised beyond measure at the splendid co-operation of the mixed forces which he had commanded. South Africa, who had contributed the main share, might always be proud of her sons. Yet what gave him the greatest pleasure was that these boys were gentlemen. "I have never seen better behaved troops in my life," he said, "than the young gentlemen who fought under me in East Africa, and if you want a certificate of character for them go to the numerous German women and children scattered over that barbarous country. Ask them what they think of South Africans. They will tell you." That is a tribute which will not be forgotten, and none of us can read it without exultant pride.

* * *

IT is a healthy sign that President Wilson's endorsement of a League of Nations to enforce Peace is being subjected to a good deal of critical examination in his own country as well as elsewhere. As we pointed out last week there is danger in some quarters that the emotional appeal of a grandiose idea may make men impatient of the doubts and hesitations of political wisdom. If we may judge from the short report of a speech by Senator Root in The Times he has felt it his duty to point out that there would be serious difficulties in any proposal to commit the United States to enter a convention or treaty with the other civilised countries of the world which would bind the United States to go to war without the people of the United States having an opportunity to say whether they would go to war or not. "What I understand by it," he said, "is that a convention shall be made by which all civilised nations shall agree with all their power to stand behind the maintenance of peace thus agreed upon, and if peace be infringed, then, under the sanction of that agreement, each nation shall determine what is its duty towards the maintenance of that peace."

* * *

IT will be observed that this is a very serious limitation of the proposal, for it throws every country back at a time of crisis upon its own independent political judgment. In other words there cannot be any binding agreement to go to war to enforce peace, simply because public opinion might refuse to keep the promise in cases where no national interest is clearly involved. As Mr. Root says, "Agreement or no agreement, when the times comes the people of the United States will not go into any war, and nobody can get them into any war, until they are in favour of fighting for something. And nothing can be so bad as to make a treaty and then to break it."

* * *

THOUGH Lord Cromer was an old man, and he has left a record of magnificent public service, his death is a serious loss to the country. He was chairman of the Dardanelles Commission, and no one was so well qualified as he to give advice on the problems of the Eastern Mediterranean which must come up shortly for settlement. He will be remembered always as the maker of Modern Egypt, perhaps the greatest achievement of administrative genius of modern times. He found the country broken by terrible burdens and hopelessly corrupt. He left it with its prosperity and happiness firmly based upon sound finance and impartial law. Of course the massive strength of Lord Cromer's work and the exceptional difficulties with which he had to cope raised up a company of critics and detractors. For several years Mr. Wilfrid Scawen Blunt employed his erratic genius in pungent attacks upon his administration. Others complained that he did not pay sufficient attention to native sentiment and the need of popular education. But the fact remains that he succeeded magnificently where other men would have failed, and like many another just man before him his name was one of fear to the wrong-doer. He had reason to be proud of the story of a peasant woman in a remote part of Egypt who told her oppressor, "At Cairo there is the man called Cromer, and he will give me justice."

* * *

BUT the best account of what he did for Egypt is contained in a passage of the noble speech which he made at Cairo on the eve of his departure. It deserves to be accepted as a classical expression of the benefits of English government. We may add that Lord Cromer knew that all these things are at issue in the present war. He said:—

> Has there been no moral advancement? Is this country any longer governed, as was formerly the case, exclusively by the use of the whip? Is not forced labour a thing of the past? Has not the accursed institution of slavery practically ceased to exist? Is it not a fact that every individual, from the highest to the lowest, is now equal in the eye of the law; that thrift is encouraged; that the most humble member of society can reap the fruits of his own labour and industry; that justice is no longer bought and sold; that every one is free, perhaps, some think, too free, to express his opinions; that King Backsheesh has been dethroned from high places, and now only lingers in the purlieus and byways of administration; that the fertilising water of the Nile is distributed impartially to prince and peasant alike; that the sick man is tended in a well-equipped hospital; that the criminal and the lunatic are no longer treated like wild beasts; that even the lot of the brute creation has not escaped the eyes of the reformer; that solidarity of interests between the Governors and the governed is recognised in theory and in practice; that every act of administration, even if at times mistaken, for none is infallible, bears the mark of honesty of purpose, and an earnest desire to secure the well-being of the population; and, further, that the funds, much reduced in amount, now taken from the pockets of the taxpayers, instead of being for the most part spent on useless palaces and other objects in which they are in no degree interested, are devoted to purposes which are a real benefit to the country? If all these, and many other points to which I could allude, do not constitute some moral advancement, then, of a truth, I do not know what the word "morality" implies.

* * *

THE Report of the Speaker's Committee on Electoral Reform is a telling illustration of the possibilities of common action which exist among men, when they lay aside differences of party and come together to discuss what is best for the country. The Report reveals a large measure of agreement upon matters, which usually arouse keen political passion. By the mere flux of time many of them have become ripe for decision, and sensible men, even when they do not like them, feel that it is no longer wise or even fair to resist them. Thus the Report includes recommendations for the redistribution of seats, for some measure of proportional representation, for the severe limitation of plural voting, for the holding of all elections on one day and the reduction of election expenses, and for a conservative instalment of woman suffrage, though the last has not been accepted unanimously by the Committee. It is probable that very few of these questions can be dealt with by the present House of Commons; but in any case the Report is an important landmark in the evolution of democratic government. On most of these questions we can never sink back into the old ruts of controversy. So far as argument is concerned their victory is won.

* * *

LAST week we had to announce the gracious gift of £200 by our Unitarian friends in America to the Hostel at Essex Hall. To-day our pleasure and gratitude are doubled by the receipt of a gift of the same amount for the work of our Belgian Hospital Fund. We can only speed our thanks across the sea to 25 Beacon Street, Boston, and the big-hearted man, Dr. Samuel Eliot, who presides there. At the same time we promise our American friends that every penny of their money will be well spent, and to whatever department of our work it goes, whether the Military Hospitals, or the Maternity Home in Calais, or the School Colonies for homeless Belgian children, it will carry with it a message of sympathy and goodwill and personal friendship.

THE MORAL VALUE OF NEUTRALITY.

WE are exhorted continually at the present time to cultivate a sensitive concern for the good opinion of neutral peoples. It is right that we should wish to stand well with our neighbours, and the better the cause for which we contend the more anxious we are that they should not misjudge or misunderstand us. For one thing there is something stimulating in moral sympathy which puts a girdle round the earth; for another they themselves miss so much if they stand aloof cold, calculating and silent, while we bleed in a cause which is theirs as well as ours. We want them to fight for us with their hearts if not with their hands. But we doubt whether whirlwind campaigns of publicity and newspaper "stunts" to promote sympathy with the Allies are of much use. We have no wish to take a leaf out of the book of Count Bernstorff. As soon as German aims cease to be blatant they will be withered by the contempt of mankind; but blatancy in the case of men with a good conscience and noble aims is a method of foolishness. If here and there this puts us at a disadvantage in the eyes of "special correspondents," we are quite prepared to accept the risk rather than lapse into boasting and the bad manners which are inseparable from loud advertisement of our own virtues. We want to be on excellent terms with all neutral peoples, but we do not want to pay them the poor compliment of showing nervousness about their opinion of us. Let them judge us by what we are and what we do.

There is another aspect of this cult of the Neutral about which it seems desirable to say a few words. It is assumed by some people that neutrality in the present struggle confers upon a nation a special claim to virtue. While the belligerents are soiled by envy and greed and distracted by ignoble passion the Neutral is supposed to live in some heavenly region above the battle, where he can possess his soul in peace and exercise impartial judgment. It has even been suggested that a court of Neutrals is the only proper body to arrange a just and lasting peace. This idea has inspired a letter by Principal Selbie, which appeared in The Manchester Guardian last week. It is sufficiently plausible to merit a short examination. He writes as follows:—"'The world can be at peace only when there is a sense of justice.' These words by Mr. Wilson are significant. It is but a step from justice to revenge. In view of this, civilisation has decreed that neither combatants in a conflict can lawfully prescribe and adminster their own conception of justice. This is the legitimate function of independent and neutral authorities. Obviously peace is only possible following the verdict of a jury of the representatives of neutral nations."

We desire to treat Dr. Selbie's opinion with all respect, but it is a time not for compliments but for plain speech, and so we must say with all emphasis that his argument seems to us to be rooted in fallacy. Like many another pious aspiration it crumbles into dust when it is confronted with the facts. We do not suppose that Dr. Selbie himself, or any other man capable of calm and rational judgment on the situation, imagines for a moment that his idea of a neutral court, to whose judgment the belligerents would meekly submit, can be realised. Does it, then, serve any useful purpose to talk in the air? In present circumstances many men have schooled themselves to silence about their pet theories and their far-away dreams, because they know that if they squander thought unfruitfully their good intentions will not save them from being guilty of an act of public mischief.

But our chief objection to Dr. Selbie's suggestion is not that it is untimely because it is impossible. Were it possible we should cordially dislike and distrust it. We believe that he has fallen into the error of confusing political neutrality with moral impartiality, whereas there is no necessary connection between the two things, and as a matter of fact it seldom exists. Suppose a court of neutral nations could be constituted to judge between ourselves and the Central Powers, have we the slightest reason to suppose that it would be wise and fair and filled with political wisdom? It would be composed chiefly of small nations, with their lack of experience in dealing with the large affairs of the world, their own jealousies and fears, and probably a fatal tendency to compromise in order to ward off the anger of their big neighbours. If we want a thoroughly bad peace we could probably have it on these terms. Neutral nations still exist in the sense that they take no active part in the struggle, but there are no impartial nations left in the world. Where are we to look for the calm judicial mind and complete disinterestedness? Is it possible even to desire that such detachment should exist?

This brings us to state briefly our chief reason for rejecting the plea that neutral opinion has any special moral value at the present time, and therefore ought to have a decisive influence in framing the terms of peace. Dr. Selbie's contention rests apparently upon the belief that we are in the position of litigants engaged in a squalid quarrel, while the neutral represents the serene dignity of Law. In no way does this picture correspond with reality. We are contending for things about which compromise is impossible and indecision would be a crime. Will it be said that a man cannot resist aggression or champion the cause of freedom without losing his sense of justice? Is the spectator who pleads reasons of conscience or political prudence for not interfering with the murderer the best judge of the rights of the victim? Is it a holy and honourable office after other men have shed their blood in order to ransom humanity to assume airs of detached and lofty virtue towards their racked and passion-stained lives? We know that such an attitude is contemptible, beyond the power of words to express it, in a few people who still practice the vice of detachment in our midst; but in neutral lands we believe that for the most part sympathy with our sufferings and our aims is too sensitive and too intelligent for them even to wish to be judges over us in a cause which is theirs as well as ours.

For valid reasons political neutrality will probably survive to the end of the war, and wherever it exists we desire to treat it with all possible friendliness. But after two-and-a-half years the issues of this struggle for the future of civilisation have become so clear that moral neutrality has lost all claim upon our respect, and we are entitled to treat it as the enemy of freedom and justice and every good thing. When the day comes for us to arrange terms of peace and devise a better settlement for the world we hope that we shall have the co-operation of all friendly peoples, not because they are neutrals but because they are men. Their help to us in forming a right judgment will be of value just in proportion as they have had the courage to abandon the pose of indifference, and entering with us into the heart of the conflict and sharing with us some of its bitter and cleansing pain have earned the right to speak with us on equal terms about the claims of justice. That the moral neutral can never do, for he stands disgraced outside the pale.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

So, on the bloody sand, Sohrab lay dead;
And the great Rustum drew his horseman's cloak
Down o'er his face, and sate by his dead son.
As those black granite pillars, once high-rear'd
By Jemshid in Persepolis, to bear
His house, now mid their broken flights of steps
Lie prone, enormous, down the mountain side—
So in the sand lay Rustum by his son.
And night came down over the solemn waste,
And the two gazing hosts, and that sole pair,
And darken'd all; and a cold fog, with night,
Crept from the Oxus. Soon a hum arose,
As of a great assembly loosed, and fires
Began to twinkle through the fog; for now
Both armies moved to camp, and took their meal;
The Persians took it on the open sands
Southward, the Tartars by the river marge;
And Rustum and his son were left alone.

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

ALL the wonders of Greek civilisation heaped together are less wonderful than is the simple book of Psalms—the history of the human soul in relation to its Maker. Bishop Grafton's text, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord" at St. Paul's Cathedral after the Great Fire was again the text after the Peace of Ryswick. The first verse of the 137th—"By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion"—comforted John, King of France, when he was taken captive at Poictiers. The second verse of the 146th—"While I live will I praise the Lord,"—was quoted by the Earl of Strafford as he stood on the scaffold. The sixth verse of the 149th—"Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand"—was the text of Wishart's sermon before the Battle of Bothwell Bridge. These are remarkable instances, yet they do not represent a thousandth part of the spell exercised by special Psalms, and particular verses of them, throughout the entire period of English history. The first verse of Psalm 24—"The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof"—was the motto chosen by Prince Albert for the Great Exhibition of 1851. The first verse of the 27th—"The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?"—is the motto of the University of Oxford.

MACAULAY.

O THOU gracious and gentle and condescending God, Thou God of peace, Father of mercy, God of all comfort; see, I lament before Thee the evil of my heart; I acknowledge that I am too much disposed to anger, jealousy, and revenge, to ambition and pride, which often give rise to discord and bitter feelings between me and others. Too often have I offended and grieved both Thee, O long-suffering Father, and my fellow-men. Oh forgive me this sin, and suffer me to partake of the blessing which Thou hast promised to the peace-makers, who shall be called the children of God. Bestow on me, O Lord, a genial spirit and unwearied forbearance; a mild, loving, patient heart; kindly looks, pleasant, cordial speech and manners in the intercourse of daily life; that I may give offence to none, but as much as in me lies live in charity with all men. AMEN.

VERSE.

TO MY LITTLE DEAF BROTHER.

Died December 16, 1916.

SOFT little hands so gently laid
On my tired head,
And loving lips
That pressed a tender kiss.
Such anxious eyes
At seeing us departing;
Then quietly smiled a
"Welcome back again."
So brave and cheerful
And so busy always,
Until too tired
To sit up any more;
And, though you never heard
Our joys and sorrows,
Being so quick to see
You saw and felt them all.

M. T. MOTT.

THOU, above our thoughts and ways,
Knowest how we rise and fall:
Lord of ages and of days,
Hear Thy people when they call.

Oft, allured by pride and sense,
Stood we not as men should stand;
Lord, how weak is our defence
When we loose us from Thy hand!

Lord of ages and of days,
World and system, star and sun,
Link our ways unto Thy ways,
Bid our thoughts and Thine be one.

Hope and fear, and joy and pain!
Lord, uncertain is our lot!
All our strivings are in vain
If Thy arm sustain us not.

Hand that mad'st this mighty plan,
Love which art the Life of all,
Word which wast ere time began—
Hold Thy people lest they fall.

H. H. JOHNSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

NEW PICTURES AT THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I have no doubt that many of your readers are aware that five pictures recently added to the National Gallery are now on view there. Three of these are by Rossetti, the other two by Ford Madox Brown, and those who can spare half-an-hour to look at the works of two of our great nineteenth-century artists will be amply rewarded by a feast of exquisite colour in Rossetti, on the one hand, and by the interest which always stirs one in noting the faithful attention to drawing and detail in Ford Madox

Brown, on the other. It is especially interesting to see examples from these masters side by side, as Rossetti, the greater of the two, owed much to Ford Madox Brown, whose work he greatly admired and under whom he studied. Ford Madox Brown was born in 1821, at a time when painting was at a low ebb in England, a time of affectation and insincerity in art. He protested, by his work, against this misuse of talent, and when still quite young he painted a portrait which he called 'A Modern Holbein,' and this picture was, in fact, the first of a new movement which led up to the splendid art of the nineteenth century in England. As Giotto did in the thirteenth century, so Ford Madox Brown did in his time, i.e., tried to paint what he actually saw. His paintings may not, and often do not, please, but examine them carefully and see with what care he adhered to the truth in what he produced. He is said by one writer to have "ceaselessly searched after truth to Nature, avoiding made rules and conventional tricks." In the 'King Lear and Cordelia,' now at the National Gallery, every detail is conscientiously painted, even to the tiny flowers falling from the hand of the sleeping king, and to the gleam of light touching the sea in the distance beyond the Dover cliffs.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti, born twenty-seven years later than Ford Madox Brown, is perhaps the greatest colourist of our nineteenth-century painters. He worked as a young man in Ford Madox Brown's studio, and the still life studies which were there enforced and were extremely distasteful to Rossetti, no doubt, stood him in good stead at a later period, as may be seen in his beautiful painting of accessories. The 'Monna Vanna' and 'The Beloved,' now on view, are two of Rossetti's masterpieces, painted at the best time of his life. In later years his colouring was a little less pleasing, though always magnificent, and the type of beauty which he so loved was slightly over emphasised. Mr. Stephens, Rossetti's life-long friend, wrote an appreciation of 'The Beloved,' from which I quote a few sentences. "'The Beloved' dates from 1863, and, as regards its splendour and colour and the passion of its design, need not fear comparison with the greatest works of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries in Venice." After a detailed description of the picture, which space forbids here, the writer ends with this: "Excepting one or two later works of the master 'The Beloved' appears to me to be the finest production of his genius. It indicates the consummation of Rossetti's powers in the highest order of modern art, and is in perfect harmony with that poetic inspiration which is found in all his best pictures. This example can only be called 'Venetian' because of the splendid colouring which obtains in it." —Yours, &c.,

KATHARINE F. LAWFORD.

Wandsworth Common, S.W.
January, 1917.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

DR. CARPENTER ON EARLY CHRISTIANITY.

PHASES OF EARLY CHRISTIANITY. By J. Estlin Carpenter, D.Litt. London: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

To the number of goodly volumes already given to the studious world by Dr. Estlin Carpenter there is now added one that fully sustains, and indeed expands, his high reputation as a scholar and a sympathetic expositor of different types of religious thought. Under the title 'Phases of Early Christianity' he sums up, in the form of six lectures originally delivered in the United States, a wealth of research, continued over many years, in the fields of Christian history and philosophy belonging to the period 100-250 A.D. Those who are at all familiar with Dr. Carpenter's books will be prepared for "lectures" packed in every paragraph with matters of moment. It is no small part of one's interest, in following the course he marks out for us, to observe with what singular skill he introduces a crowd of facts and phrases culled from studies widespread and recondite; one almost succumbs to the notion that learning so lightly wielded is easily retainable—a notion that is speedily corrected, however, when on a second perusal the reader finds how little comparatively has been securely retained.

But, obviously, the use of such a book is not to be read once, or even twice, and then put on the shelf as done with. Here is material for frequent reference. Here is a quarry for the investigator who is in earnest about Christian origins and development, in which he will find many a precious vein of ore. The discoveries made in recent years of usages, religious ideas and customs, and pregnant phraseology, current in the non-Christian circles amidst which the new faith took root and grew, are, of course, utilised here to the full, and much that has been considered peculiar to Christianity, much that has perplexed the ordinary mind when contrasting the pictures of the New Testament times with those of the Church a few centuries later, finds explanation in the natural interplay of that distant age's varied life.

A word that tempts the critic of such a book is "monumental," and if by that word is conveyed a sense of great toils successfully carried through to a striking and permanent result, it may be allowed to pass here. But if so, an expression once uttered by the author's venerable uncle, the late Russell Lant Carpenter, must be added: "monumental but not sepulchral." For to the reader who catches but a little of the spirit of the book there is nothing dead either in its theme or in its unfolding. Christianity, we are wisely reminded by Dr. Carpenter, is neither "a system of doctrine ultimately embodied in creeds, or a scheme of ecclesiastical government under the control of a Church. Beliefs and organisations both enter into it; they are the products of its energy, the modes of its self-expression. But Christianity is first of all a life; it is the life, here and hereafter, of those who may be designated in the language of Jesus 'sons of God,' or, in the imaginative terminology of the Apostle Paul, 'limbs of Christ.'"

Viewed in this way, the author's subject takes on an intense significance. We read of one leader of thought after another—Ignatius, Marcion, Tertullian, Irenæus, Clement, Origen, Cyprian; we observe the successive turns of men's conceptions with respect to the Person of the Saviour and the means by which salvation is to be effected—the Church, the Sacraments, Gnosis, Revelation; but, if we share our instructor's temper we are continually looking behind this foreground of prominent names and emergent ideas and practices to that dim background—dim but how pathetically real—of the countless mortals like ourselves who, in this many-troubled world, were seeking a haven for the soul. It is this regard, and only this, that can redeem from tedium and barrenness the task of recalling once more the records that have been so often dissected by busy antiquaries. And it is this, and only this, the sense of vivid human life, pulsing through and through with hopes and fears, and sorrows unspeakable, and joys inexplicable, that can move to fruitful effort those who still believe in Christianity as "a life," who learn from the story of the past to derive hope amid the facts of the present.

For what does that past teach us more clearly than this: Life, whether of the individual or of the community, profits, and indeed persists, by assimilating and utilising each fresh gift of available pabulum. The spiritual impulse given by the great Founder of the faith, while going to the hearts of men with a quite new power, well defined as a "new birth," had from the first to reckon with its environment. Jewish, Greek, Oriental influences obviously affected it at once and enduringly. By and by the forces of Christendom, which had taken on organic form in the presence of such influences, became in large degree heir to the imperialism of Rome, and the Church accepted into its system an abundant deposit from the cults long popular in the Empire. And thus its progress has been in successive ages. "Again and again in its history," says Dr. Carpenter, "Christianity has been confronted with powerful new influences in the field of thought which threatened its supremacy, if not its very existence. Again and again it has assimilated them and survived." He gives as instances the impact of the Aristotelian philosophy in the thirteenth century, of the "new learning" in the sixteenth, and of scientific discovery in the nineteenth. The full effect of the last of these, it is true, is far from being worked out as yet; and to this transforming factor has certainly now to be added those new conceptions of human society as it ought to be, in the home, the State, and the family of nations, which dawn with brilliant prophecy even amid the awful storm-clouds of the present war. Challenged as never before, will "the life" in Christianity rise equal to its opportunities, its responsibilities? No easy answer is possible; but such studies as these, if we understand them aright, immensely fortify the confidence and fructify the will of the student. If, as is evident, they appear for the moment detached from the moment's pressing duties, none the less they are needful, especially for those who are resolute to help our stricken generation "out of the wreck to rise." It is, therefore, with sincere gratitude and homage to a great teacher that we accept so rich a gift.

W. G. T.

The National Spirit of Japan: A Contribution to Spiritual Understanding between Nations. By S. Honaga. London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. 1*s.* net.

The purpose of this interesting little volume by Prof. Honaga of Tokyo, is to describe "some of the most important features of Japanese life at the present day in its international relations," and to "point out the necessity of international morality." Information about the "national spirit of Japan," and the view which a Japanese writer takes of the present world-problems deserves particular attention at a time when the Japanese are among our allies, and the need of mutual understanding and sympathy among the nations is so deeply felt. The author is aware that each race must make its own special contribution to the progress of mankind, and urges that every country should seek "the wider and firmer spiritual foundations which will assuredly establish a new patriotism based on a full recognition both of national and international claims and relations." He sums up his conclusions in the following words: "What alone will make the solution possible is that every nation should form a new conception of its fellows; first of all learning to understand them spiritually, and then finding the common bond which lies at the root of the different thoughts and beliefs of all peoples." We cordially commend his instructive book to the attention of our readers.

In Mr. P. S. P. Handcock's 'Archæology of the Holy Land' a very useful compendium is given of results of excavation in recent years. The book, which is liberally provided with plans and sketches, is clear and concise, a large amount of information (and some discussion) being given in its nearly 400 pp. The author shows a commendable moderation in regard to conclusions which, resting as they often must on fragmentary evidence, are tempting but hazardous. He has carefully examined the materials supplied by the different bands of explorers, French, German, American, and British; but, as would be expected, he has made special use of the great work by Macalister on the mound of Gezer. It must suffice here to say that Macalister's general view of the sequence of races and types of culture at that spot is certainly supported by results obtained, not only in adjacent southern sites, but also in Samaria, the territory north of the Carmel range, and in the Jordan Valley at Jericho. There is much yet to be settled as to the dates of the successive settlements, but ample evidence exists to illustrate the pre-Canaanite and Canaanite conditions upon and amid which the various and intermittent Hebrew invaders had to build up their own civilisation; while even richer material attests the influences, Philistine, Egyptian, Hellenic, Roman, that in turn brought new features into the scene. The value of such a book for the biblical student is obvious, and occasionally the author emphasizes a critical point—as, for instance, when he firmly repels the apologetic suggestions of literalist interpreters with regard to the Canaanite "Walls of Jericho." The text says that, on being duly marched around by the Israelites, the walls fell down flat. But, in fact, they did not; for a large portion of them are found erect under the debris till this day! (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 10*s.* 6*d.* net.)

A new edition of Mr. J. A. Hobson's 'Evolution of Modern Capitalism' is being issued by the Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd. A long supplementary chapter brings the earlier treatment up to date, and after discussing the economic transformation brought about by the war, in particular its bearings upon the attitude of the State towards industry, and the changes in distribution of wealth, presents a speculative forecast of the problems which will arise when the war is over.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MR. W. D. CLIFF.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. W. D. Cliff of Leeds at the age of 82. He was an honoured member of Mill Hill Chapel. Mr. Cliff (says The Yorkshire Post) was the eldest survivor of the present generation of a family which for many years has been greatly respected as representative of the highest traditions of commercial life. He was the son of the late Mr. Joseph Cliff, of Western Flatts, Wortley, who will still be remembered by many of the older inhabitants of Leeds as one of the most respected public men in the city. Mr. W. D. Cliff, at an early age, was associated with his father and brothers in the sanitary brick works at Wortley, carried on under the style of Joseph Cliff & Sons. The family also commenced and owned the business of the Frodingham Iron and Steel Company (Limited), and the Micklefield Coal and Lime Company (Limited), and Mr. W. D. Cliff was chairman of both companies up to the time of his death. He was for many years Chairman of the Bramley Board of Guardians, and was a justice of the peace for the West Riding, and also for the City of Leeds.

Mr. Cliff married Miss Wade of Halifax, and the celebration of the golden anniversary of their wedding in 1910 was the occasion of a large gathering of relatives and friends. His family have rendered devoted service in connection with the war. His son, Major Herbert Cliff, of the West Riding Regiment, and also a grandson and a nephew, have given their lives for the country. One of his daughters is Commandant of the Gledhow Hospital, and another is helping at a canteen in London. Mr. Cliff leaves a widow, three sons, five daughters, and a number of grandchildren.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

107th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d
Already acknowledged	15,941	13	6
W. H. (third donation) ..	10	0	0
Miss Ruth Nettlefold (eleventh donation)	10	0	0
Cradley Sunday School Elder Scholars, part prize money, per Mrs. Shelley	1	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Edward Chitty (fifth donation)	10	0	0
First Presbyterian Church, Holywood, per the Rev. G. Leonard Phelps	1	0	0
Octagon Girls Friendly Society, Norwich, proceeds of Café Chantant, per Mrs. Mottram (second donation)	5	0	0
Miss A. Fryer (seventh donation)	5	0	0
Melbourne Young People's Guild, per Mrs. Eleanor Wren (second donation) ..	2	0	0
Staff of Haverstock Hill Central Girls' School, per Mrs. Westaway (twentieth donation)	0	8	0
Anonymous (seventh donation)	20	0	0
Northgate End Sunday School, Halifax (seventh donation)	0	13	4
Northgate End Chapel, per Mr. J. Teal (tenth donation)	1	6	3
American Unitarians, through the President of the American Unitarian Association	200	0	0
Master Henry Thew (fourth donation)	0	1	0
	£16,209	7	1

Parcels have been received from: Mrs. Grundy; Miss Mottram; Anon., Liverpool; Miss Joyce Cobb; Miss E. M. Greg; Finchley Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Miss Frances A. Lewin; Anon., Plymouth; Ullet Road Sewing Circle (per Mrs. J. C. Odgers), Liverpool; Rochester Girls' Grammar School; Mrs. Edward Hecht; Mrs. Reginald Wight; Mrs. Rolleston; Mrs. E. M. Creak; Mrs. Lindsay M. Aspland; Redlynch House Work Depot (per Mrs. Robinson); Mrs. Comyns Carr; Anon. (by hand); Mrs. Roscoe; Miss E. A. Evelegh; Rosslyn Hill Ladies Working Party (per Mrs. Cobb); Mrs. Philip Vizard; Miss M. Merton; Mrs. Edmund Grundy; Miss Pilcher; "Two Friends"; Mrs. Johnson; Mrs. Edwin Odgers; Miss Blake; Mrs. Wm. Healey; Mrs. Edwin Ellis; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. V. D. Davis); Mrs. J. H. Green and family; Miss Janet Allan.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Shirts, socks, pants, vests.
Slippers, handkerchiefs.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens, helmets.
Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, backgammon, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais:—

Layettes (on Belgian methods), patterns to be obtained here.
Chemises and flannel petticoats for women.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

WEEKLY NOTES.

I HAVE received the following letter (with a cheque for £200) from the President of the American Unitarian Association:—

DEAR MADAM,—A number of people in the Unitarian Churches in the United States have watched with deep sympathy and interest the labours which you and your fellow-workers have undertaken in behalf of the Belgian wounded and refugees. These friends want to have some small part in these good endeavours. I am taking pleasure in enclosing to you a draft for two hundred pounds for the Belgian Hospital Fund. For purposes of record it can be set down as the gift of "American Unitarians through the President of the American Unitarian Association."

Your friends here have made this contribution not only for the good that the money itself can do, but as an expression of sympathy and of appreciation of the generous helpfulness of their fellow Unitarians in England.

With all good wishes,
Faithfully yours,
SAMUEL A. ELIOT.

It is a very great pleasure to receive this substantial evidence of sympathy from our American friends, and we very gladly welcome their desire to take part in our work.

In the course of a letter just received from the matron of a large hospital for Belgian wounded, she says:—

"I must write once more to tell you of the safe arrival of the Spinal Chair. It came this morning, was unpacked, and this afternoon a man who has a deep wound in his thigh and who hasn't been out of the ward for months went out in it. You can't think what pleasure and excitement it caused; there were many volunteers to push him; and with hot-water bottles and rugs he was beautifully warm and comfortable. It was quite pathetic his enjoyment at getting out again. When the weather is a little warmer, I hope to get the paralysed Adjutant out in it, but he feels the cold so dreadfully. It is very cold here now; we have had very hard frosts and it is bitterly cold in the huts at night. The men are very thankful for all the warm comforts that have been sent."

ROSE ALLEN.

LETTERS FROM OUR SAILORS AND SOLDIERS.

DR. CARPENTER'S Address and the Booklet 'Freedom and Right' have evidently been welcomed very warmly by our sailors and soldiers. A great many more letters have reached Essex Hall during the last week or two. From France, Malta, Salonica, Sinai, from Home Camps and hospitals grateful and friendly letters have come. One writes that he is having a rest after spending days in trenches filled with water, and longs for the time when he may again visit his old Church at Effra Road, Brixton; another rejoices that the President's message reached him although he was seventy miles in the Sinai desert where there was nothing but sand to be seen; a third asks that his writing may be excused as he is in a dug-out with very little light and with the rain coming through the roof; a member of Chowbent Chapel tells of his having seen the Pyramids and of being on his way to Palestine at the time of writing; a gunner, while confessedly not in love with soldiering, finds consolation in seeing men around similarly placed and resolves to put his back into the work and see the struggle through; a Congleton youth who had gained twelve prizes for regular attendance at Sunday school had heard of Dr. Carpenter many times, and was glad to possess his photograph; a soldier doing duty in the far away Bermudas was particularly pleased that "Softly the silent night" had been included in the selection of hymns; and lest those at home should begin to envy the soldier's lot we are reminded by one of them that it is not all honey and sunshine "out here" (in Salonica); but, he adds, "we mean to pull through it all."

Pages could be filled with brief notes and comments similar in many ways to the foregoing samples. Here are two longer letters: one written by W. S. C. from Salonica; the other by a Second Lieutenant, formerly an external student of Manchester College:—

"As time goes on, we can see more clearly than ever that our Cause is just and right, and much as we all detest warfare, there is a satisfaction in knowing that now, if never before, we are fighting for the Common Cause of Freedom and Right. In the firm conviction of the justice of our cause, we fight cheerfully on until our national ideals are attained. Such is the view I take of the situation, and it is in this strain that I write to those at home, for it is they who feel the parting more than we, and it is our duty to write cheerfully, and let them know that we are leading clean lives and that our home life and religious training in our younger days is now standing us in good stead, now that we rely entirely upon ourselves, for life in the army either makes or breaks a man, there is no 'middle.'

"Of course I am not allowed to tell you all about our doings out here, but when I mention that 'we fight cheerfully on,' I really ought to have said we 'work cheerfully on,' for a Field Ambulance is only with the combatants to render immediate aid, whether it be sickness or wounds. However, I am pleased to say our lads are fine workers; and they have already earned for themselves a good name from the highest to the lowest ranks, although we only left England four months ago.

"Regarding the country we are in, it is a grand place for the naturalist; but there is very little spare time in which to closely examine the beauties of Nature, although it is a fine sight to see the effect of the atmospheric conditions on the mountains—the sun giving them the appearance of mountains of gold, whilst a misty day gives them a beautiful bluish tint. We saw very little of the town of Salonica, but what we did see, made us feel proud to be Britons; and it was difficult to imagine that a nation which produced such fine men in olden times should have degenerated to their present position, and profited so little from the teachings of their fellow countrymen.

"I am very pleased to say I am kept well informed as to the doings of our Church, which by the way is in Park Street, Hull, for I get a copy of their magazine Home Fires every month. It is very pleasing indeed to read about the doings of our own Church, and it clearly proves that those we have left behind have not forgotten us.

"I should very much like to accept your cordial invitation to visit the Social Centre at Essex Hall; but for the time being, at any rate, this cannot be; but I trust that, ere long, we shall all be able to pay you a visit, and to thank you, one and all, personally for your kindness to us in trying to make our work lighter by your inspiring talks to us. I trust you will have every success in your venture, and that those who are able will avail themselves of the opportunity to visit you at Essex Hall. I should like to say that it is owing to the good teachings at Park Street Unitarian Church, Hull, that I seem to be able to make the best out of everything—in fact, I owe to its members, more than words can tell."

The Second Lieutenant writes:—

"I must thank you for sending me Dr. Carpenter's cheering letter, and the admirable booklet 'For Freedom and Right.' It is very helpful and encouraging to receive remembrances from those of our own Household of Faith at a time like this. The booklet I think is a most helpful compilation and calculated to satisfy a great need that has long been felt, but never before been adequately met. I could wish that I had been privileged to have such a work with me when I was in France. I hope and expect, however, to return very shortly to my battalion in France, when I assure you, 'For Freedom and Right' will be my constant companion, and I feel sure a perpetual source of inspiration. There come times in the strain and stress of war when one feels far removed, indeed, well nigh cut off, from the old life, from old thoughts, friends, associations, and ambitions, and it is at times like this that your booklet and your letter will be of greatest value. They will help one successfully to combat and to vanquish these feelings and will fill one with new and holy desires, and renewed power to strive after the Right and new affections for all that we cherished of old."

THE HOSTEL AT ESSEX HALL.

WE announced last week that a gift of £200 has been sent by American Unitarians as a mark of their sympathy and goodwill towards the scheme for providing a social centre for our Sailors and Soldiers at Essex Hall. The gift was accompanied by the following letter from Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, the President of the American Unitarian Association, to Dr. J. E. Carpenter, the President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association :—

DEAR DR. CARPENTER,—Your friends and fellow-workers in America have read with much sympathy and interest of the plan to open a Hostel and Social Centre for soldiers and sailors in connection with Essex Hall, and they want to have some small part in furthering that excellent enterprise. I am taking pleasure in enclosing to you a draft for two hundred pounds, which I ask you to expend for the benefit of this enterprise in whatever way and for whatever purpose seems most expedient. For purposes of record it can be set down as the gift of the American Unitarians, through the President of the American Unitarian Association.

While we hope that you will feel entirely at liberty to apply this modest contribution wherever it will do the most good—in the purchase, or the furnishing, or the maintenance of the Hostel, yet I venture to suggest that if more pressing and immediate needs are provided for it might be pleasant to furnish one particular room in the Hostel, to be known as the "American Room." That would perhaps make the donors feel that we had had some special and possibly some permanent part in the promotion of this good work.

The contribution is small in amount, but it carries with it the ardent good wishes of a considerable number of subscribers who wish to pay their tribute to the soldiers and sailors who are with such persistent courage and devotion fighting the battles of freedom and democracy.

With affectionate greetings,
Faithfully yours,
SAMUEL A. ELIOT.

American Unitarian Association,
25 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.
January 10, 1917.

SOUTH-EAST WALES UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

VISIT OF DR. J. E. CARPENTER.

THE Quarterly Business Meeting of the above Society was held in the Highland Place Unitarian Church, Aberdare, on Monday afternoon, January 29, Mr. D. R. Llewellyn, President of the Society, being in the chair. The extremely cold weather conditions which prevailed, and the extra cost now entailed in railway travelling, had a prejudicial effect upon the attendance of delegates from other churches ; nevertheless the great majority of churches affiliated with the Society were represented on the occasion. The Committee's Report was presented to the members, also that of the District Minister of the Society. Both reports recorded a good deal of useful work which had been done since the last meeting of the Society. On the one hand there was that in both reports which gave cause for satisfaction and hope, whilst on the other hand there were things which gave rise to some anxiety, especially at Clydach Vale, where Sunday services have been suspended for some months, and where it seems very doubtful whether they can be restarted again with any reasonable prospect of success. The condition has arisen there owing to causes which were quite unavoidable, and for which there seems to be no remedy, at least just now.

The reports referred with grateful satisfaction to the visit of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association Deputation to Swansea and Cardiganshire, where the autumnal meetings of the Association were held in November last. At the present meeting of the Society the President had the great pleasure of extending a cordial welcome to Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, President, and the Rev. T. P. Spedding, Missionary Agent of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, both of whom were present. Very appreciative reference was made to the excellent work done for our churches by Dr. Carpenter ; also grateful mention of the recent good work done by Mr. Spedding amongst our soldiers. The Committee's Report, too, recorded the sense of the great loss which the Society had sustained through the lamented death of Mrs. Reid of Swansea, a former President of the Society. The Treasurer, Mr. Gomer Ll. Thomas, in presenting his report, was able to make the satisfactory statement that the subscription list for the year had been well maintained, and was quite equal to that of the previous year. There was a substantial balance in hand at the close of the financial year owing to the fact that it had been deemed unnecessary to make so many grants as in the previous year. A Religious Service was held in the church at 4 o'clock, the devotions being led by the Rev. Philemon Moore, Carmarthen, whilst Dr. Carpenter preached a sermon marked by lofty eloquence and deep spiritual fervour which profoundly moved those who were present. It was truly a time of spiritual refreshening and uplift.

A public meeting was held in the church in the evening, and there was a very representative and fairly numerous audience. The President again occupied the chair, the speakers being Dr. Carpenter and the Rev. T. P. Spedding. The delegates and others were hospitably entertained to luncheon and tea by the friends of the Highland Place Church.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

OUR readers should look out for a special announcement of our forthcoming Soldiers' and Sailors' Number, which will be found on our front cover next week. Meanwhile may we repeat our request for information about distinctions gained by any of our men serving with the Forces ?

COPIES of the Special Number which will be published on March 3, will be sent to all the men whose names are recorded at Essex Hall, but we expect that there will be a large demand for extra copies among their relatives and friends at home. We can only supply these if an order is sent in good time to the Manager, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

WE are most unwilling to call attention to any error in the excellent work which is done by our printers at the present time under circumstances of exceptional difficulty ; but in justice to the interesting letter by the Rev. A. Thornhill last week we may mention that he wrote that Germany "not only broke her pledged word but destroyed faith in pact (not fact as printed) and law." The change of one letter makes a considerable difference to the meaning.

A GREAT deal of useful propaganda for the cause of the Allies in the United States is being done by American citizens themselves. We hear in a letter just received from our friend Miss Perkins of Concord, Mass., that Dr. Jacks's article on an 'Interim Religion' has been reprinted from The Hibbert Journal. "Thousands of copies," she writes, "are being sent throughout the country, especially the Middle West, where there seems strangely little interest." The article is issued in pamphlet form under the auspices of "The American Rights League of Massachusetts for upholding the Duty of the Republic in International Relations."

IN the same letter Miss Perkins writes :—"You will probably also have seen of our meeting in protest against the deportation of the Belgians, and tens of thousands of signatures have gone to President Wilson appended to the Protest. There seems no doubt that this last outrage has touched many hearts that have been apparently indifferent. The very name of Slavery ought to be a clarion call to this country."

PROF. G. BONET-MAURY, D.D., so well known to many of our readers, writes from Paris conveying his good wishes to his English Unitarian friends, and re-affirming his confidence in the victory of the nations allied for the defence and protection of Right and Liberty. It will be remembered that Dr. Martineau wrote a preface to the English translation of Prof. Bonet-Maury's 'Early Sources of English Unitarian Christianity.'

WE note with great pleasure that Temp. Lieut.-Commander Bernard Henry Ellis of the Royal Naval Division, who did such splendid service in the battle of the Ancre, has been awarded a D.S.O. "When the attack was held up by heavy machine-gun fire, he pushed forward with some men and made a reconnaissance of the final position under very heavy fire. Later, he assumed command of and handled his battalion with marked courage and ability." Lieut.-Commander Ellis is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ellis of Potter's Bar and grandson of the late Prof. Henry Morley.

THE same number of The Gazette contains the announcement that his brother Temp. Lieut. Edward Vezian Ellis, R.N.V.R. has been awarded the Military Cross. "He led a counter bombing attack down the enemy second line trench, which had been only partially captured by our troops, and was instrumental in capturing a number of prisoners."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Birmingham.—The Old Meeting Church has, for the first time in its history, elected as Warden a lady, in the person of Miss Clara Martineau. Miss Martineau, who is a member of the Birmingham City Council, is the only daughter of the late Sir Thomas Martineau, is greatly interested in all matters affecting the welfare of our churches, and is eminently qualified to fill the position. A number of ladies were also appointed as "sidesmen" to take the places of members absent on national service.

Blackpool, South Shore.—At the annual meeting of the Unitarian Church on January 28, presided over by Mr. J. J. Bowles, an interesting report was presented by Mr. J. Cunliffe, the secretary, which showed that, notwithstanding the war, the attendance at the services had been about the same as usual, that nine new members had been admitted, that a Sale of Work had realised £80, that £75 had been contributed towards the reduction of the debt on the Church building, that £6 9*s.* had been raised for the benefit of various war funds, that the ladies had made up 75 garments for the soldiers, and that the members of the War Savings Association now number 45, as compared with 23 in July last. The report expressed thankfulness for the labours of the Sewing Society and the zeal of the minister, the Rev. B. C. Constable, whose services had been much appreciated, and hoped that the building debt balance of £165 might be wiped off this year.

Godalming.—The Surrey Times of last Saturday contained a beautiful tribute to the memory of the Rev. Hubert Clarke. "His ministry at Meadrow during the past quarter of a century," it says, "was one of unostentatious devotion. It is impossible to tell in a few lines all that his quiet and faithful service has meant to those who attended the services at Meadrow. He entered into their homes, came to know them all intimately, and by his sympathetic nature won, it is not too much to say, their warmest and most affectionate regard. He took a close personal interest in the lives of those who attended the chapel, and he showed a special concern in the welfare of old boys who had passed through the Sunday school and who are serving—or have laid down their lives—in the King's forces. His work at Meadrow will always be remembered for the fact that he founded the Meadrow String Band very soon after he came to Godalming. Loving good music himself, he sought to spread the love to others. How well he succeeded is shown by the fact that for more than twenty years the band has been carried on, and the annual concerts have been performances of a consistently high musical standard. It is only owing to the war that the activities of the band have been somewhat restricted of late.....Mr. Clarke's passion for education found expression in his work on the Godalming Higher Education Committee of which he had been a member for some years as a County Council representative. He was also deeply interested in the Free Library at the Technical Institute. An enthusiastic reader of good literature himself, he sought to do all he could to spread knowledge to others....A man of charming personality, he will be much missed by those who were privileged to know him intimately, whilst amongst those with whom he had laboured at Meadrow and Farncombe with such devotion for so long his passing will leave a great gap." The funeral took place at the Godalming Old Cemetery on Thursday, January 25. The friends present included his brother, Mr. R. A. Clarke, and representatives from the congregation of Meadrow Chapel, Ward Street Church, Guildford, the Godalming Higher Education Committee, the Technical Institute and the Farncombe Happy Home Lodge, I.O.G.T. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, who paid a fitting tribute to "one who lived a simple and good life." "This is not the time," he continued, "to praise a man's virtues, but we cannot gather here without expressing together our affection for our friend, our sense of the value of the quiet work he has done for so many years in this neighbourhood and our deep admiration for the loftiness of soul which conquered all difficulties and enabled him through long years to be forgetful of himself and to give himself to the service of others. I have known our friend ever since the days when he came as a young student to my father's house, and all through these years he has ever been the same, conscious always of the burden that he had to carry, sensitive sometimes of the difference between himself and other men, and yet always devoted to his work, always thinking of his children and his young people who were just like a family to one who never knew the joy of wife and child himself. We may truly say of him that he walked in his Master's steps, and that his name is blessed." Mr. Drummond also conducted a memorial service at Meadrow Chapel last Sunday evening, and preached on the service of others as the keynote of the Christian ministry.

Ilford.—The annual meeting of the congregation of the Ilford Unitarian Church was held on Monday, January 29. Mr. John Kinsman presided, and was supported by the minister, the Rev. A. H. Biggs, the treasurer, Mr. A. Beecroft, the secretary, Mr. C. Syer, and the Rev. W. H. Drummond representing the Provincial Assembly. Excellent reports of the year's work were presented, and the Treasurer announced that after a period of anxiety he was able to close the year with a small balance in hand owing to the splendid rally at the recent Sale of Work. In the course of a short address Mr. Drummond congratulated Mr. Biggs and his congregation on the fine spirit with which they had faced their difficulties, and the amount of earnest religious service which was being carried on by the church and its connected institutions.

Midland Guilds' Union.—A united meeting of the Midland Guilds' Union was held at Lodge Road Unitarian Church, West Bromwich, on Saturday last. After tea and the Business Meeting the members of the West Bromwich Guild provided a much appreciated musical and dramatic entertainment. A resolution of sympathy with the warden of the visited Guild, the Rev. F. A. Homer, who is confined to bed with pneumonia, was passed. Representatives of guilds at Birmingham, Old Meeting, and Moseley; Coseley, Oldbury, Walsall, and West Bromwich were present in spite of very inclement weather. The Rev. H. C. Hawkins and Mr. E. E. Townley voiced the thanks of the gathering to the West Bromwich friends for their generous hospitality. The next meeting is to be held at Walsall on March 24 next.

Newport: Isle of Wight.—The Unitarian church at Newport, I.W., has sustained a loss it could ill afford in the death of Thomas Cogger, who passed peacefully away last Saturday, January 27, at the age of 72 years. For thirty-nine years he has been connected with the congregation. He once served an apprenticeship to the trade of the coachsmith; it proved to be a form of work unsuited to his constitution. He had to resign himself to work that would be healthier for him though less remunerative. During the many years that he has worshipped here he was employed by a firm of grocers and general dealers. He was the sort of man who could mention in casual conversation that he had worked for thirty-three years for one firm without ever losing a day for illness, and without ever going late to his work. The work meanwhile often involved exceedingly long days. During the last two years or more he had been very evidently failing. For five months he was unable to work, and needed and received the kind care of his family. Yet on his last Sunday morning but one he attended the service, knew every tune and joined heartily in the singing of each hymn. It may be mentioned that as in his employment so in his religion, he was at first in surroundings that proved unsuitable to him. He was originally a Baptist, and never to the end of his days felt quite comfortable when a child was being baptised. This survival of a feeling acquired in early days was an interesting trait in a man whose life was essentially practical. He was no talker, he had little opportunity for reading; but he was known in the town to be a sturdy straightforward man, to members of his church as a devout and hearty fellow-worshipper, and beloved at home as a faithful and dutiful head of the household. We share with his wife and three daughters the sorrow they feel for his loss; with them we join in reverential regard for one whose life was an illustration of the verse which says "He liveth long who liveth well."

Poole.—The Annual Congregational Meeting of the Unitarian Church was held on Wednesday evening, January 17. A number of deeds, documents, and books relating to the history, principles, and business of the Church from about the year 1705 up to the present time were on exhibition, and provided material for an address by the minister, the Rev. G. B. Stallworthy. The balance sheet, which was considered quite satisfactory in the present trying circumstances, and the secretary's report were presented. The latter mentions that help has been sent to the St. John's Red Cross, the Belgian Hut Fund, and also local hospitals. The officers were re-elected as follows: president, Mr. W. H. Higgin (Parkstone); treasurer, Mr. Charles Carter, J.P.; secretary, Miss M. S. Bayley. The School superintendent, Mr. W. E. Stephens, has been included among the vice-presidents. The Church Committee were also re-elected, and Mr. Higgin and Mr. W. E. Stephens re-elected to represent Poole Church at the Southern Unitarian Association Meetings. The Visitors included the Rev. V. D. Davis, of Bournemouth, Secretary of the Southern Unitarian Association, and the Rev. F. Hankinson, of London (Camp Visitor), both of whom gave brief and helpful addresses. Alderman Herbert Carter, J.P., congratulated the President upon his election to the Poole Borough Council.

Swansea.—On Wednesday evening, January 24, the Rev. T. P. Spedding lectured in the schoolroom on 'Some Unitarian Activities among our Soldiers in the Home Camps.' The severe weather militated against a large attendance, but those who came were amply repaid by a very interesting address illustrated by some capital lantern slides. Dr. Thomas Evans, Medical Officer of Health, presided, and Mr. J. W. Burr, Borough electrical engineer, manipulated the electric lantern—both members of the congregation. On Sunday, January 28, the congregation was favoured by a visit from Dr. Estlin

Carpenter, who preached the Anniversary Sermons. It was felt that the President of the Association is doing excellent national service in thus visiting our scattered congregations at this time of trial, and by his words and presence lifting his troubled hearers up to the hills of faith and vision whence cometh our help. On Monday, January 29, a conference on 'Public Morals' was held in the church attended by delegates from eleven various women's societies in the town.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A Puritan Service.

We learn from The Christian Register that a Puritan Service was held in connection with the dedication of the Meeting House of the Second Unitarian Society in Brookline, Boston, Mass. The printed programme was arranged with historic accuracy and revived the Colonial method of spelling, as well as the set terms formerly applied to addresses at public functions. The musical numbers were those in common use in the seventeenth century. They were rendered by a chorus and "all the people in unison to accompaniment of the bass viols, the flutes, violins and such other instruments as may be used to help the singing." An address on 'The Puritan Virtues' was given by the Rev. Charles E. Park, minister of the First Church in Boston, founded in 1630.

Evening Play Centres.

It will be good news to all who have followed the growth of the Play Centre Movement with interest and helped it by their donations that grants from the Board of Education will shortly be available in aid of the cost of carrying on this work. The usefulness of the work already accomplished, especially at the present time, is thus officially recognised, and Mrs. Humphry Ward believes that this marks "a definite and important advance in British elementary education, broadly understood." Under the new regulations the London Play Centres will now be able to earn, it is hoped, grants equal to half their approved expenditure, but it is obvious that if their numbers are to be largely and rapidly extended through the working-class districts of London subscriptions must not only be maintained but increased. Altogether about £45,000 has been raised for the Centres since 1905, and now, as Mrs. Ward points out, those who help will have the satisfaction of knowing that for every pound they subscribe the Exchequer, under the conditions laid down, will give another pound.

The Late Mrs. James Payn.

Mrs. James Payn, the widow of the novelist, whose death has just occurred at the age of 86, numbered Dickens among her early acquaintances, and the friends who were welcomed at the house in Warrington Crescent where she and her husband dispensed such warm hospitality included some of the most notable men of the Victorian era. Mrs. Payn was probably, says The Daily News and Leader, the last survivor of those who lived on terms of intimacy with Harriet Martineau in the days when she was writing continuously for that paper under its original name. James Payn and his wife lived close to The Knoll, Harriet Martineau's house at Ambleside, and most winter evenings they met at whist, the local practitioner, Dr. Shepherd, making a fourth. Once, between the games, Miss Martineau announced that as a token of gratitude to Toynbee, the aurist, she had bequeathed him her ears. "That will make your other legacy worthless," said Shepherd, and thereupon informed the Payns that Miss Martineau had already left her head to the Phrenological Society, "and £10 to me for cutting it off." As it happened, the doctor died before his patient, who subsequently altered her testamentary dispositions.

A Popular Educator.

John Cassell, who was born on January 23, 1817, in an old Manchester tavern, had almost as romantic a career as the famous Dick Whittington. Certainly the future head of the well-known publishing firm in La Belle Sauvage Yard, Ludgate Hill, began life in very humble circumstances, and when he first arrived in London, on his own confession, he carried his worldly all in a small wallet, and had only a few pence in his pocket. A boy with some ambition, who succeeded in gaining an extensive knowledge of English literature at quite an early age, John Cassell began to earn his living as a carpenter, and it was while he was in his teens that the teetotal movement first claimed his allegiance and became one of his chief interests in life. A writer in The Manchester Guardian gives an interesting account of his activities as a paid advocate of the National Temperance Society, which had recently been started, and describes how the young carpenter, with his earnest manner and provincial speech, travelled up and down the country with a basket of tools slung over his shoulder, working now and then at his trade, and addressing meetings—which sometimes aroused considerable excitement—in the intervals. On his marriage in 1841, John Cassell embarked in business in London as a tea and coffee merchant, but the idea of furthering the cause of temperance and education among the working classes by means of cheap literature led to his setting up as a printer and publisher in the Strand, and this was the beginning of the prosperity of later years. He was the real pioneer of the sevenpenny reprint, for "John Cassell's Library," issued about the time of the Great Exhibition, was sold at that price. 'Cassell's Popular Educator,' first published in 1852, had a sale of two million copies. He was a friend of freedom in all countries, and on his first visit to the United States in 1852 became interested in the Abolitionist Movement. He was a great friend of Richard Cobden, and died on the same day—April 2, 1865—at the comparatively early age of 48.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. Cumberland.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

MERCERISED DRESS LINEN for Overalls, 27 inches wide, 12 yards bundle, 9*s.* 9*d.* (postage 6*d.*). Colours: Wedgwood Saxe, Rose Pink; one colour only in bundle. Bargain List free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

COLEMAN'S R.T.B. Renowned Temperance Beverage.

THE IDEAL HEALTH DRINK. THE NEW INVIGORATOR.

A Delightful, Exhilarating, Non-Alcoholic Beverage.

Contains the principal ingredient used in the manufacture of Sanatogen.

The use of alcohol is terribly seductive, especially to those who fly to the sideboard for little sips of alcohol because they are intensely miserable. The greatest want of the age has been a satisfying non-alcoholic beverage, and at last we have it in Coleman's R.T.B.

Are you willing to Test it? Strongly recommended by Doctors and the Clergy.

It will refresh you. You can drink Coleman's R.T.B. with cold or hot water, or any kind of mineral water. A bottle at 1*s.* 9*d.* (a Champagne Quart) will make 25 half-pints, which make the cost of the drinks less than a penny each. It is a powerful nerve stimulant, but has no after depressing effect like alcohol. It exhilarates, invigorates, and stimulates. It stops the craving for spirits. It is a magnificent tonic for those who are 'run down' and not feeling quite well. The more you drink the better you are. It can be given to children with advantage.

To Spencer, Layton & Co., Brundall, near Norwich.
Kindly send me a sample of Coleman's R.T.B. I enclose 6*d.* for postage and packing herewith. SEND THIS FORM.

Name .....

Address .....

Sold in bottles at 1*s.* and 1*s.* 9*d.* per bottle.

AGENTS WANTED. Inquirer.

Printed by The Athenæum Press, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 3, 1917.
 Regarding Advertisement Rates see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3893. NEW SERIES, No. 996.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

Library of the

A SPECIAL NUMBER

OF

THE INQUIRER

FOR THE

Sailors and Soldiers

from our Churches and Sunday Schools

will be issued on

SATURDAY, MARCH 3.

Among the Contents will be

A Message to our Men on Active Service.
By the Right Hon. Viscount Bryce, O.M.

Greetings to our Sailors, Soldiers, and Airmen.
By the Revs. A. N. Blatchford, H. E. Dowson, and J. C. Ballantyne.

The Hostel at Essex Hall.
By R. M. Montgomery, K.C.

Carrying On in Church and School.
By the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A., President of the Sunday School Association.

The Jubilee of the Rev. H. E. Dowson.
With Portraits.

The Work of the Belgian Hospital Fund.
By Mrs. Bernard Allen.
With Portrait of Mrs. Allen.

Girls on the Land.
By Miss Ruth Drummond.
With Illustrations.

Some Ministers who are doing their Bit.
With Portraits of Lieut.-Col. the Rev. C. S. Bullock, Lieut. the Rev. H. D. Roberts, the Rev. R. Nicoll Cross, R.A.M.C., and the Rev. T. P. Spedding.

Copies will be sent to all our Men on Active Service whose names are recorded at Essex Hall, with greetings and good wishes from the Social Centre at Lawrence House, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. The sale price will be 1½d. As we shall be unable to meet any large demand after publication, readers who wish to have extra copies should send in their orders without delay to the Manager, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Cambridge University Press

The Cambridge History of English Literature. Edited by Sir A. W. WARD, Litt.D., F.B.A., and A. R. WALLER, M.A. Volume XIII: The Nineteenth Century II. Volume XIV: The Nineteenth Century III. Royal 8vo. Cloth, 9s net each. Half-morocco. 15s net each.

The Cambridge Book of Poetry for Children. Edited by KENNETH GRAHAME, Author of The Golden Age, etc. Crown 8vo. In 2 parts, 1s net each. In one volume, cloth extra, 3s net.

The Theory of Abstract Ethics. By THOMAS WHITTAKER, Author of The Neo-Platonists. Crown 8vo. 4s 6d net.

The Purpose of Education. An Examination of the Education Problem in the Light of Recent Psychological Research. By ST GEORGE LANE FOX PITT. New edition. With Preface by Prof. EMILE BOUTROUX, de l'Académie Française. Crown 8vo. 2s 6d net.

Converging Paths. A Study in Ideals and Methods of Education. By E. T. CAMPAGNAC, Professor of Education in the University of Liverpool, formerly H.M. Inspector of Schools. Crown 8vo. 2s 6d net.

The Divine Aspect of History. By JOHN RICKARDS MOZLEY. In 2 volumes Royal 8vo. 36s net. An extensive survey of the working of the divine in history, covering the chief ancient religions, the history and theology of the Old Testament, the Life of Christ, and the birth and history of the Christian Church.

Adventures of the Christian Soul. Being Chapters in the Psychology of Religion. By K. J. SAUNDERS, late Burney Prizeman and Student in the University of Cambridge. With a Preface by the Very Rev. W. R. INGE, D.D., Dean of St Paul's. Crown 8vo. 3s 6d net.

The Elements of Pain and Conflict in Human Life, considered from a Christian Point of View. Being Lectures delivered at the Cambridge Summer Meeting, 1916, by Members of the University. Crown 8vo. 4s 6d net.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges.
The following have recently been published:—
The Books of Chronicles. (R.V.) Edited by W. A. L. ELMSLIE, M.A. 4s 6d net.
The Book of the Prophet Ezekiel. (R.V.) With notes and introduction by the late A. B. DAVIDSON, D.D., LL.D., revised by the late A. W. STREANE, D.D. 3s 6d net.
The First Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Corinthians. (R.V.) Edited by R. ST JOHN PARRY, D.D. 2s 6d net.

The Revised Version for Schools. The following has recently been published:—
The Books of Ezra and Nehemiah. Edited by the Rev. T. W. CRAFER, D.D. With a map. Fcap 8vo. 1s 6d net.

A Companion to Biblical Studies. Being a Revised and Re-written Edition of The Cambridge Companion to the Bible. Edited by W. EMERY BARNES, D.D., Fellow of Peterhouse, Hulsean Professor of Divinity. With 8 illustrations and 10 maps. Royal 8vo. 15s net.

Testimonies. By RENDEL HARRIS. With the Assistance of VACHER BURCH. Part I. Demy 8vo. 5s net.

Picus Who is also Zeus. By RENDEL HARRIS. Demy 8vo. 4s net.

Jātaka Tales. Selected and edited, with introduction and notes, by H. T. FRANCIS, M.A., sometime Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, and E. J. THOMAS, M.A., Emmanuel College. With 8 plates. Royal 8vo. 7s 6d net.

Cambridge University Press
Fetter Lane, London: C. F. Clay, Manager

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, February 11.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. H. W. STEPHENSON.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. H. SMITH.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Lieut.-Col. C. S. BULLOCK—Subject, "The Religious Faith of Abraham Lincoln"; 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 7, LIEUT.-COL. C. S. BULLOCK.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Mr. E. R. FYSON.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. I. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. H. SMITH.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING: 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. S. HITCHCOCK.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. G. C. SHARPE.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. J. MCDOWELL.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. JACKS.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A. LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATHS.

COLEBY.—On January 25, at Cowslip Cottage, Bedfield, Suffolk, Henry Coleby, aged 69.

HUMPHREYS.—On Tuesday, February 6, at the residence of her niece, Mrs. Potter, The Briars, Northwick Park, Harrow, Jennett, second daughter of the late Griffith Humphreys of Oxford Street and Westbourne Park Road, in her 88th year.

ROSCOE.—Died of wounds in France on February 4, Capt. Richard Lang Roscoe, aged 19 years and 10 months, eldest son of Philip and Margaret Roscoe of 58 Redington Road, Hampstead.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

CAPABLE, well-educated Unitarian LADY desires post as Secretary, Companion, or any Position of Trust. Highest references.—Apply in first instance to S. G., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

WANTED, useful COMPANION for elderly Lady. Small house; comfortable home. Good cook; help for rough work. Protestant. Musical.—Write SENSIBLE, care of Mrs. Guy, Church Street, Malvern.

WANTED, useful MAID for partly crippled Lady.—Apply, by letter, SWANN, Oakfield, Wimbledon.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

11. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.

18. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.

25. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.

March.

4. Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, of Manchester College, Oxford.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors and Friends will be held at Dr. Williams's Library, Gordon Square, London, W.C., at 12.30 P.M., on TUESDAY, February 13, 1917, to receive the Report and Accounts, elect three Managers, appoint Officers, and transact other Business.

W. H. DRUMMOND, Acting Secretary.
23 Cannon Place, Hampstead,
London, N.W.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 63
THE TEMPER OF THE NATION . . . 65
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 66
LIFE AND DEATH 66
CORRESPONDENCE :—
A Correction 67
The Possibilities of Peace 67
Names and Addresses of Men on Active Service 67
National Service 68
MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
Mr. William Haslam 68
Miss Helen Bell 68
Second Lieut. Ronald Thompson, R.E. . 69
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 69
Gifts of Toys from Japanese Students . 70
Lawrence House 70
Nottingham High Pavement Chapel . . 70
Men and Movements 70
The Unitarians in Hungary 71
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 71
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 72

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

EVERY other interest has been eclipsed this week by the momentous decision of the United States to sever diplomatic relations with Germany. No self-respecting country could have acted otherwise in view of the insolence of Germany's demands, which stripped of their verbiage amounted to this, "Do as I bid you or I will sink all your ships at sight." Whether this formal estrangement will pass rapidly into a state of active hostility must be left to the independent judgment of the American President and people; but it seems clear that Germany, rushing headlong to ruin, will do nothing to prevent it, while America roused and united seems to be in no temper for mere passivity.

* * *

PRESIDENT WILSON, speaking in Congress last Saturday with the simplicity of manner and the economy of words which befit a great occasion, made it plain that he regarded war as an imminent possibility. Referring to the ancient friendship between the German people and his own, and his difficulty in believing that the German authorities will really carry out the ruthless naval programme which they have announced, he said :—

> If American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understanding of international law and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before Congress to ask that authority be given to me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful legitimate errands on the high seas. I can do nothing less. I take it for granted that all neutral Governments will take the same course. We do not desire any hostile conflict with the Imperial German Government. We are sincere friends of the German people, and earnestly desire to remain at peace with the Government which speaks for them. We shall not believe that they are hostile to us unless and until we are obliged to believe it, and we purpose nothing more than reasonable defence of the undoubted rights of our people. We wish to serve no selfish ends. We seek merely to stand true alike in thought and action to the immemorial principles of our people, which I have sought to express in my address to the Senate only two weeks ago. We seek merely to vindicate our right to liberty, justice, and unmolested life. These are bases of peace, not war.

* * *

BENEATH the studied politeness of this language it is clear that President Wilson feels that it is unlikely that Germany will belie her barbarous record. In these circumstances there can be no impropriety in saying with what deep gratitude and rejoicing we shall see America fighting side by side with us in this conflict. We are sure that our American friends will understand us when we say that we have longed for this closer partnership, and perhaps have betrayed a little impatience because the discreet management of a political situation, which we can understand only very imperfectly, has decreed such long delays. It is a noble passion which makes men brothers in arms in the cause of freedom, and it seems fitting that the men of Lincoln's breed should have a place in the final triumph of this war of liberation. We want American ideals and the American tradition of personal freedom and human equality to play their part, when we come to settle terms of peace; but the decision will lie with the men who have risked wounds and death in the cause of liberty and public right and not with the neutral spectators.

* * *

THE one thing that has made us hesitate to indulge this wish for decisive action is our deep sense of the value of the services which America has rendered as a neutral power both to ourselves and to the cause of suffering humanity. The work done by Mr. Gerard for our prisoners of war in Germany has earned our undying gratitude, and the labour of Mr. Hoover and other American citizens on the Neutral Commission for feeding the starving Belgians has been as generous as it has been indispensable. We are confident that every effort will be made to maintain the work of the Commission, but the outlook is grave, and already one relief ship has been sunk. The powerful motive of a desire to stand well with America has been withdrawn, and in her mad career of crime Germany observes no degrees in infamy.

* * *

ALL these American interests have necessarily diverted attention from important events at home. The Prime Minister's speech at Carnarvon last Saturday was a rousing appeal to the nation to back up the Government by personal discipline and service—there must be no grumbling about inconvenience and no hanging back—but it announced no new programme and it revealed no secrets. Mr. Asquith's speech two days before came at an opportune moment. He gave a coup-de-grâce to the notion, which has been carefully fostered in some quarters, that the war can only come to a squalid end in a stalemate or a drawn game. We are fighting, he said, in the full confidence that we shall win, not for love of fighting or to annihilate the German people or the German State, but in order to achieve a victorious peace.

* * *

The conditions of a victorions peace Mr. Asquith described in the following words :—

> In estimating the minimum requirements the attainment of which would justify us in laying down the sword and absolve our duty to the memory and the honour of those who have given their lives in the faith of a great cause we cannot ignore what the war has taught us as to the character and the methods of the enemy. It began with a deliberate and a cynically acknowledged infraction of a treaty obligation. It has from the first been conducted with a steady disregard not only of the old chivalry between belligerents but of civilised usage and of common humanity in a growing series of calculated crimes, which for the moment reaches its climax to-day. Reparation, restitution—there is something tangible in them, even though so much has been destroyed that can never be replaced, and so much has vanished that cannot be recalled. But what of the future ? Of what avail in such a case are mere words and promises, the multiplication of parchments and protocols, which can be torn to pieces in far less time than it took to write them down ? We cannot be content, we ought not to be content unless the Allies are left with solid safeguards against the breaking loose afresh of the ambitions, with their attendant train of carnage and cruelty, which during these three years have wrought the most desolating havoc recorded in the annals of the world. That is what we mean by a victorious peace—a peace which has in it the prospect of endurance because it will conform not only to the best interests but to the social and moral necessities of corporate mankind. More than that we do not desire ; less than that without dishonour and confessed failure we cannot accept.

* * *

The scheme for National Service was explained by Mr. Neville Chamberlain at a public meeting on Tuesday. The object is to liberate as much labour as possible from non-essential industries in order to concentrate it upon work which will be of essential service for the winning of the war. Its importance was emphasised by the announcement that if volunteers are not forthcoming in sufficient numbers, compulsion will be adopted. Perhaps in view of the English temperament and its deeply rooted habits this method of recruiting a new army of labour by invitation is prudent, but we doubt whether it will be successful in circumstances where speed is essential to success.

* * *

It must be remembered that most able-bodied men in the country, up to the age of 60, are very busy, carrying on their business or profession with a depleted staff or earning weekly wages in trades which their employer tells them are of national importance. How are many of these men to decide whether they ought to offer themselves and face financial ruin or not ? If they volunteer and are accepted have they any guarantee that their more selfish competitors will not be left alone to flourish in their absence ? For these and similar reasons we shall be surprised if Mr. Neville Chamberlain taps a large reservoir of labour by his present methods. We do not find it easy to believe that any large scheme of national organisation can be carried through at top speed without some element of compulsion. And in our present abnormal conditions compulsion comes as a relief to most men from mental indecision. They are willing to do a soldier's dull job and to receive a soldier's rations in the civilian army, if their services are really required, but their own judgment may tell them that they are helping better where they are. How are they to decide ? At present they lack the needful directions.

* * *

In these circumstances the best policy seems to be for various trades and professions to discipline themselves, and to agree to liberate the utmost labour that can possibly be spared without bringing them to the ground. Apparently this is the plan which has been accepted by the two Archbishops on behalf of the clergy of the Church of England. The other churches ought to take the same course as quickly as possible. As a first step all students can be transferred from the theological colleges to work of national importance, and arrangements might also be made to combine churches in the same neighbourhood or to reduce the number of services, so as to liberate men who are young and strong for hard work elsewhere. In carrying out any plans of this kind we hope that there will be no disposition, under the guise of appropriate work, to choose soft and pleasant jobs for the clergy. Their exemption from combatant service, and the fact that there are more men of military age still left in the ministry than in any other profession, lays upon them the obligation to do their bit now, while the older and retired men must simply work harder than they have ever done before in order to carry on. We desire to call special attention to the letter on this subject by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, with its series of practical suggestions, which will be found in another column.

* * *

This week the Food Controller has put the nation on its honour to eat less. There is here no spectre of starvation if we exercise ordinary prudence, but we have become so much accustomed to see plentiful supplies on the table and to regard scanty catering as a sign of meanness, that for many of us it will be a struggle to make bareness the appropriate symbol of the open hand and the generous heart. We shall have to think about our food in an entirely new way, and learn to be thankful if we are not hungry. We believe that for a large number of people, especially for those of us who have always lived well-padded lives, the necessary discipline will be a blessing in disguise. The new gospel of frugality ought certainly to be welcomed by the churches. The growing demand for sumptuous living, and the desire of it spreading through all classes of society, have done much to undermine the power of religion in our lives and to make frank materialists of us all.

* * *

There are some noble sentences in Cardinal Mercier's New Year letter to the Belgian people, copies of which have reached this country. The following words, which are intended to give the consolation of high ideals to his own stricken and harried countrymen, seem even more applicable to us. If they are exposed to the temptations of mental detachment and feebleness in sacrifice, what shall we say of ourselves ?

> I do not admit [he says] that, under pretext of greater recollection or piety, a Christian may entrench himself in heedless detachment and regard the war from afar, as if it could only touch souls of inferior mould. Faith ought to impregnate the whole of life, the commerce of individuals and of societies one with another....May we all—bishops, priests, and holy women—profit by the great and hard lessons of the present time to strengthen in our souls the spirit of sacrifice. We do not think of this enough. The world does not understand this truth, and we do not look it sufficiently in the face ; the work of the redemption of the world, in which we have the honour and duty of co-operating, is not only a work of labour and pious prayers ; it is also, above all, a work of sacrifice.

THE TEMPER OF THE NATION.

The letter by the Rev. H. Gow which we publish to-day supplies a needful corrective to a strain of morbidity, into which some high-minded people are liable to fall at the present day. Our only criticism of that letter is that we should have been inclined to express ourselves in more uncompromising terms and to give fewer points to the moral censor. If ever there was a time for admiration and to cease from grumbling because our neighbours are not perfect, it is now. Men are seldom improved by scolding, and they rightly resent any suggestion that they are Pharisees because they are putting their hearts into their duty. It has long been one of the weaknesses of religion that it pays more attention to sorrowful rebuke than to glowing praise. It is alas! true that man is only a little higher than the devils. We have also good authority for believing that God made man a little lower than the angels. Both statements are useful, in their own place; but at present Christianity and patriotism and our experience of British human nature since the beginning of the war place us decisively on the side of the angels.

The difference in the point of view is no doubt partly a matter of temperament, and we admit that in some finely organised natures the horror of all wrong-doing is so grievous as to cloud the heart with an enduring sorrow. But with most of us we believe that it is a matter of habit, and in the case of some people the habit is so strong that even the moral imperatives of the war have left them more conscious of what is harsh and unworthy in the character of their own countrymen than of virtue and courage and noble ideals of public service, in widest commonalty spread. As for the claims of justice and freedom and fair-dealing they are safest in the keeping of men who are serving the cause of civilisation with the fervour of complete conviction. There are few things more paralysing to moral judgment than to perform our duties with half our mind.

We do not deny that there are many things in our midst which strike a jarring note and cause good men to grieve. There are the scare headlines in the newspapers. There is base passion intent on its dark and insidious work. There is the deadening of the public mind as it grows familiar with the daily tale of horror. Against these things we must strive with all our might, but we must do it in such a way as not to lose all sense of moral perspective or to be guilty of false judgment. The war has not changed us into a nation of celestial virtue, but its discipline has taught us many things and made of us a more finely tempered people than we were. We know as a fact of reason that we are fighting for our own safety, but we know even more clearly as a fact of conscience that we are performing a duty which was thrust upon us and left us no choice. The things which ennoble a people, justice, freedom, unselfish anger against cruelty and foul oppression, have come forth from the dim background of life, and fill the common mind with a sense of divine calling and destiny. If our daily press does not always please us and sometimes serves our national ideals very ill, is that a novelty due to the war? We do not pretend that vulgarity has been banished or that the bouncing journalist has ceased from troubling; but we have a good deal of healthy scepticism about the depth and the range of their influence. Let any one try the interesting experiment of observing his fellow-travellers in a railway carriage and catching the over-flow of their talk as they read the most succulent paragraphs of the yellow press about the enormities of the Huns. Do they at once lose their usual kindliness of temper, and grow hard and vindictive and begin "strafing" somebody? Granted that they are protected from these emotional excesses by the phlegm of the English character, they yet give no sign that hatred and revenge are gnawing at their hearts. One of the things which the Germans have to fear most is the terrible quietness of our people. For ourselves this absence of desolating war fever may rightly inspire confidence in the present and boundless hopes for the future. It is a revelation of sources of strength in the national character, which do not fail when they are put to the severest test.

We may draw the same conclusion from the teaching and spiritual temper of the churches during the crisis. In some respects indeed it must be confessed that they have failed grievously. The nation has waited in vain for the decisive moral leadership and the clear ringing message which it had a right to expect. In many religious utterances there has been almost a note of apology, and some preachers have been more intent upon abstract problems of war and peace than upon filling the hearts of men with the power of God for the discharge of their duty. But we cannot be too thankful that our pulpits have been saved from defilement by the tawdry rhetoric of war. There has been a general feeling that the language of violence and revenge is entirely out of place in a Christian sanctuary, and that in any case the moral sense of the community would not stand it. There lies at our elbow as we write the startling and bizarre book called 'Hurrah and Hallelujah.' Under the able editorship of a Danish professor it contains selections from the sermons and other war-utterances of many of the prominent religious teachers of Germany. They are like the ravings of a mad-house. There can be few books in the world so grotesque in their impiety. We call attention to it here simply to ask the question, whether we can imagine the possibility of Prof. Bang making a similar collection of passages reeking with the lust of war, as crude in their egotism and as savage in their intolerance, from representative English sermons. As we confess, with a sense of boundless gratitude and relief, that such a thing is unthinkable, let us not shrink from attributing the immunity of our religion from this sordid violence to the heavenly grace which works in the hearts of men, when their lives are dedicated to a just cause.

We have written in this way with no desire to encourage a spirit of pride or of false moral security. We know well the pitfalls of self-confidence, and men who serve noble ends must above all others strive to walk humbly with God. But to feel that we are unworthy of His high service is a very different thing from the disposition to remind other men, at the very moment when they are putting all their strength into some high enterprise, that they are poor creatures after all. We live in days which are crammed full with incitements to admiration, hope and love. We were never less inclined to indulge in national fault-finding, though it is a habit which has the sanction of some very virtuous people. We want to live close to the real heart of things, and to praise and encourage all the time.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

MONICA'S LAST PRAYER.

"AH could thy grave at home, at Carthage, be!"—
Care not for that, and lay me where I fall!
Everywhere heard will be the judgment-call.
But at God's altar, oh! remember me.

Thus Monica, and died in Italy.
Yet fervent had her longing been, through all
Her course, for home at last, and burial
With her own husband, by the Libyan sea.

Had been! but at the end, to her pure soul
All tie with all beside seem'd vain and cheap,
And union before God the only care.

Creeds pass, rites change, no altar standeth whole.
Yet we her memory, as she pray'd, will keep,
Keep by this: Life in God, and union there!

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

OF AGRICULTURE.

I SHALL onely instance in one Delight more, the most natural and best natur'd of all others, a perpetual companion of the Husbandman; and that is, the satisfaction of looking round about him, and seeing nothing but the effects and improvements of his own Art and Diligence; to be always gathering of some Fruits of it, and at the same time to behold others ripening, and others budding: to see all his Fields and Gardens covered with the beauteous Creatures of his own Industry; and to see, like God, that all his Works are Good....The Antiquity of his Art is certainly not to be contested by any other. The three first Men in the world were a Gardner, a Ploughman, and a Grazier; and if any man object, that the second of these was a Murtherer, I desire he would consider, that as soon as he was so, he quitted our Profession, and turn'd Builder. It is for this reason, I suppose, that Ecclesiasticus forbids us to hate Husbandry; because (sayes he) the most High has created it. We were all Born to this Art, and taught by Nature to nourish our Bodies by the same Earth out of which they were made, and to which they must return, and pay at last for their sustenance. Behold the Original and Primitive Nobility of all those great Persons, who are too proud now, not onely to till the Ground, but almost to tread upon it. We may talk what we please of Lilies, and Lions Rampant, and Spread-Eagles in Fields d'Or, or d'Argent; but if Heraldry were guided by Reason, a Plough in a Field Arable would be the most Noble and Antient Armes.

ABRAHAM COWLEY.

GRANT, O merciful God, peace, welfare, blessing, grace, lovingkindness and mercy unto us and unto all thy people. Bless us, O our Father, even all of us together, with the light of thy countenance; for by the light of thy countenance thou hast given us, O Lord our God, the Law of life, lovingkindness and righteousness, blessing, mercy, life and peace; and may it be good in thy sight to bless thy people at all times and in every hour with thy peace. AMEN.

LIFE AND DEATH.

A REPLY

By Sir OLIVER LODGE, F.R.S.

IN your issue of January 13 there is a friendly though critical review by the Rev. Henry Gow of my recent book 'Raymond, or Life and Death,' and it is possible that you may welcome a few notes on points raised by the critic, inasmuch as others may have felt similar difficulties.

Mr. Gow objects to the Faunus message as indirect and oracular. So it is, but this kind of communication was very characteristic of F. W. H. Myers when alive. That is to say he frequently conveyed some idea by a classical allusion—often, indeed, by merely quoting chapter and verse, and leaving his correspondent or disciple to look up the reference and disentangle his meaning.

Not only is it characteristic, however: indirectness is manifestly essential when announcing a future calamity. No one would be brutal enough to send—what Mr. Gow wonders was not sent—a direct message such as "Your son is going to be killed; I will take care of him," &c. Several other critics have suggested this as the proper form of an unmistakable announcement. Certainly it is clear enough; but they, who suggest it as reasonable cannot be exercising any imagination, or be making the smallest effort to realise the position. Even if a medium received such a message, very few would have the hardihood to transmit it. Besides, why should it be given to any mortal to grasp future events with complete clearness and certainty?

Here, again, Mr. Gow trips himself badly, for he goes on to say that if the Faunus message is regarded as an anticipation of death "it suggests that Myers was able to foresee the exact position of R. L. on September 14 and that a German shell would kill him on that day." At the best this is a careless and extremely unscientific sentence. Nothing whatever was either said or suggested about time or place in the anticipation. "Exact position," "September 14," "German shell" are all unjustifiable insertions by the critic. He will say that the prediction as it stands is vague and indefinite. Certainly it is; so vague that, as I have said in the book, it need not be considered as a prediction at all, nothing but an intelligent anticipation of coming misfortune and a promise of kindly help in case it occurred.

One more note. He says that in the photograph group a comrade is "resting his hand affectionately on Raymond's shoulder." Why affectionately?

In another edition of the group it is a leg resting against his shoulder. Is that also affectionate?

The man behind appears to me to be evidently discomposing to Raymond; he was not either a friend or a popular character, nor does the expression of his face suggest anything like affection. That word is introduced as a gratuitous gloss; like the exact place, manner, and time, of the previous note.

As to possible danger of the book in the hands of weak-minded people, there is no doubt an element of danger in most things. The book has been excluded from some libraries presumably on that account, since it can hardly be thought likely to corrupt youth! But it may indirectly lead some people to resort to a medium, to see what can thus be got, whereas, except for the book, they might not have thought of attempting such a thing.

Well, it may, and I have inserted a warning to try and discourage the ill-balanced and the over-emotional from trying anything of the sort.

But if vicarious intercourse with the departed is in any sense possible, the fact should be known. Especially should it be known to religious guides and spiritual leaders; and it is to be hoped that the advice they may give to the flocks under their charge will be wise and helpful. With such advice, whatever it may be, I have no ground for complaint: the responsibility is theirs. But they should know the facts first. Facts can be used or can be misused; warnings can be issued or withheld, or can be adapted to the circumstances of different inquirers. The aim of a scientific investigator is truth, and he must be responsive and reverent to observed fact or be false to his trust. Consequences and diplomacy must be left to others, or to himself in other moods.

In conclusion, let me thank Mr. Gow for his kindly personal references, which I value.

OLIVER LODGE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

A CORRECTION.

SIR,—Your leading article this week is based on a letter to The Manchester Guardian which you and others seem to think was written by me. I have not seen the letter and certainly did not write it; nor do I agree with its tenour as far as I can gather it. I have written to this effect to The Guardian, and should be obliged if you would correct a mistaken impression, which is bringing me much correspondence, in your next issue.—Yours, &c., W. B. SELBIE.

Mansfield College, Oxford.
February 4, 1917.

[We are very sorry about the mistake, and tender to Dr. Selbie our sincere apology. We can only plead that we acted quite innocently, as the letter which we quoted last week appeared in The Manchester Guardian and purported to be written from Mansfield College, Oxford. Our conclusion that the signature W. B. Selbie was that of the Principal was in these circumstances a perfectly natural one.—Editor of INQUIRER.]

THE POSSIBILITIES OF PEACE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Dr. Wicksteed's letter in THE INQUIRER for January 13 is of importance both because it is written by a man whom we all honour, and also because it represents a certain point of view which is shared by other noble minds. Dr. Wicksteed tells us he is not a pacifist, and that he does not regard our guilt as so great as that of Germany. He recognises there was moral enthusiasm at the beginning of the conflict and that it was partly justifiable, but he thinks we are claiming too much righteousness, that we are judging Germany too harshly, and that we might well consider at once the possibility of peace seeing that she has learnt the lesson of her failure. He tells us that we have many things in our past national history which ought to make us ashamed of ourselves, and he tells us also that there is much hypocrisy in masking a brutal desire to punish and crush our opponent under zeal for the vindication of the moral law. I believe he is entirely right in both these contentions, and yet I believe we are morally bound to go on with the conflict, and that we must not allow sad and shameful memories of the past or the besmirching of our ideals in the present to dishearten us or turn us from our fixed resolve.

No one can doubt that as a nation we have, like all nations, a complex and mingled history of good and ill. There have been many great deeds and great men in our history. There have been also many unwise leaders, and many things have been done by us as a nation which were high-handed and morally unjustifiable. That is true of every nation as it is of every man, and it is especially true of the most forceful and successful nations and the strongest men. It may be due to national prejudice, but I am inclined to think that on the whole our national record is morally higher during the last four or five centuries than that of any other European nation. If it is correct, this is due not to a greater individual goodness amongst us, but to the fact that we have been more self-governing and democratic for a longer period than any other great European people. We have many acts to regret in our past history, and it is well to remember them. We must not justify them by saying that after all we have perhaps not been quite so bad as the rest. We may be grateful to Dr. Wicksteed for reminding us of them, but it is not good for man or nation so to remember their past evil that they have no heart for resisting wrong and standing for right in the present. These sad memories must not dishearten us now. They should make us more gentle in judging but not less firm in resisting evil to the uttermost.

Then, further, there is the besmirching and defiling of our ideals which we feel in what is said in many speeches and many newspapers. The headlines on posters of The Daily Mail and John Bull fill us all with shame. No condemnation can be too strong for them. It is the hardest test and trial for great ideals when they are defiled like that. No right-minded Englishman wants to crush or humiliate Germany as these newspapers suggest, or to carry on the war in that spirit. But all this reviling and vindictiveness does not alter the facts. The fact is still as it was at first, that a great military power, believing in war, glorifying war, and making every moral principle yield to the exigencies of war, is trying to dominate Europe and to force its "culture" on the world. It has broken solemn treaties, it has been preparing schemes of aggression for years, and it has forced this war on a Europe which desired and longed for peace. And it has not yet been conquered. It has not done what it expected to do, but it has inflicted appalling loss and misery upon the world, and it holds Belgium and the Balkan States and much of France in its iron grip. How can we make peace at present with such a power?

Almost every week shows us more clearly the unrelenting determination of Prussianism to "hack" its way through to victory. Our young men have given and are giving their lives to resist that desolating and unscrupulous spirit. There is more reason and not less for our feeling right to-day in resisting Prussian militarism to the uttermost. We cannot leave her half-victorious and patch up a feeble truce. We are not fighting to crush Germany but to defeat Prussian militarism, and it is still undefeated. It is a stern, an awful, and a sacred duty. Until that is done we cannot feel that our task is accomplished or that there is any prospect for a lasting peace. We must not allow ourselves to be disheartened in that work by memories of past national sins or of present unworthy elements in our midst. Moral ideals when true and strong are capable of overcoming those discouragements, and of going on in faith and confidence to the determined end.—Yours, &c.,

HENRY GOW.

Hampstead.
February 3, 1917.

NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF MEN ON ACTIVE SERVICE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—We have received at Essex Hall Social Centre some 5,000 names of sailors and soldiers on active service. Copies of Dr. Carpenter's Message and of the Booklet 'Freedom and Right' have been forwarded to the men whose names have been sent by ministers and secretaries. Owing to insufficient addresses, however, we have been unable to communicate with over a hundred soldiers; and a number of the Booklets have been returned through the Post Office owing to errors in addresses or to men having been wounded and sent to hospitals since the lists were compiled. We are placing ourselves in communication with the churches to which these men are attached.

We are now preparing addresses for the special number of THE INQUIRER which will be published on March 3. Ministers and secretaries will perceive that this involves considerable labour and great care; and their immediate co-operation will be very much appreciated.

We regret that a number of congregations have not yet supplied any lists. In some of the communications received men at the front have mentioned that no message has reached some of their comrades in the same unit; and on examining our lists at Essex Hall we find that they belong to churches which have not yet responded to Dr. Carpenter's appeal for names and addresses.

The officials of our churches will at once see that it is hard on men that are serving their country that they should seemingly be forgotten or neglected by the Social Centre. Those with whom we are in touch evidently appreciate what is being done, and we should like to make sure that all are being treated alike.

May we now ask for :—

1. New names and addresses since the last lists were sent to Essex Hall?
2. Addresses omitted from last list when names only were sent?
3. Changes in addresses?
4. Names and addresses of men who have served and are now discharged?
5. The home addresses of men where no army description and address can be given?

The list should be compiled so as to ensure that the names of all men who are now serving, or may have served at any time during the war, shall be included, and all information should reach the Social Centre on or before Tuesday, February 20.—Yours, &c.,

W. COPELAND BOWIE (Secretary),
T. P. SPEDDING (Missionary Agent).

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand,
London, W.C.
February 7, 1917.

NATIONAL SERVICE.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—In response to the public appeal of Mr. Neville Chamberlain, the Executive Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, at their meeting on Wednesday next, February14, will consider what counsel and assistance they can offer to ministers and congregations at the present crisis in our national life. Unitarians have usually been quick to respond to the call of duty and public service, and the call to-day is grim and insistent. I shall be glad to receive at Essex Hall, not later than Wednesday morning next, any practical suggestions from ministers or officers of congregations in respect to National Service.

Meanwhile, may I submit for their consideration the following tentative suggestions, which are made on my own responsibility ?—

1. That, as a general rule, congregations hold only one service on Sunday morning, afternoon, or evening, as may prove most convenient. Where the churches are only a mile or so apart, the morning people could all attend one of two churches, and the evening people the other. The same minister could then preach at both places, thus setting a minister entirely free for national service.

2. That in cases where it proved impracticable owing to distance for one minister to preach at two places, the one service method might still be followed, so that the minister would be free to employ his week-days at the post office, the gas works, agriculture, or other urgent and important local work.

3. That the salary of the minister remain as at present, but that he hand over the wages earned in national service to the treasurer of his congregation.

4. All out-of-work or retired ministers under 60 years of age will naturally offer their services to the nation of their own accord. Those over 60, if not physically incapacitated, will doubtless be willing to relieve younger men of Sunday duty ; a modest fee in such cases might be paid by the District Association or the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

5. The professors and students at our Colleges, if it is considered unwise to close down their establishments for six months, might give half the day to study, and the other half to national service in their respective communities.

6. Lay-workers and pioneer preachers in charge of congregations would follow the same plan as regular ministers, with the necessary modifications according to circumstances.

7. Women might very well take a turn in conducting services ; and both minister and laymen might suspend the preparation of original sermons during the next six months, and content themselves and perhaps satisfy their congregations by reading a short sermon by Brooke Herford, Robert Collyer, or Stopford Brooke.

Perhaps these few suggestions may stir up thought and lead to prompt action. I have personally assured Mr. Neville Chamberlain that though Unitarians, as he knows, are a small denomination, he may rely on their being ready and willing to do what they can to support him in his great and arduous task.—Yours, &c.,

W. Copeland Bowie.

Essex Hall, London.
February 8, 1917.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. WILLIAM HASLAM.

It is with great regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. William Haslam, which took place at his residence, White Bank, Bolton, on January 28, after a short illness, at the age of 72. Sprung from an old Unitarian stock, he was educated at Castle Howell School, Lancaster, and for that school and its early friendships he had always an affectionate remembrance. His business life was spent in Bolton, where he also took a useful and unostentatious part in public affairs. He was elected to the Bolton School Board in 1879 as an unsectarian candidate, and served for fifteen years. He also showed his interest in the cause of education as Chairman of the Governors of the Bolton High School for Girls, and as a member of the Nathaniel Hulton Trust he sat for many years on the Governing Body of the Bolton Grammar School. His religious affections were centred in Bank Street Chapel, of which he was a life-long member. He served as treasurer of the congregation for very many years. To Unitarian needs throughout the country he was always sympathetic and generous, his name constantly appearing in subscription lists. Only the other day the new "Lawrence Hostel" at Essex Hall received a donation from him. Manchester College, Oxford, always had his friendship and support. A correspondent writes in reference to his simple and unassuming kindness : "He was a good neighbour to a big district which regarded him as the local Squire ; loyal to the faith of his fathers and to his business and political friends ; happiest and most contented in his life at home." In 1872 Mr Haslam married Miss Mary Heywood, daughter of Mr. Robert Heywood, the second Mayor of Bolton, who survives him, along with a daughter and three sons, to whom the sympathy of a very wide circle of friends will be extended. The daughter is Mrs. Oliver Winder, and the sons are Messrs. Robert, Oliver, and William Haslam. A second daughter, Mrs. William Leggatt, died last Christmas day.

The funeral took place on Thursday, February 1, at the Manchester Crematorium. There was a large congregation, including Mrs. Haslam and other members of his family, his brothers, Messrs. J. P. Haslam, J.P., and Lewis Haslam, M.P., Sir Samuel H. Scott, Bart., and many members of Bank Street Chapel. The business and public life of Bolton was also largely represented. The service was conducted by the Rev. Cyril J. Flower, M.A. As the coffin was borne into the chapel Mr. J. T. Flitcroft, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O., played 'O Rest in the Lord,' and at the close of the service he gave Chopin's 'Funeral March.' Miss Lever, Miss Florence Barnes, Mr. S. Haslam, and Mr. W. A. Peers, principals of Bank Street Choir, led the singing of the hymns, "When for me the silent oar" and "God giveth quietness at last," and gave an exceedingly sympathetic and reverent rendering of the quartet "Yea, though I walk through the valley," from Sullivan's 'Light of the World.' In a brief memorial address the Rev. Cyril Flower said it was of less concern to the assembled mourners that Mr. William Haslam had left his impress on the commercial and industrial life of his native town, than that he had left a gracious and helpful memory in many hearts. His business ability was but one aspect of him, and it was allied with qualities of heart and mind which won for him not merely the respect but the high esteem of his fellow citizens and fellow worshippers. Two characteristics stood out in a striking way—his loyalty to causes he had at heart, and his perfect simplicity and unassuming kindness. His loyalty was exemplified in that he preferred to remain a citizen of Bolton, where he had achieved success, rather than seek a sunnier place of retirement. To every one he showed the same courtesy and kindness—to his employees, to the tram men on his route, to his fellow worshippers at Bank Street Chapel, as well as to his friends and acquaintances. His loyalty was exemplified, too, in his loyalty to Bank Street Chapel, where the name of Haslam had for long years been an honourable and honoured name. He was a member of the congregation before the present chapel was erected, and was one of the oldest trustees, and his work of various kinds, his personal influence, and his open-handed generosity were inextricably interwoven in the traditions of the chapel. There never was a man less self-assertive, moving about among his fellow citizens and fellow worshippers with quiet avoidance of display. They were grateful for the memory of a man of uprightness and integrity, with whom it had been a stimulus to be associated in civic and religious life.

MISS HELEN BELL.

By the death of Miss Helen Bell, the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, has lost one of its most loyal and devoted worshippers, and one for whom the warmest affection was felt by all the members of the congregation and the Sunday school. For a considerable period Miss Bell had been far from well, but her final illness (pneumonia, leading to heart failure) was unexpected and very brief.

On Sunday, January 28, tribute was paid to Miss Bell's life and influence, both in Chapel and in School. At the morning service, Mr. Ballantyne spoke as follows :—

> "A virtuous woman who can find ?
> For her price is far above rubies.

"I would ask you all to join with me this morning in a grateful and reverent tribute of thought and memory to one whom most of you have known familiarly and affectionately as 'Helen Bell,' who, until a few short weeks ago, was busily engaged in her many activities in and for this place, and the news of whose death came with such a sad shock to us all.

"A year ago she gave willingly of her energy and ability in the care of our friend the late Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland, the flame of whose life burned out so rapidly. In the same week in January, and in similar illness, she herself was taken away.

"Did one desire to catch a glimpse of her 'constant influence and peculiar grace' one only required to be present at her funeral on Tuesday last, when so large a number of friends representing so many varied interests gathered to do honour to her memory. She had been, as a girl, one of the thirty-four original pupils at the Nottingham High School for Girls, and at least ten, possibly more, of these were present on that occasion.

"We are told by her intimate friends that, in her earlier days, she abandoned gleaming and beautiful hopes for her own future that she might the more fully devote herself to her parents, nursing her mother through a long illness in 1889, and remaining with her father, constantly thoughtful and attentive, until his death in 1907. Whatever regrets may have mingled with her decision at that time, she had long ago consecrated them all on the altar of unselfish service, and many are the stories that tell of her acts of thoughtful kindness. For example, she was, for some time, a 'manager' in connection with the day schools, and it is said that regularly, week by week, she would provide herself with ready money, and cycle round to her schools, on purpose to cash the teachers' cheques, so that they need not spoil their half-holiday by themselves presenting these at the bank. She started, and was largely responsible for, the conduct of a 'Soldiers' Club,' in connection with St. Andrew's Parish Church, and the vicar of the Church, who read the service at her funeral, spoke of her character as 'unique; her utter selflessness was very striking—and her passion for helping other people; she was always ready to set out on an errand of kindness, no matter what the hour of the day or night.'

"She was well read, not only in classical English, but in French and German literature, and her letters and conversation were frequently lit up by apt allusion and quotation. She had a keen sense of humour, too—her quotations were often taken from classical doggerel!—and a still keener interest in humanity, which gathered into her retentive memory innumerable family histories, and stories also of the great men and women of the nineteenth century, the details of which she could verify at once by reference to her newspaper cuttings, so neatly filed and kept. Her botanical knowledge and her intimate acquaintance with the country round about Nottingham were known chiefly to our children, who went with her on many Saturday rambles, which they loved, which she planned and prepared with the minutest care, and during which she acted as guide, friend, and mother to them all. Her gifts for amateur arts and crafts were also brought to the service of the young folks, and it was due entirely to her that the children's gifts for our soldiers were prepared at this Christmas time.

"It is thus she will remain in our minds—at work among the little people—and we shall think of her 'little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love'; for Lowell's lines might, with great fitness, have been applied to her:—

She doeth little kindnesses,
Which most leave undone or despise:
For naught that sets one heart at ease,
And giveth happiness or peace,
Is low-esteemed in her eyes."

SECOND LIEUT. RONALD THOMSON, R.E.

Second Lieut. Ronald Thomson, younger son of the late Mr. Andrew Thomson of Rotherham, died in hospital in France on Saturday, January 27, of wounds received a few days previously. Ronald Thomson was among the first generation of Willaston School boys. He entered fully into the life of the school, and gained the affection of all by his sunny temperament and generous, open-hearted, frank disposition. He was a leader in the athletics of the school and won many prizes on the playing fields. On leaving school, he entered on the profession of a mining and colliery engineer, and quickly became competent in various spheres of work, revealing a fine aptitude for managing men, whilst at the same time securing their devoted affection and respect. Later on, for various reasons, he gave up his chosen profession and entered his father's business in Rotherham. Placing his knowledge of mining engineering at the disposal of the Army, he was given a commission in an appropriate section of the Royal Engineers, to which he was attached on practically continuous active service till a bursting shell closed his life. As at school and in the collieries, so in the Army the same fine qualities won him the esteem and affection of all who came into contact with him. His only thought, on being wounded, was for the other men with him. That was his quality all through. His good heartedness was sound and splendid, like his physical strength; the openness of his mind and the generosity of his disposition gleamed in the eyes that seemed always ready to smile, whilst his presence produced at all times a sense of buoyancy, confidence, and sterling humanity, arousing in those who came into touch with him the impulse to love the man for his very radiance and to seek comradeship with him as a joy. He would have echoed Rupert Brooke's words:—

If I should die, think only this of me:
That there's some corner of a foreign field
That is for ever England.

He joins the countless others, like himself, who have poured out the rich wine of youth in service of universal ideals of human fellowship and the comity of nations, which those who remain are under holiest obligation and responsibility to realise. S. A. M.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

108th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,209	7	1
All Souls' Church, Belfast, per the Rev. E. H. Pickering (fifteenth donation) ..	1	3	3
L. O. M. (fourteenth donation)	1	0	0
X. (twenty-fourth donation)	1	0	0
A. J. A., Deal (twenty-fourth donation)	0	5	0
Miss E. Coe (twelfth donation)	2	0	0
Miss G. Coe (twelfth donation)	1	0	0
Highgate Unitarian Church, per the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth (fourteenth monthly donation)	4	18	7
Mrs. Julian Winser (twenty-fifth donation)	1	0	0
Z. A. (sixteenth donation) ..	10	0	0
Miss Warren (eighth donation)	10	0	0
West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (nineteenth donation)	0	14	0
J., Leicester (sixth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. T. Fielding Johnson (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Miss E. C. Harvey (ninth donation)	3	10	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (fifteenth monthly donation)	1	0	0
	£16,252	17	11

Parcels have been received from: Miss E. A. Evelegh; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Miss Short; Miss Hervey; Mrs. Hanna; Mrs. Abbott; Mrs. Buckton; Mrs. Henry Woodall; Miss D. Badford; High Pavement Working Society, Nottingham (per Miss Guilford); Mrs. William Tangye; Mrs. Woollings; Miss Waterall; Essex Church Work Parties (per Mrs. Worthington); Ullet Road Sewing Circle, Liverpool (per Mrs. Odgers); Miss H. Hankinson; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Meeting (per Mrs. Cobb); Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Miss Norton; Mrs. Chitty; The Misses Beard; Miss C. R. Holland; Miss Dorothy Jones; Wolverhampton High School for Girls; The Girls' Club, Bridport; Mrs. William Tangye.

WEEKLY NOTES.

A first consignment of requisites for the maternity home at Calais has gone out and I hope to receive more layettes soon. We shall need a constant smal supply to keep the cupboards out there stocked and ready to supply the needs of each small applicant.

Here is an extract from a letter just received from a doctor in a small hospital near the Front: "I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the parcels you have been kind enough to send to our dear patients. I send you my warmest thanks and most sincere gratitude. You have already given our brave soldiers many happy days with the games sent; the great generosity of your noble and loyal England, which is never exhausted, has been a great support and consolation to us. Rest assured of our deep gratitude and everlasting remembrance of all England has done for us. Our scanty means often prevent our giving our patients what is really necessary to them. We often have to content ourselves with our own much too slender resources. That is why I feel I may accept your offer of help."

Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Shirts, socks, pants, vests.
Slippers, handkerchiefs.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens, helmets.
Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, backgammon, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais:—

Layettes (on Belgian methods), patterns to be obtained here.
Chemises and flannel petticoats for women.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

GIFT OF TOYS FROM JAPANESE STUDENTS.

Mr. R. Nagai, Mr. Z. Omori, Mr. Z. Toyosaki, and Mr. S. Uchigasaki, former students at Manchester College, Oxford, have forwarded to the Secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at Essex Hall a gift of quite a number of Japanese toys for distribution. A few toys have been presented through Mr. Ion Pritchard to the Invalid Children at Winifred House; the great bulk of the toys will be distributed among young children belonging to our Domestic Mission Sunday Schools in Birmingham, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, and London—preferably to those whose fathers or brothers are serving in the Army. The toys are characteristic examples of the artistic skill and arrangement of colours of the Japanese. Some small dolls are beautiful specimens not only of blended colours but of exceedingly clever crotchet and knitting work. It is delightful to know that those four Japanese students retain such kindly remembrances of the time they spent in England, and show such kindly interest on their part in the children belonging to our poorer Sunday schools.

Our representative writes as follows after a visit to Essex Hall:—

Toys bring happiness to children all the world over, and nowhere, of course, are they welcomed with more delight than in the poorer districts where our Missions are situated; but toys from a foreign country, toys that are for the most part quite unlike those which can be bought at the cheap bazaars in English towns, toys of quaint design that puzzle the brain while their vivid colours make you want to clap your hands with glee—these are gifts from the fairies indeed. And Japanese toys are so daintily made, and bear such striking testimony to the inventive skill and artistic feeling of the people who produce them, that those who are grown up must feel as much pleasure in handling and looking at them as the children themselves. More than one writer familiar with the East has described for us the charming playthings which are made for the little folk in the Land of Nippon, and when you know something of the passion for flowers, the love of small and perfect things, and the delight in beauty and colour which are special features of the Japanese character, you are not surprised to find that spinning-tops are designed to look like blossoms of pink or yellow; that black-haired lady dolls wear paper kimonos of gorgeous crimson, green, or purple, covered with chrysanthemums, flying storks, lotus and water-lilies; and that diminutive elephants made of india-rubber have the most elaborate trappings and headpieces, while round their necks silvery bells are hung on scarlet thread with most decorative effect. All these fascinating articles, and many more besides, were included in the package recently received from Japan at Essex Hall, and some three hundred of them have now been dispatched to the Birmingham, Bristol, Manchester and London Missions, the invalids at Winifred House not being forgotten. The delightful thing about them is that they signify the sympathy and goodwill of friends belonging to a country now politically allied with ours, of which we still know far too little, who have conveyed their kindly sentiments across the sundering seas in the very characteristic form—for the Japanese are great lovers of children—of a gift to our little people. We can imagine with what care they packed those quaint girl and boy dolls, clothed, to the tips of their toes, in fine crochet-work of rainbow hues, and wearing crochet caps that can be removed in a proper and natural way. And what fun they must have had over the little dancing girl in red shoes who strikes attitudes, with the most droll and impish expression, when you manipulate certain strings terminating in the inevitable tassel! Some of the toys had been selected from designs evidently made to suit the English market, and these reminded one too much, perhaps, of commercial interests and the modern method of subordinating artistic originality to the necessity of making money; but where the Japanese toy-maker had had it all his own way the result was charming. Space does not permit a more detailed description of this unique collection of playthings, but the generous donors, who will possibly read these words, may rest assured that many people who saw them have been enabled to share in the happiness of the children among whom they are now being distributed.

LAWRENCE HOUSE.

SOCIAL CENTRE FOR SAILORS AND SOLDIERS.

The Treasurer acknowledges with thanks the following additional contributions: Mr. C. Baker, 5*s.*; Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Crooker, £1; Lieut. W. H. Biggar Eastwood, 10*s.*; Miss Constance M. Gibbs, £1; Mr. Eric Lemmon, £1.

The total amount received to Feb. 7, including £200 from Unitarians in America through the President of the American Unitarian Association, is £6,776 8*s.*

NOTTINGHAM: HIGH PAVEMENT CHAPEL.

The Council has resolved to place in front of the Chapel, and facing the street, a carved oak board with the following inscription:—

THE HIGH PAVEMENT CHAPEL

"The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth."

This Congregation was founded in the seventeenth century by the three clergymen who were ejected from the Churches of St. Mary and St. Peter in this city, under the Act of Uniformity of 1662. (See Memorial Tablet within the building.) The present Chapel was opened in 1876, but the congregation has worshipped on this site since 1690.

We worship the one God and Father of all, as disciples of Jesus Christ, in religious freedom, believing that the revelation of God's Will is confined to no book, or man, or Church, but is made manifest to every listening soul.

No doctrinal confession is required, either of preacher or of worshipper.

Believing in the universal Fatherhood of God, and rejecting all doctrines that set limits to His Love and Grace, we disclaim sectarian exclusiveness, and unite on the basis of our common spiritual needs, rather than upon theological uniformity.

THE UNITARIANS IN HUNGARY.

It is a whole year since anything has been heard from our Hungarian Unitarian friends. The Rev. C. J. Street, who has dispatched several letters, which evidently have never reached their destination, received on 7th inst. a letter from his old college friend, Dr. George Boros, dated December 14 last, in which the following passages occur:—

During the past year "we lived in a perfectly strange atmosphere, out of the reach of proper men, in a region of furious half-men and half-beasts, thirsty for blood and revenge. Whoever will comprehend the greatness of the woes and tears, filling palaces and small huts alike? Just think of the three months which are now closing! Fancy a country moved out of her place—old men, children, women of every age and kind, cattle and fowl, and God knows what not, all flying from home! So did three-fourths of our Unitarians of Transylvania. Many left even Kolozsvar, but we stayed at home. Well, that was a sight, and a work for us here. Many of our ministers were at Kolozsvar on the very day when the Roumanians broke in perfectly unexpectedly. They lost their families, and had no idea of the way which their people took. It took a fortnight for us to see and know how to help the poor refugees. I tell you this much, knowing that you must have been very anxious for us. Of course, now we are over all that, and perhaps some good time is coming for us all "Of our College work I have to say only this much, that we began it in November, and are going on with it peaceably. Our young men are so full of enthusiasm that this year no new students entered.

"Bishop Ferencz is doing his work with his usual zeal and energy. He has finished forty years in his bishoprical chair. We celebrated that rare occasion in the Consistory in a suitable manner.

"Unfortunately, we know nothing of our English friends and very little of the Americans."

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

The Rev. T. P. Spedding has prepared a lecture, illustrated with numerous slides, descriptive of the special war-work which has been undertaken by our Churches. In addition to his own activities among the Home Camps, it deals with the Belgian Hospital Fund, the work of our ministers in the army and the Y.M.C.A., and other topics. Mr. Spedding will be glad to give the lecture free. His only conditions are that steps should be taken to get a good audience, and a collection be made on behalf of his work among the soldiers in camp. Applications should be sent to him at Essex Hall.

Mr. Zenkai Omori, who joined the other Manchester College Japanese students in sending toys for English children, is a Buddhist of the Zen denomination. Before coming to Oxford he had been Warden of a Students' Hostel in Tokyo. He is now Abbot of a large monastery in Japan.

We hear that the Rev. W. A. Weatherall of Cork has been granted six months' leave of absence by his congregation, and is now attached to one of the Y.M.C.A. huts in France.

We note with pleasure that Second Lieut. Arthur P. Evershed, a member of the Billingshurst congregation, has been awarded the Military Cross.

The High Pavement congregation, Nottingham, has added another distinction to its growing list of military honours in the Military Cross awarded to Lieut. Gordon Lee.

The Address on the 'Study of the New Testament,' given by the Rev. H. Gow at the opening of the present session at Manchester College, Oxford, has just been issued in pamphlet form by Messrs. H. Rawson & Co., New Brown Street, Manchester.

The book 'Hurrah and Hallelujah' by Prof. J. P. Bang, D.D., to which we refer in our leading article to-day, is published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, 3*s.* 6*d.* net

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Astley.—At a meeting of the congregation of the Unitarian Chapel on February 4, the following resolution was enthusiastically adopted: "That the Astley congregation tender their most grateful thanks to Mr. Peter Eckersley for his munificent gift of £500, for the purpose of augmenting the Minister's stipend." It is felt by the congregation that the endowment will give permanency to the work, and is an incentive to press forward in a district which is fast developing.

Bedfield.—Deep regret is felt in Bedfield at the sudden death of Mr. Henry Coleby, who was struck down by the cold, while working on a stack, and who in a few hours passed painlessly away at Cowslip Cottage. His widow mourns a true and loving husband, his children a good and kind father, and the Bedfield Unitarian Chapel loses a staunch, practical member; one who by punctual attendance and genuine interest in all the good work going on there, was a strong support. A staunch liberal in religion and politics, brave and outspoken, he never feared to make known and to uphold his principles, even at the risk of personal sacrifice and loss. Mr. Coleby will be greatly missed in Bedfield. All knew him as a kind friend, ever ready to lend a helping hand, thoughtful as a woman in little deeds of kindness; one who hated slander, who steadily set his face against swearing and other evil practices; and who by precept and example helped to keep up a higher tone in the life of the village. The end came as he would have wished. Working up to the last day, only a brief hour or so of illness in his own home, surrounded by dear ones, then a peaceful sleep, the old kindly smile still on his face. The Rev. W. H. Sands conducted the Funeral Service at Hepworth, and held a Memorial Service at Bedfield on the following Sunday, when a large congregation assembled.

Ilford.—A Conference of East London Churches on 'Our Churches now and after the War' will be held at the Ilford Unitarian Church on Saturday, January 20. There will be service at 4, followed by tea, and a Conference at 6, with short addresses on 'Doctrinal and Ecclesiastical Divisions after the War,' 'Religion and Industrial Life,' and 'The Type of Preaching necessary to meet new Needs.' The following are announced to take part, the Revs. A. H. Biggs, W. H. Drummond, and J. A. Pearson, and Messrs. E. R. Fyson, J. Kinsman, and J. W. Peterken.

Liverpool.—The second of the series of Religious Conferences organised by the Liverpool District Missionary Association was held at Bootle, Saturday, January 20, when the attendance was again most encouraging. The afternoon devotional service was conducted by the Rev. Charles Roper. At the evening conference, Mr. C. Sydney Jones occupied the chair, and the Rev. Lawrence Clare, of Birmingham, introduced the subject for discussion, namely 'Loyalty to Jesus.' He was followed by Dr. George Jessel, and the Rev. J. Collins Odgers; and then a number of the friends present joined in the discussion. Naturally, considerably different opinions were expressed representing the Theo-centric and Christo-centric points of view, though there was in all the speakers an avowed loyalty to the essential and underlying principles of Christ's gospel. Each speaker was insistent, however, upon the same demand which such a loyalty imposes, namely, that the profession of discipleship shall be accompanied by a consecrated effort to render concrete the Christian principles in daily life, and that without this there can be no true loyalty. A great deal of interest is taken in these monthly gatherings, and they promise to do much by way of deepening the spiritual life and the sense of corporate unity and fellowship in the churches of this district. Another important object is to make what preparation is possible for the work which the churches will be called upon to do after the war, and so in addition to the conferences eleven of the district churches, at the suggestion of the Association, are holding a special series of services of "consecration, and preparation for the world after the war," simultaneously on successive Sundays in March and April. The five subjects chosen will constitute 'The Message of a Free Faith to a World in Travail.' The announcement of them is arousing much interest, and it is confidently believed that the scheme worked out in this synchronous manner will prove helpful and inspiring to the members of the churches concerned. An enthusiastic desire to be prepared for the eventualities which will come with peace, whatever they may be, is manifesting itself more and more within the Liverpool District churches, and though there is no disposition to claim a gift of prophecy, yet there is a sincere desire to adequately discharge the responsibilities of the situation as and when they present themselves. The fourth Conference is to be held at Ullet Road Church on Saturday, February 17, when the Rev. Joseph Wood, as representing the National Conference, will introduce for discussion the subject of 'Church Methods after the War,' with special reference to types of preaching and forms of religious service.

Nottingham.—The High Pavement Chapel 'Chronicle' for February devotes a good deal of space, as usual, to breezy personal notes by the minister, the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, about the men from the congregation and Sunday school who are serving in the Forces.

"We are proud [Mr. Ballantyne writes] to have now upon our list the names of four Colonials who are at the same time High Pavementers. In addition to Lieut. A. M. Black, of Painton, Canada, who is well known to many of our members, whose Silver Wedding we have the pleasure to record in this issue, and who is remembered also at Christ Church with much affection, we have now to welcome his son, Fred, who, though he has spent most of his life in Canada, was born in Nottingham and baptised at the High Pavement. We are also right glad to place on our Roll the names of Claude and Walter Moore, whose parents left Nottingham for New Zealand while the children were quite young. We have just had the pleasure of a visit from Pte. Claude Moore, on leave from France, where he has experienced much of the heaviest fighting, and he greatly enjoyed seeing in the 'Pavement' records the accounts of his parents' wedding and his own and his brother's baptism by Mr. Harwood. We dwell thus upon these colonial items as being our personal and local reminder of the very close and lasting ties of loyalty and affection which bind the Empire in one living whole.

"Let us further draw attention to the fact that we have now upon the Roll of Honour three ladies, Sister Atkinson (née Stevenson), Nurse Buxton and Nurse Blurton, all on active service and in responsible positions.

"To Lieut. Gordon Lee, we must devote a special paragraph, as his name has repeatedly come before us during the last two months. Firstly we have to congratulate him upon his safe recovery from the wounds which necessitated his return to this country; secondly, upon the award of the B.A. degree from his old college (Jesus, Oxford); then upon his marriage to Miss Scott, and the news which came to hand, so soon thereafter, that he had been placed on the staff of the Contracts

Department at the War Office; and finally we ask him and Mrs. Lee to accept our heartiest congratulations upon the honour conferred upon him by the King, in bestowing upon him the Military Cross for his work in France. That honour falls upon the High Pavement Chapel, too, with which Lieut. Lee has been so closely connected all his life, and we are sure his parents, our friends Mr. and Mrs. Dixon Lee, must feel proud and happy in the midst of these events.

"To another of our 'old boys' Lieut. Richard Briggs, our thoughts have often turned during the last few months. Seriously wounded in many places he returned from France to England, and for some time lay in a very critical condition. But the best result has followed upon his hospital treatment, and not only is he now out of danger, but the leg which it was feared must be amputated has been saved. We are delighted to know, too, from his now happier parents that Richard has been made a 'Fellow' of the Physical Society, with which he was closely associated in Nottingham, in token of the important work he did as X-ray Operator."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Food Consumption of the Poor.

Mrs. Pember Reeves, who is an authority on working-class household budgets, has recently been making special investigations with the object of discovering how much bread, sugar, and meat is consumed by the poor. It is interesting to know that the amount of sugar eaten depends on the number of adults in a family rather than on the number of children, but it must also be remembered that a large number of children implies a degree of poverty which leaves little money for sugar for anybody. One set of statistics compiled by Mrs. Reeves showed that until the servant-keeping class was reached the sugar used was below a pound a week, and the meat, excluding bacon, was about a pound. The bread in no case exceeded 3 lb. 14 oz. Country people eat more bread than townspeople, a great many of the latter taking only 2 lb. or 3 lb. a week, while the few who take 5 lb. or more are probably small meat-eaters. Anything from 3 lb. 8 oz. up to 6, or even 8 lb. of bread is eaten by country people. It has been pointed out by Dr. Russell Wells, who has made a special study of food values, that the agricultural labourer on his present wages would starve if he adhered to Lord Devonport's scale, simply because he cannot afford to buy the meat and other foods necessary to make up for the large amount of bread he consumes, and he is of opinion that, if it is necessary, we must concentrate on wheat, and let meat go, rationing everything except bread.

The Professional Classes and the War.

It is the women and children who have suffered most from the War, and particularly those belonging to the professional classes. In a very large number of cases the distress amongst them has been extreme, and children have had to lose their birthright of an education that would enable them to maintain themselves in after years. The education of children, the training for suitable careers of youths and girls, the maternity home for wives of professional men who are serving their country are the three great branches of the work of the Professional Classes War Relief Fund Council. This Council, which represents all the great professional bodies, is now appealing for funds with which to carry on its urgent work. Sir William Dunn, the Lord Mayor of London, is President of the Council, and will be glad to receive subscriptions and donations at 13-14 Prince's Gate, Kensington, S.W.

THE FREE CATHOLIC

FEBRUARY CONTENTS:—

The Lost Art of Adoration.
By the Rev. Douglas A. G. Muir, M.A. B.D.

Towards Reunion.
By the Right Rev.
The Lord Bishop of Lichfield.
(Being Comments on Bishop Hamilton Baynes' and the Editor's Articles in the January Number.)

He that loveth his life shall lose it.
By Miss M. D. Petre
(the Biographer and Literary Executrix of the late Father Tyrrell).

Towards the Ideal Church.
By the Rev. C. J. Lewis, B.A.

The Sacramental Life.
By the Rev. John S. Burgess.

THE FREE CATHOLIC

Price 1d. Post free 2d. 2s. per Annum.

Editor:
The Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

Orders, with remittances, to the Manager,
Mr. E. ELLIS TOWNLEY,
65 Temple Row, Birmingham.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO, 16 New Brown St., Manchester

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, Cannon Street, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

Directors.
Chairman—Sir Alexander Waldemar Lawrence, Bart.
Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I.
Leslie T. Burnett. | Miss Cecil Gradwell.
Humphrey G. Russell.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. Montgomery, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

Highgate, London, N. Head Mistress Miss Lilian Talbot, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the Head Mistress.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT, any condition; 6*d.* per Platinum pinned tooth on Vulcanite, 1*s.* 9*d.* each on Silver, 2*s.* 9*d.* each on Gold, 9*s.* each on Platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Telephone: 5030 City.

IRISH LINEN LADIES' HANDKERCHIEFS. Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Size 12 in. Bundle of six, 1*s.* 8*d.* (postage 2½*d.*); twelve, 3*s.* 3*d.* (postage 4*d.*). Send postcard for Bargain List, free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

Printed by The Athenæum Press, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 10, 1917.

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3894.
NEW SERIES, No. 997.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

A SPECIAL NUMBER
OF
THE INQUIRER
FOR THE
Sailors and Soldiers
from our Churches and Sunday Schools
will be issued on
SATURDAY, MARCH 3.

Among the Contents will be

A Message to our Men on Active Service.
By the Right Hon. Viscount Bryce, O.M.

Greetings to our Sailors, Soldiers, and Airmen.
By the Revs. A. N. Blatchford, H. E. Dowson, and J. C. Ballantyne.

The Hostel at Essex Hall.
By Mrs. Sydney Martineau.

Carrying On in Church and School.
By the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A., President of the Sunday School Association.

The Jubilee of the Rev. H. E. Dowson.
With Portraits.

The Work of the Belgian Hospital Fund.
By Mrs. Bernard Allen.
With Portrait of Mrs. Allen.

Girls on the Land.
By Miss Ruth Drummond.
With Illustrations.

Some Ministers who are doing their Bit.
With Portraits of Lieut.-Col. the Rev. C. S. Bullock, Lieut. the Rev. H. D. Roberts, the Rev. R. Nicoll Cross, R.A.M.C., 2nd Lieut. the Rev. Walter Short, the Rev. E. Glyn Evans, R.A.M.C., and the Rev. T. P. Spedding.

Copies will be sent to all our Men on Active Service whose names are recorded at Essex Hall, with greetings and good wishes from the Social Centre at Lawrence House, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. The sale price will be 1½d. As we shall be unable to meet any large demand after publication, readers who wish to have extra copies should send in their orders without delay to the Manager, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,
Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

18. Rev. FRANCIS H. JONES, B.A.
25. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.

March.

4. Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, of Manchester College, Oxford.
11. Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, of Manchester College, Oxford.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C. Four Lectures on "FIVE ENGLISH JURISTS" will be delivered by Dr. W. BLAKE ODGERS, on FEBRUARY 20, 21, 22 and 23, at 6 P.M. Admission free to the public.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO, 16 New Brown St., Manchester

JUST PUBLISHED.

Fcap. 8vo, 64 pages, cloth, gilt edges with ribbon, 1s. net; paper covers, 3d. net (postage 1d.).

For those who Mourn.

Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved.

Edited by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

For Freedom and Right.

Booklet in Case: Readings, Prayers, Hymns for Men on Active Service.

Price 6*d.* net.

Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund.

UNITARIAN POCKET BOOK, 1917.

With List of Ministers and Congregations.

Roan, gilt edges, 1*s.* 6*d.* net; by post, 1*s.* 7*d.*

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1917.

Price 1*s.* net; by post, 1*s.* 2*d.*

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

CHANNING HOUSE SCHOOL, HIGHGATE, N.

WANTED, after Easter, a RESIDENT MISTRESS for Swedish Gymnastics, Drill, Games, Dancing, and to help with lower forms. Salary 50*l.* and laundry.—Apply, stating qualifications, to Miss TALBOT.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL.
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, February 18.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P.; 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. DR. HARGROVE.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.; 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Miss MAUD D. BURTT.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. H. O. MONTAGUE.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. FRANCIS HENRY JONES, B.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. S. HITCHCOCK.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30 Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. CLEMENT PIKE.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. E. G. EVANS, B.A.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. W. F. TURLAND.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER; 6, Rev. J. W. LEE.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATH.

BURGESS. — On February 7, at 6 Clarendon Place, Brighton, Ellen Burgess, late of Battle, aged 82.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

CAPABLE, well-educated Unitarian LADY desires post as Secretary, Companion, or any Position of Trust. Highest references.—Apply in first instance to S. G., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

LADY desires post as COMPANION to Lady where maids kept. Undertake light household duties; small salary; southern counties.—A. F., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 75
THE CHURCHES AND NATIONAL SERVICE . 77
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 78
LIFE AND DEATH 78
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Churches and National Service . . 79
Industrial Conscription 79
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
Eternal Life 79
Plato and Christianity 80
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 8
MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
Capt. Richard Lang Roscoe . . . 80
Miss Jennett Humphreys 81
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 81
Sustentation Fund 82
Ministers and National Service . . . 82
Men and Movements 83
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 83
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 84

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

THE celebration of Lincoln's birthday on Monday came at a fortunate moment. It gave Mr. Lloyd George an opportunity of sending a message of friendship to the United States in the form of a tribute to the memory of one of her greatest citizens. It is remarkable how the appreciation of Lincoln's genius has grown among us since the beginning of the war. His practical sagacity and his moral idealism have been to us both a guide and an inspiration, while the most striking passages in his speeches and letters, often expressed in language of a Biblical beauty and simplicity, have become current coin.

* * *

IN his tribute Mr. Lloyd George lays special stress upon Lincoln's iron determination, combined with a rare delicacy of feeling. "I have often been struck," he says, "by the growth both of tenderness and stern determination in the face of Lincoln as shown in his photographs as the war went on. Despite his abhorrence of all that war entailed he persisted in it because he knew that he was sparing life by losing it, that, if he agreed to compromise, the blood that had been shed on a hundred fields would have been shed in vain, that the task of creating a united nation of free men would only have to be undertaken again at even greater cost at some later day."

* * *

THE application of Lincoln's principles of action to present circumstances is quite plain, and Mr. Lloyd George insists upon it in words which are certain to awaken a warm response in American hearts.

> I think [he says] that America now sees that it is human unity and freedom which are again being fought for in this war. The American people under Lincoln fought not a war of conquest but a war of liberation. We to-day are fighting not a war of conquest but a war of liberation, a liberation not of ourselves alone but of all the world, from that body of barbarous doctrine and inhuman practice which has estranged nations, has held back the unity and progress of the world, and which has stood revealed in all its deadly iniquity in the course of this war. In such wars for liberty there can be no compromise. They are either won or lost. In your case it was freedom and unity, or slavery and separation. In our case military power tyrannously used will have succeeded in tearing up treaties and trampling on the rights of others, or liberty and public right will have prevailed. Therefore we believe that the war must be fought out to a finish, for on such an issue there can be no such thing as a drawn war.

* * *

ONCE again Mr. Balfour has shown that literary grace and noble manners have a part to play in high politics. In the letter which he has addressed to the United States Ambassador in London he has given admirable expression to our sentiments of gratitude and admiration for the labours of Mr. Gerard and his colleagues on behalf of British citizens and prisoners of war in Germany.

> His Majesty's Government [he writes] are especially grateful for all that has been done by the United States Diplomatic and Consular officers in Germany for the British prisoners of war. There can be no doubt that their efforts have been the direct cause of a considerable improvement in the treatment of British prisoners, while the machinery devised for relief has, as far as possible, ameliorated the lot of those British subjects who, though not interned, have for various reasons been unable to leave Germany. His Majesty's Government fully realise that these results have not been achieved without much labour on the part of the American officials concerned, and, in some cases, in face of strenuous opposition on the part of the German authorities, and I can assure your Excellency that the work done by the representatives of the United States of America on behalf of British subjects in hostile hands will not readily be forgotten either by his Majesty's Government or by the British people.

* * *

AS we anticipated last week the work of the Neutral Commission for Relief in Belgium is seriously threatened. The American members of the Commission were willing to remain at their posts for the present, but the Germans have imposed such severe restrictions upon their activities that it has been decided that all Americans must officially withdraw from participation in the work of relief in the occupied districts. It is hoped that it will be possible to carry on the work with the help of Holland. Mr. Hoover states that there is six weeks' supply of food in Belgium. But there is no guarantee that the German authorities will give facilities for its distribution or allow other supplies to enter the country. Already two food ships belonging to the Neutral Commission have been sunk. In these circumstances the prospects of a satisfactory arrangement are very dark.

* * *

IT is rather curious to watch the emotional barometer in public speaking and the daily press. After a short period of tragic warning about our desperate condition we have been allowed this week to recover a little composure of mind. The Food Controller has announced his satisfaction with the first fruits of his plan of voluntary rations. We have been informed that we are by no means helpless in face of the submarine menace, and the Admiralty has good reason for regarding the situation as one with which it can deal. Sir Douglas Haig has also given his judgment upon the military situation to a French interviewer in words which justify us in expecting great things in the near future. When every allowance has been made for the adornments and phrase-making, which are an inseparable part of the interviewer's art, we are left with the certainty that no great leader of men would choose this method of speaking to the world, unless he had very good reason for his proud confidence, and felt that it would help the situation for us to know it.

* * *

THE appointment of M. Sazonoff as Russian Ambassador in London is an event of unusual importance. He is a man of ripe political experience and of large and liberal mind. He comes as an avowed friend of a closer understanding between Russia and ourselves at a time when there is eagerness to remove the corroding influence of ignorance and prejudice. Unfortunately knowledge of Russian affairs among ourselves is confined to a few people, and the public mind is swayed more than in the case of other countries by the words of the suspicious critic or the undiscriminating admirer. Of these two classes of mind the former is, in present circumstances, much the more dangerous. The narrow sectarian is to be found even in the most advanced school of democratic politics. He preserves a keen scent for everything which can arouse his criticism, his suspicion or his dislike, and with the high-sounding phrases of internationalism on his lips hinders the growth of friendship by his intolerance towards social and political institutions of a different pattern from his own. At the present time it is the mark both of good manners and of sound judgment to cultivate our knowledge of Russia by every means in our power, and to be very reserved in our criticism of her internal affairs. M. Sazonoff's arrival among us should be a great stimulus to the fulfilment of this task.

A CORRESPONDENCE has been going on in the London press on the perils to which our soldiers are exposed in London. The ugly facts about the prevalence of drink and vice can only be described as in the highest degree disturbing. For some reason, which at present seems to be without any explanation, things have become much worse recently, and some drastic remedy must be found. The facilities for drinking ought to be curtailed, and the neighbourhood of the large railway stations where the mischief exists in its most glaring form might be made into a prohibited area. It would be still more satisfactory if the military authorities would demand that very severe restrictions should be imposed upon the sale of drink all over the country. Many temptations to excess of any kind would thus be removed. It is not nearly so easy to find a direct and practical remedy for the growth of prostitution and disease, but it is clear that the present powers of the police do not enable them to control an abnormal situation, and we are glad to see that the Government has announced its intention of introducing without delay a bill to deal with some of the most glaring aspects of the evil.

* * *

WHILE we deplore these things and insist that religious people must look them plainly in the face, we ought not to forget the splendid work that is being done to guard our men from temptation and to rescue young girls from slippery paths. An article describing the work of the women patrols appeared recently in our columns. The Corps of Motor Transport Volunteers has also rendered splendid service by meeting men on their arrival in London at all hours of the night, and taking them to homes, rest-houses, and other stations, thus saving them from some of the worst dangers of the streets. A suggestion has been made that a scheme for providing wholesome private hospitality in London as is done in many provincial towns would be useful and save some men from drifting into bad company. London is a vast and difficult area to organise for a purpose of this kind; but with energy and resource something might be done on a generous scale, and everything that has in it any promise of help ought to be tried.

* * *

WE are glad to see that the Fight for Right is still pursuing its campaign. In a letter which Miss Evelyn Underhill has sent to the press in order to call attention to a new programme of Sunday lectures, there are some wise words on the importance of the spiritual factor, which we should do well to lay to heart.

The object of these meetings [she writes] is both practical and ideal. They are intended to bring those who are present into contact with minds which can give them the steadfast idealism and reasoned faith that issue in patience, fortitude, and self-sacrifice; re-affirming essential truths easily obscured by the crowded incidents and arguments amongst which we live. Temptations to despondency, impatience, unreasoning violence, personal or vicarious selfishness, are waiting for us all in the weeks that lie ahead. Those who arm their fellow-citizens against these demons are truly producing munitions of war.

* * *

IN the course of a letter to The Westminster Gazette Mr. J. H. Wicksteed, who has returned to England after several months in France as a lecturer for the Y.M.C.A., pays a fine tribute to Mr. Asquith and his rare power of patriotic self-effacement.

> The very symbol of the national character [he writes] seems to be the classic figure of Mr. Asquith. During the eight years he held the highest place in the State, that State reached an unparalleled position of power and prestige in Europe and the world, and a place in history that probably no other country has secured. Yet we now see him devoting himself almost without pause and quite without bitterness to the task of guiding, heartening, and consolidating the nation from the ranks, as he so long did from the Premiership. One is almost grateful for the chance that has given our history so Roman a figure. He has endured the final test of greatness and proved once more that there is a patriotism in our greatest Englishmen, clear of every vestige of self-seeking.

* * *

IN a letter to Miss Penrose, the Principal of Somerville College, Oxford, the President of the Board of Education has advised that women students should not interrupt their academic course at present in spite of a good deal of eagerness to take up work more directly connected with the war.

> My own view is that for the present women students at the universities should continue their academic courses until such time as they may be called up by the branch of the National Service Department presided over by Mrs. Tennant, and I am glad to say that Mrs. Tennant and Mr. Neville Chamberlain entirely concur in this opinion....It should be remembered that women training for the high profession of teaching are in a very real sense equipping themselves for a valuable and expert branch of National Service. The gifts and aptitudes which go to the making of a teacher are none too common, and it would be an ill-measure of national economy to deplete our colleges of students who are designed by their qualities and discipline for a career so exacting in its demands upon brain and character.

THE CHURCHES AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

IT is clear that the appeal for National Service has entered the church door as well as the factory and the office. It is recognised that the question of man power affects all sorts and conditions of people without distinction of profession or class. The clergy can no longer stand apart, saying "this duty is for other men but not for us." In present circumstances no appeal can be made to a general sentiment of respect for a sacred calling or to the more formidable argument of a real conscientious objection to combatant service. A man who has not renounced the convenience of food and clothing, and still claims from society his own share of physical comfort, cannot withdraw himself from co-operative effort for the common safety, however irksome or disagreeable the task may be. The problem is thus a much simpler one than it was, and the fact that the clergy claimed exemption from combatant service, necessarily involving a position of safety and comfort for themselves, which was denied to other men, lays upon them the obligation not to give the slightest ground for misunderstanding in present circumstances.

So far as the new call for service affects the students in theological colleges it appears to us hardly open to argument that they ought to obey it instantly and completely. If it involves some interruption to their studies and postpones their ordination for a year, that is a matter of small consequence. Even were there some risk to the completeness of their special training, which we deny, the moral risk of hesitation or refusal is far more serious. We doubt whether it is possible at the present moment for any young man to live the secluded and comfortable life of a student without sacrificing a good deal of his sensitiveness to the claims of public duty. In so far as he does this, and he may do it quite unconsciously so strong is the power of dull convention in religion, he will speak the message of service and self-sacrifice to other men with a fatal loss of power for the rest of his days. There are some blunders which are never retrieved on this side of the grave.

Very different considerations apply in the case of a man who has entered upon the full responsibilities of the ministry, and with growing years and ripening experience has formed all sorts of links of sympathy and helpfulness with other people. Here the difficulty of decision is often very grave, but it must be faced with such a strong sense of the tremendous issues which are at stake for our own country and for mankind, that conventional arguments and the mirage of clericalism are completely driven from the mind. So far as we have been able to glean information on the subject there is in some quarters a good deal of inertia. Minister and church officers alike feel that it is much easier to go on just as they are. They are more conscious of their own difficulties than of the urgency of the nation's call, and they are not likely to make any change in their familiar routine except under the lash of compulsion. On the other hand, there are ministers all over the country who are eager to be used. Most of them are men still dowered with the gift of youth. They know that the work which they have begun can be carried on by others till they return. Perhaps, with the optimism natural to their years, they may even feel that an upheaval will act as a goad to the churches and force them to revise their methods and to develop their hidden resources of power. To all such men let every encouragement be given to follow their star. There will be a new accent in their preaching, and a richer sympathy for the difficulties and sorrows of common life, when they come back.

The letter by the Rev. Cyril Flower, which we publish to-day, raises questions of a rather different order. There are men, we feel, who cannot be spared, so far as it is right to use these words at all in days when the choicest gifts are being laid on the altar of sacrifice. They are men of large responsibilities, ripe in thought, rich in experience, deeply but humbly conscious of powers of spiritual teaching and helpfulness to which most men can lay no claim. Deep in their souls they may hear the divine call to remain at their posts, even at the risk of criticism and misunderstanding; though others among them may feel that in a cause, which has claimed most of our choicest spirits, they must not hold back. But here we have no desire to criticise, and we certainly have no right to indulge in any peremptory advice. We may, however, express the fervent hope that men of this kind, who are serving the nation's need best where they are, will strain every nerve to help to release others. A drastic revision of the weekly programme of church work has become necessary. A good many meetings are still held just because they are customary and pleasant. These and other things must be dropped, with a stern resolve that in every direction there shall be an economy of effort, so as to allow the energies of the ministers who remain to be effective over a wider field.

In regard to all the matters which we have mentioned we require a strong and intelligent public opinion within the churches themselves. The whole subject should be discussed as a matter of urgent business by bodies of ministers and local associations, with a view to common action. The ministry, like every other calling, must adjust itself to strange and startling conditions; and with goodwill it can be done without injury to the religious life of the country. The danger that we have to fear chiefly is not that of spiritual destitution, if too many ministers accept the call to national service. It springs rather from the conservatism of settled habits, which cramps imagination and makes men hostile to unfamiliar paths of duty. There is no trace of the hard anti-clericalism of the Continental type in the English mind, but there is a growing feeling of estrangement between the lay and the parsonic point of view. This breach will be widened, and serious injury will be done to our highest spiritual ideals, if professional teachers of religion make claims for themselves which they would not admit in the case of other men, or do anything, at a time when we are all partners in a common suffering and a common hope, to increase their aloofness from their fellow citizens, as men who feel, and think, and act in a class apart.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

IMMORTALITY.

FOIL'D by our fellow-men, depress'd, outworn,
We leave the brutal world to take its way,
And, Patience! in another life, we say,
The world shall be thrust down, and we up-borne.

And will not, then, the immortal armies scorn
The world's poor, routed leavings? or will they,
Who fail'd under the heat of this life's day,
Support the fervours of the heavenly morn?
No, no! the energy of life may be Kept on after the grave, but not begun;
And he who flagg'd not in the earthly strife,

From strength to strength advancing—only he,
His soul well-knit, and all his battles won,
Mounts, and that hardly, to eternal life.

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

A GREAT artist in words, he [Wordsworth] was none the less an ardent citizen. He was a mystic and yet a fighter for his ideals in this present world. "As the poet of high-minded loyalty to his native land," Swinburne truly says, "he stands alone above all his compeers and successors," but the liberty of Spain was as sacred to him as that of England. And we cannot forget that he learnt his early lessons of liberty in France, that nation which has been a school of Freedom, that nation to which in Europe and in the world of ideas we owe so much, and by whose side we stand now in comradeship a century later in the cause of national independence. One of the drawbacks of war-time is that it tends to encourage self-satisfaction and to lessen self-knowledge. And self-satisfied nations like self-satisfied individuals become rather wearisome. We may well beware of boasting too much of our intellectual achievements as a nation, but we can be modestly proud of our line of great English poets. The best poems of these poets are to successive generations of true poetry-lovers like homes—homes not made with hands—to which they resort with delight, for comradeship, for inspiration. Mr. Bradley has said of Wordsworth that those who learn to love him never let him go' and it is true. He is stern, he is reserved, but he is intensely human, and, though in many respects a solitary man, he believes profoundly in the value of human companionship. Not for Wordsworth is "the heart that lives alone, housed in a dream." We have to stand by one another here and now, to use Wordsworth's words, "not in Utopia, but in the very world which is the world of all of us."

ARTHUR H. D. ACLAND.

GRANT, O merciful God, that we may ever have a kind and compassionate heart towards all whose lot is harder, and who, in poverty or sickness, in homelessness and want, shrink before the cold and the storms of winter. May we enjoy no blessing which thou hast given us, without the desire and purpose to do what we can to help and cheer those who are less happy than ourselves. And may we be permitted to work with thee in preparing for the coming of a brighter season of hope for all, and the awakening of the whole world to new life and light in thee. AMEN.

LIFE AND DEATH.

FOR the individual the question of supreme importance is whether there is a future for him when this present life comes to an end, and how the conditions of it are determined. Insignificant in the universe the single life, of man or gnat alike, to itself it is of momentous concern.

Few will share Milton's horror of annihilation, which he expresses through the mouth of Satan, whose was "the greatest share of endless pain" in hell:—

Who would lose
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
These thoughts that wander through eternity
To perish rather, swallowed up and lost
In the wide womb of uncreated Night,
Devoid of sense and motion?

Yet the lines are evidence of the universal will to live which in a great soul prevails to so extreme a degree, and the alternatives face us of the life of disembodied spirit which we cannot conceive of as possible, or extinction as of the flame of a candle when it is blown out, which we shrink from as alien to spiritual beings such as we know ourselves to be at our best.

The question "If a man die shall he live again?" is ancient and always urgent, and with answers heretofore given mankind has never been fully satisfied. If then some one of light and leading can help us in our perplexity it is his duty to come forward, and we should be grateful for the attempt he makes, even though we may doubt of his conclusions. Therefore is it that I come forward to express my thanks to Sir Oliver Lodge for his 'Raymond,' and to offer a few remarks upon it which may be helpful to inquirers.

It seems to me that the following statements may be accepted as facts on the word of a writer whom no one will condemn as either knave or fool, wilfully deceiving, or blindly deceived.

1. That the members of an exceptionally intelligent and highly educated family, formerly sceptical, have been "gradually convinced by direct experience" of the reality of supernormal intercourse with the departed.

2. That these experiences have been genuine, and many of them of a very remarkable kind, e.g., Myers' message, the photograph, "Mr. Jackson," simultaneous sittings.

3. That the phenomena reported in this book might be multiplied a thousand times and attested by evidence no less reliable.

From these Sir Oliver Lodge draws the conclusion that our dead live, are desirous of communicating with us, and in fact do so, not directly but through the intervention of two mediums, one on their side, the other on ours.

The fact that the mediums and the methods of communication are not such as we should expect to be employed in so high and solemn a transaction, and that the communications are more often of a very trivial nature is not, by itself, a justification of disbelief. These, too, are phenomena which we have to account for one way or another, and all the more so that they are opposed to what we should anticipate. One who professes to bring us messages from the world beyond would not, we should think, deliberately play the fool as e.g., Feda, the "control" does. Certainly she would not by such means win credit to her pretensions.

I cannot account for many of the facts, facts the like of which compelled the faith of such men as Crookes, Myers, and Wallace. And yet I am not myself convinced.

1. Because I cannot accept evidence as to so grave and seemingly improbable a conclusion without such minute and thorough examination of it as I have not the opportunity nor, perhaps, the skill to make. There are many remarkable experiences of my own life which I feel on reflection would not appear the same after they had undergone cross-examination. The will to believe carries with it the temptation to develop, maintain, amplify, explain. I doubt if anyone could tell a remarkable dream without some added details or amendments, for these will insinuate themselves into his story and become a part of it, however watchful he be.

2. Because this same will to believe acts most strongly where the case is not one of a little vanity in telling a good tale, but of communion with a dearly loved soul rudely torn away from us and passed we know not whither to a higher life or nothingness. Those who met round the table at Mariemont were united in the intimate acquaintance of Raymond, and in yearning love for him. Would not this union of thought and desire create an atmosphere favourable to the acceptance of any phenomena which could be interpreted as genuine evidence, and would it not communicate itself to the medium through whom the longed-for messages came? There should have been present some careful independent observer, but we shall be told that such a one would have rendered the séance inoperative, and I quite believe it.

3. Because it is very difficult to believe that of the myriads of loving souls who have passed away, many of the wisest and best of mankind, and many who must have had most serious communications to make to their friends left behind, only a few individuals have found the way to make themselves known, and that what these had to say was for the most part of a quite obvious or trivial kind. The real test would be if we could learn through a medium something known only to the dead and verify it beyond dispute. Such tests have been contrived; so far as I know they have never succeeded.

4. Because the "possible danger," and a very real one it is, of seeking intercourse with the dead is admitted by Sir Oliver. Indeed his warning is a very solemn one (p. 225), "may in the long run have disastrous consequences," he says. But if it is so, is not this at least a suggestion of something wrong and deceptive in Spiritualism? Should our intercourse with our dear ones departed be more perilous for us than was our communication with them on earth by voice or letter or telexhone or wireless? Ought it not rather to be all for our good?

But if it is a strain on certain occult faculties of mind, if it lends itself to delusion and fraud, ought we not to leave the investigation of it to experts like the author of 'Raymond,' and, while accepting his statements with respect, caution all whom we can influence from interference in doings which may be as dangerous to the inexpert as are experiments with high explosives?

I would add that an improbable explanation of extraordinary happenings ought to be preferred to a more obvious but far more improbable one, such as spiritualists so confidently put forward.

The old grounds of the almost universal expectation of life after death remain with us. Man "knows he was not made to die" though all experience seems to tell him the contrary. God keeps the secret from us. What he does is best. Into his hands we commend our spirits.

CHARLES HARGROVE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE CHURCHES AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I am sure that ministers of our churches will be grateful to the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie for his tentative suggestions for enabling them to meet the urgent need of the present crisis. The question of "national service" is one which must have presented itself to all of us in a very direct manner during the last two and a half years, and we have most of us probably been more than once in earnest consultation with our church officers and congregations on the matter. As one of those ministers of military age who, almost against his own judgment, has been constrained to remain at his post by very strong pressure of opinion, I feel moved to offer two criticisms of Mr. Bowie's otherwise excellent suggestions. In paragraph (1) it is assumed that if a minister is released from preaching on Sundays he is thereby set "entirely free for national service." But, as a matter of fact, preaching and preparation for preaching occupies only a fragment of our time and constitutes only a fraction of the work that we as ministers have undertaken to do. It is not merely visiting in the sense of wandering from house to house and asking how people are, which occupies a great part of the minister's time; rather it is the unceasing demands of co-operation through sympathy, friendship, and advice with numbers of people in all kinds of need which cause the heaviest drain alike on the nervous and spiritual energy, and the time of the modern minister. It is not my judgment merely, but the judgment of professional and business men of my congregation, that this work is not less needed now, but more, and that it constitutes a national service the proper fulfilment of which requires the utmost a man can give.

In paragraph (7) Mr. Bowie gives the impression that even as a preacher the minister is almost unnecessary. The conclusion would appear to be that the minister is one of those luxuries which should be eliminated in war-time, for, according to the suggestions (1) and (7), if he is set free from preaching there is no ministerial work important enough to keep him from "the post office, the gas works, agriculture, or other urgent and important local work"; while congregations will be satisfied with "a short sermon by Brooke Herford, Robert Collyer, or Stopford Brooke" read to them. Why should not the members of congregations read such sermons for themselves at home, and so save the coal used in heating and lighting chapels? If the situation is critical enough, and the Church as an institution of so little help to the nation as the suggestions seem to imply, let us close the churches. Indeed, if there is no prophetic function in our ministry, no inspiration which the minister receives to unfold to the worshippers, it is time we ceased, and reunited our heretic movement with the Church whose servant is priest, not prophet. One wonders what value to the people a Church will be which, having once discarded ritual in favour of a pulpit which is in touch with modern life and problems, now proposes to turn the pulpit into a reading-desk from which old sermons (however exalted and inspired in their day), not definitely bearing on any of the immediate problems and vital issues of the present and future, are to be recited?—Yours, &c.,

J. CYRIL FLOWER.

Bank Street Chapel, Bolton.
February 12, 1917.

INDUSTRIAL CONSCRIPTION.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—What shall it profit a nation if it gain the victory over the enemy, and lose its own soul? That seems not unlikely to be our position at the end of the war. We are now threatened, with, I deeply regret to see, your approval, with a still further inroad on our liberties, viz., industrial conscription, if Mr. Neville Chamberlain's scheme for voluntary service does not succeed. Some curtailment of personal liberty is, of course, inevitable in war, but that made by the Government has already exceeded the necessities of the case, and, so far from having more of it, we want less. It would take up too much of your space to set forth the special case against industrial conscription, which has been admirably done in a series of trenchant articles in The Nation, but the general case is that if we cannot win the war by our free efforts, we do not deserve to win it at all. If, after thirty months of war, some people are still employing labour for useless ends, the remedy is not industrial conscription, but further taxation of incomes and luxuries, so that expenditure will be more and more restricted to necessaries. Industrial conscription will hopelessly disorganise business, and, therefore, finance, which is the keystone of the Alliance. Let us put all thought of it from us, and, when all the full-time volunteers have come forward, organise the part-time ones. Some of us who are already doing four hours' war-work a day, besides working harder than ever before at our own business, will be prepared to do a bit more.—Yours, &c.,

FREDK. G. JACKSON.

Leeds.
February 13, 1917.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

ETERNAL LIFE.

ETERNAL LIFE, HERE AND HEREAFTER. By Sydney H. Mellone, M.A., D.Sc. London: at the Lindsey Press. 2*s*. net.

DR. MELLONE'S new volume presents special difficulties to a reviewer. In less than three hundred pages it covers a very wide field, and most of the vital problems of modern religious thought, especially as they are affected by historical inquiry and modern conceptions of the universe, come up for brief and often very suggestive treatment. On one page the reader finds himself confronted with the difficulties of the apocalyptic elements in the teaching of Christ, on another the conflict between modern materialism and spiritual experience is discussed, and between the two there is a long section devoted to the deeper currents of religious life in the Middle Ages. All this shows that the author is not afraid of the foolish gibe that broad surveys often mean shallow thinking or feeble scholarship. Himself master of the facts, he has learned the art of selection in the interest of the ordinary reader, and not less for the sake of the theme which runs like a golden thread through his pages and gives to all these facts their place and meaning. That theme is the conception of eternal life amid the things of time as the essential and abiding element in religion, while problems of thought, forms of ritual, and the imperfect hopes of men rise and pass away. Life is not all movement and progress, it is also in the deepest sense attainment as well. "Endless progress to perfection," Dr. Mellone writes, "must mean something more than the endless deferring of perfection. The process must involve a genuine attainment of something which may be an abiding possession; an attainment which is eternal because nothing that happens through time can weaken or destroy it; an attainment which does not go on simply to change into something else; an attainment which is not a mere becoming but a being." In obedience to this fundamental view he dismisses the idea of a limited God, who is always becoming something which He was not before, to which Mr. Wells has given recently some emotional currency. "Surely," he says, "the deification of progress through effort reduces itself to impossibility in the demand for a progressive Deity,—a Deity who has his own struggles to carry through, and who, though he is winning, has not yet won, and needs our help if he is to win at all."

Dr. Mellone devotes several interesting pages to a discussion of the apocalyptic element in the teaching of Christ; but in our judgment he hardly succeeds in meeting all the difficulties it suggests, if the most startling sayings are to be accepted as strictly authentic. We agree, however, that he is entirely on right lines when he reminds us that the moral teaching is central and is not concerned with a temporary scheme of life but with human nature as it existed then and as it exists now. "The truth is that Jesus builds his practical teaching on his conception of God which is much more fundamental to the ethics of the Gospels than are the varying conceptions of how the kingdom is to come. From that conception of God he deduces, for all time, principles of life showing what the nature of the kingdom is."

The closing chapters, which deal with philosophical problems where the author is on his own chosen ground, will repay close attention. We can only select two points for passing notice. We are grateful to Dr. Mellone for the emphasis with which he dismisses the weary weight of palpable error which many Christian theologians still drag about with them. "Science," he says, "has wrested from theology the whole domain of cosmological theory; and in the process she has destroyed the traditional doctrine of creation (involving the separate and special creation of man) with the whole scheme of beliefs dependent upon it." This is strictly true, and yet there is still a mass of theological writing, produced by men who in other respects are neither ignorant nor unintelligent, which has not advanced many inches beyond the science of the Middle Ages. On the subject of pragmatism, which has attracted many men as a way of escape from the hard tasks of thinking, Dr. Mellone is equally clear and illuminating. "The will to believe," he says, "creates, not truth which was unreal before, but evidence which did not exist before; and therein lies all its significance." We have never seen a principle of far-reaching significance for religious thought put in a terser, or more striking way. But this limitation does nothing to lessen the importance of the life of obedience and moral heroism for the thinker, for if truth itself is beyond our power either to create or to destroy, "new evidence for the truth of religious belief may be created and has been created again and again by those who are willing to make such belief a working power in their lives."

Plato and Christianity. By William Temple. London: Macmillan & Co. 2*s*. net.

This little volume consists of three lectures delivered in Oxford and London in 1915 and 1916. It contains a brief but excellent exposition of Plato's teaching, based upon a study of the leading Dialogues in the probable order of their production, and it offers abundant evidence that "Plato's works afford a definite anticipation of much that Christianity gave to the world." But Platonism not only anticipated Christianity in many ways; it also exercised a most vital and far-reaching influence upon it. Mr. Temple clearly indicates the nature of this influence, both within the New Testament and in the later developments of Christian thought. Particularly striking was this influence in shaping the Christian doctrine of immortality; while some of the main ideas of St. Augustine's 'City of God,' which laid the foundation of the mediæval theory of civilisation, are, as Mr. Temple says, "drawn straight from 'The Republic' itself."

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Messrs. George Allen & Unwin, Ltd.—National Defence: J. Ramsay Macdonald. 2*s*. 6*d*. net. Via Pacis. 1*s*. net.

Messrs. G. Bell & Sons, Ltd.—The Hope for Society: Essays on "Social Reconstruction after the War." By Various Writers. Edited by Miss Lucy Gardner. 3*s*. net.

Cambridge University Press.—Outlines of Medieval History: C. W. Previté Orton. 10*s*. 6*d*. net.

Constable & Co., Ltd.—Herbert Spencer: Hugh Elliot. 6*s*. net.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. — The Sayings of Christ: J. W. Mackail. 2*s*. net.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd. — Stray Birds: Sir Rabindranath Tagore. 4*s*. 6*d*. net. Thoughts on Religion at the Front: The Rev. Neville S. Talbot. 2*s*. net.

Messrs. T. Fisher Unwin.—The Historical Development of Religion in China: Walter J. Clennell. 6*s*. net.

The University of London Press.—Asia and Australasia: Leonard Brooks. 3*s*. net.

Miscellaneous.

Cornhill Magazine.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

CAPT. RICHARD LANG ROSCOE.

The death of Capt. Richard Roscoe, the eldest son of Philip and Margaret Roscoe, brings deep sorrow not only to his parents but to all his friends. He was mortally wounded by shell fire on Saturday, February 3, when serving in the trenches, and died in a Field Ambulance Station on the following day. All who knew him felt a profound respect and admiration for his character. He was educated at Aldenham School, where he was beloved by masters and schoolfellows alike. His influence was felt throughout the school and made always for manliness and purity. He was even then a fine soldier, a born leader, a boy who, without making claims for himself, was intuitively followed and trusted and revered by others. He was the best shot in the school and captain of the School Corps. No one could be less military than Dick Roscoe in the sense of desiring war or the rewards of war. He loved study and nature and, above all, his home. He had no thoughts of glory. His nature desired strenuous work in an atmosphere of love and peace. It is of such boys that the noblest soldiers are made in this time of our nation's need.

At the beginning of the war he enlisted at once, although he was not 18 years of age. After a short course of training in the Inns of Court O.T.C. he was gazetted second lieutenant in the Royal Fusiliers.

For some time he was at Horsham with his battalion, and then went out to France in November, 1915. Since then he has seen constant fighting. He won the Military Cross for distinguished conduct in the Ancre battle in November, 1916. Last October he was given the rank of captain, which was confirmed as his permanent rank in December. He was not yet 20 years of age when he was killed, and was one of the youngest captains in the British Army. All who knew him felt in him a wisdom and strength and ripeness of character far beyond his years. There was that in him which men gladly called master, and junior officers old enough to be his father willingly obeyed and followed him, and yet he never lost his simple boyishness, his bright humour, his delight in little things. He had the heart of a child in his innocence and purity and gentleness. He was brave and tender and true to the inmost fibre of his being. He knew well the stern and awful side of war. His dearest friend had been killed at his side and he had suffered deeply. It made him more gentle and more strong. There was a depth of love and tenderness in him which was beyond all words.

His Colonel writes of him: "He was the most dependable officer I have ever handled, and I knew whatever post or position he held, all would be well. I am so glad I got him his Military Cross in time for him to enjoy it. He had earned it over and over again. He hated the limelight, and to do a day in the trenches as he did it was worth any honour."

His Major writes: "He was the most brilliant and promising soldier I have seen. Of his great nature I need not write, nor need I do more than tell you how deeply we all sympathise with you in this blow. For me who shared the same tent in the old happy days at Berkhampstead and who rose with him in the Battalion, who shared so many dangers of the trenches and endured with him the Somme and the Ancre it is a shock more complete than I have suffered in the whole course of this war. To-day I paid my last tribute to him in a little soldiers' graveyard near the Casualty Clearing Station, where he died. His own men bore him to the grave with the Union Jack over him, and we sounded the Last Post bravely at the end. Then each of us stepped forward and saluted one who by his youth put many to the blush and by his goodness and bravery has been an example to us all."

His parents and those who knew and loved him do not need these testimonies. We know well what he was, but it is good to hear that he was so beloved and honoured by his officers and men. Such memories fill our hearts with helpless grief and longing as we think of shattered hopes and of all that might have been, but they fill us too with a sense of peace and thankfulness. In such a life and death there is something beyond tears, something which speaks to us of God and of eternal things. H. G.

MISS JENNETT HUMPHREYS.

MISS M. C. MARTINEAU has sent us the following tribute to the memory of Miss Jennett Humphreys, who was formerly so well known in our Sunday Schools as a teacher and a writer of charming religious books for children :—

One of the oldest friends of Portland British and Sunday Schools—and of some other schools too—has now passed away, in her 88th year. She died on February 6.

It must have been in the later fifties—probably in 1858—that Miss Jennett Humphreys first appeared at what was then the Newman Street Sunday School, and offered to take a class. I remember she was in deep mourning—for her father, I believe. She and her mother were then living in Westbourne Park Road, and I in Westbourne Street ; so that we soon formed the habit of walking together to the Sunday school, and many a pleasant walk we had. Her genial disposition, and the earnestness with which she took up the work, soon made her valued as a teacher and a friend. By the infants she was especially beloved ; and to the teachers in the day school she was a valuable friend. At a school excursion her robust health, and her bright, cheery humour made her an invaluable helper. On one occasion, having been wakened an hour too early, she spent the spare time before starting for the school in mowing her grass plot. On another occasion, when the rain had spoilt our excursion, and I tried to prevent the children from bringing their noisy toys into the teachers' tent, she pleaded that they should be allowed to get as much enjoyment as they could from a rainy day.

When the Sunday school at Essex Church was opened she transferred her Sunday activities thither, while regularly devoting all her Tuesdays to the infants at Portland British School which she continued to do even after it was transferred to the L.C.C. and as long as her failing strength would permit.

When the Essex Church Sunday School was able to do without her, and the new Mission at Bell Street was opened, she became one of the leading workers there, playing the harmonium at the morning and evening services, and teaching in the morning Sunday school—only ceasing to do so when failing sight and feeble limbs made it unsafe for her to cross the Edgware Road alone.

She wrote many little books for children, as well as songs and poems, and only a few years ago, hearing that the children of an infant school in Suffolk were to have a treat in a hayfield, she wrote a poem for them to sing on the occasion. She also wrote for newspapers and magazines. She had a great flow of words, and considerable humour. I remember seeing a paragraph in a paper headed 'Court Concert,' which proved to be a lively account of an out-of-door concert given by some members of the Kyrle Society to the tenants of one of Miss Hill's tenement dwellings.

After her mother's death she removed to Kilburn, where she lived alone till about three years ago. Then her niece, who had been living near her, found a house at Harrow which was large enough for them both, and where her niece and her niece's family could minister to her in her latter days, when she was infirm and nearly blind. Last July, hearing that the Portland Sunday School children were having their treat about three miles from Harrow, she ordered a fly, and went to renew her acquaintance with them and their teachers.

Writing to me about Christmas, she mentioned that she was keeping her room with a cold. That was the beginning of her last illness.

She was buried in Paddington Cemetery on February 9. The Rev. A. Golland, from Bell Street Domestic Mission, took the service, and representatives from the L.C.C. and various Sunday schools attended. M. C. M.

Another friend writes :—Miss Humphreys was Hon. Secretary of the Portland British Schools until 1898, when the London School Board took over the day school work. She, however, remained a Manager of the school under the Board or London County Council till about 1910, and continued her weekly visits to the school to see the teachers in all departments and to teach songs to the infants and play for their drill until the winter of 1913-14, a few months before the old Portland buildings were closed as a school. She was able to pay one visit to the teachers and children in the new building in Upper Marylebone Street, driving over from Harrow for the express purpose one afternoon in the summer of 1915. Though she gave up her work as teacher in the Sunday school many years ago, she continued to the end to take great interest in it. She gave the address and presented the prizes in 1911 and last summer, 1916, drove over from Harrow to join the children at their summer excursion at Eastcote, bringing with her toys she had made herself for prizes for the sports. I cannot forbear adding that I saw Miss Humphreys a few weeks before her death. She had just become quite blind, but was still intellectually vigorous and full of wide sympathy and cheerful interest in all that was going on. She retained her marvellous memory to the very last."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium ; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais ; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

109th LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,252	17	11
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (thirty-first monthly donation)	4	0	0
Mr. F. Maddison (twenty-third donation)	0	10	0
Mr. Geo. Banks (twenty-fifth donation)	1	0	0
Miss A. J. Partridge (fourth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. Fred Cullis	0	10	0
Mrs. T. H. Russell (tenth donation)	5	0	0
	£16,268	17	11

Parcels have been received from : Mrs. H. Woodall ; Mr. Edward Chitty ; Mrs. George Webb ; Miss Warren ; Mrs. and Miss Carter ; Mrs. Bowen Evans ; Belgian Ladies' Sewing Committee, Sheffield ; Mr. G. Belton Cobb ; Mrs. Long ; Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Miss E. M. Buckley) ; Mrs. Helsby ; Mrs. Thorneley ; Miss Norton ; Miss E. Higginson ; Mrs. Notcutt ; Essex Church Work Parties (per Mrs. Worthington) ; The Unitarian Church, Swansea ; Miss Evelegh and Miss Minns ; Mrs. Babington ; Miss Jessie Green ; Bank Street, Bolton, War Workers Circle (per Mrs. Flower) ; Miss A. Garrett ; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society, Hampstead (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb).

SPECIAL WANTS.

Shirts, socks, pants, vests.

Slippers, handkerchiefs.

Mufflers, cardigans, mittens, helmets.

Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, backgammon, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais :—

Layettes (on Belgian methods), patterns to be obtained here.

Chemises and flannel petticoats for women.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the contributors, subscribers and friends of the Sustentation Fund for the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends was held at University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., on Tuesday, February 13. The chair was taken by the President, Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke, and there were also present the Revs. Dr. Hargrove, F. K. Freeston, W. G. Tarrant, W. Copeland Bowie, C. J. Street, J. A. Pearson, and Messrs. P. Preston, F. W. Monks, Ion Pritchard, W. Byng Kenrick, T. Oliver Lee, Ronald P. Jones, Hon. Treasurer, and the Rev. W. H. Drummond, Acting Hon. Secretary.

The Annual Report called attention to the fact that during the past year some important churches have ceased to be eligible for grants owing to such a shrinkage in their financial resources that they are no longer able to support a regular ministry. On the other hand, some congregations which were formerly independent, have found it necessary to apply to the Fund for help. It has become apparent to the Managers that the scheme of classification needs greater elasticity than is possible under the original scheme of minimum stipends. The whole matter is being carefully considered with a view to some revision at an early date. The income of the Fund amounted to £3,407 6*s.* 10*d.*, an increase of about £125 over that of 1915. The expenditure on grants amounted to £2,675, an increase of nearly £300, so that further progress has been made in enlarging the number and amount of the grants during the year. A grant of £5 was again sent to the minister of every grant-aided church in England and Wales, which absorbed a sum of £330. All the ministers concerned have expressed their gratitude to the Fund for this assistance towards meeting the present high cost of living. The Managers have also received an expression of hearty appreciation of their action from the committee of the Ministerial Fellowship.

The President, in moving the adoption of the Report and statement of accounts, said that all praise was due to the way our ministers were doing their work under difficult circumstances. These difficulties would be emphasised owing to the call for National Service, to which he had no doubt our ministers and people would respond generously.

The motion was seconded by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, who said: The Treasurer's statement shows that there is money sufficient to provide an increase of a certain number of ministers' salaries, especially if the co-operation of the congregations is secured. The first question to ask is whether the character and extent of the work done or expected would justify the expenditure of more money; and the second question is whether our religious movement might not be more effectually strengthened by devoting a larger proportion of the income of the Sustentation Fund to what may be termed Augmentation Grants. There are many congregations well worth keeping alive by the expenditure of a small amount of money, but hardly worth spending a large sum upon. At some places it would probably require a grant at the rate of £5 a year for each person attending the services to provide an adequate salary for a minister; and no one, I presume, would recommend grants on such a scale as that. There are, I believe, a few congregations which, owing to various causes, have ceased to exert any living force in the community, and only a miracle will preserve them from decay and death. There are other congregations which, if stimulated and encouraged, might do a larger and wider service than they are doing at present. When a large grant, say of £50, is made this usually indicates that the congregation receiving the grant is small and feeble, and that the minister is poorly paid. I would like to direct special attention to the advisability of increasing salaries at the upper as well as the lower end, where a grant of £50 would bring the minister's salary up to £250, £300, or £350. In my opinion, if money could be spared to do this in a few carefully selected cases, it would exert a vivifying influence upon our religious movement; and the adoption of such a policy, in conjunction with the Managers of the Augmentation Fund, would strengthen the position of our churches and greatly encourage our ablest and most devoted ministers to persevere in their work.

The Chairman proposed, and Dr. Hargrove seconded, that the Rev. C. J. Street of Sheffield should be appointed President for the ensuing year. Both speakers emphasised Mr. Street's special fitness for the office owing to his wide and intimate knowledge of our congregations and denominational life, and the deep personal interest he had always taken in the welfare of his fellow-ministers. In supporting the motion, Mr. W. Byng Kenrick said that Mr. Street was a man of ideas who thought his own ideas were good, but he was always willing to have them criticised provided they were carried out. There had been, in his opinion, an increased vitality on the Board of Managers in recent years, and this vitality was ably represented by Mr. Street. The resolution was carried with acclamation, and Mr. Street briefly replied.

Subsequently Mr. R. P. Jones was re-elected Hon. Treasurer, Mr. H. F. Pearson Hon. Secretary, and the Rev. W. H. Drummond Acting Hon. Secretary, for the ensuing year.

The meeting closed with a cordial vote of thanks to the Chairman, moved by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, who spoke of the courtesy, sympathy, and personal interest which he had shown throughout his long personal connection with the work of the Fund, and more particularly during the past two years in the office of President. The motion was seconded by the Rev. C. J. Street, and Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke briefly replied.

MINISTERS AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

INTERVIEW WITH THE REV. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

At the recent Annual Meeting of the Birmingham District of the Warwickshire Congregational Union, attended by ministers and delegates, a resolution was passed suggesting that two neighbouring churches might agree together to hold united services under one minister ot alternate Sundays, and also week-night meetings, and release one minister. In the discussion it was pointed out than by co-operation already several ministers had been enabled to render service for periods of three months and upwards in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in France. The Rev. S. M. Berry, who presided, said that the Free Churchmen were doing work of national importance to a far greater extent than the general public were aware, and the object of the resolution was to show that if the necessity arose there was a movement in their churches to go a little further.

The Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, President of the Midland Christian Union, in the course of an interview with a representative of The Birmingham Gazette, said it was his personal opinion, speaking unofficially, that while ministers ought, at this crisis, to be willing to serve the State in any civil employment the Director might suggest, and while they ought in this matter to submit their judgment to him, yet the best service they could render the nation was to do all in their power to sustain the spiritual life of their congregations at their loftiest level. "I believe," he continued, "that in this district all our ministers are already strenuously active in public work, directly or indirectly connected with the war. Some of them are in the Army. Our churches are usually far apart from each other, and except in one or two localities the question of linking up two congregations for one minister to take in each a single service on Sunday is quite impracticable. It is, in fact, rather an unintelligent view that the chief problem is one of Sunday services. At this time the visiting of the wounded and cases of anxiety and bereavement have added to the pastoral daily work, therefore this work, always important, is peculiarly urgent to-day. If ministers entered on manual toil to labour side by side with wage workers it might prove a liberal education for both, as well as provide a patriotic example. I am personally quite prepared to do this at any time if it is thought necessary, but my honest and disinterested opinion is that it will be a great waste of the very highest of all national services to take a minister from the work he has been trained to do, and which was never more needed than to-day, and put him to another occupation for which he has not even the aptitude of a casual labourer."

Sir John Barnsley does not think the suggested scheme of amalgamation would be practicable for the Wesleyans in Birmingham, one reason being that the churches are a fair distance apart, and, for another, there has never been the least embargo placed upon Wesleyan ministers in regard to enlisting, as in the Church of England, and already a large number of them are fighting. All the theological colleges are empty, the students having gone to the war, and only the minimum of ministers is left. A number of Wesleyan ministers in Birmingham, it may be added, are acting as special constables in addition to carrying out their own work in the churches.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

THE election of the Rev. C. J. Street as President of the Sustentation Fund will be very popular among his fellow-ministers. As founder and secretary of the Ministerial Fellowship and secretary of the Ministers' Pension and Insurance Fund he has many special claims upon their regard. In cases of difficulty he has always proved himself to be an unfailing friend.

AT the meeting of the Managers of the Sustentation Fund on Tuesday it was decided that in cases where ministers, who are in receipt of grants from the Fund, are accepted for National Service, every consideration will be shown to them so that they may not suffer financial loss. All such cases should be reported at once to the Acting-Secretary.

THE Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, at their meeting on Wednesday, February 14, resolved to submit for the consideration of our ministers and congregations a series of suggestions in respect to National Service during the continuance of the war, based to a large extent on those contained in the letter from the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie which appeared in THE INQUIRER last week. A special meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Conference will be held at Essex Hall on Monday, February 19, to consider the advisability of authorising the officers of the Conference to append their names to the appeal which will be issued early next week.

THE question of National Service also occupied the attention of the London Unitarian Ministers' Meeting on Monday. Some members have volunteered already, and a committee was appointed to co-operate with the London District Unitarian Society in making all necessary arrangements.

IN the course of the discussion, which took up in detail the suggestions made by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie in our columns last week, we understand that there was general agreement among those present that the time had come when Theological Colleges should close for the period of the war, so as to liberate the students who remain for National Service.

WE note with pleasure that Lieut. E. Earle Barnes, R.E., Spec. Res. attached to Royal Flying Corps, son of Mr. A. Barnes, I.S.O., of Ealing, has just been promoted to be Flight Commander, with the temporary rank of Captain. As an R.E. officer he was at the front in France for a year and is now stationed in Norfolk.

THE Fight for Right Movement has arranged a programme of six lectures with appropriate music, which will be given at the Æolian Hall on Sundays, at 3.15, beginning on February 18. The lecturers will be M. Emile Cammaerts (chairman, the Right Hon. the Speaker), Sir Henry Newbolt (chairman, Sir Frederick Pollock), Prof. Gilbert Murray (chairman, the Poet Laureate), Mr. Clutton Brock (chairman, Mr. H. B. Irving), Mr. Richard Bagot, who will speak on 'Italy and the War,' and Sir A. Quiller-Couch (chairman, Sir J. Forbes Robertson). Amongst the singers will be Mr. Gervase Elwes and Madame Gleeson White. Admission to the hall is free; reserved seats, 2*s.* 8*d.*

AN advertisement of our Special Number for Sailors and Soldiers will be found on the front cover. May we call attention to the importance of ordering extra copies well in advance?

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Brighton.—The death of Miss Ellen Burgess on February 7, at Brighton, removes one who was well known in Unitarian circles in the south. Her parents, James Burgess and Caroline Collier, were married in 1825 at the Brighton Parish Church of St. Nicholas, and being members of the Free-thinking Christian Society at the time, presented a protest during the ceremony against the law which compelled marriages to be celebrated in the Anglican Church and in the name of the Trinity. James Burgess settled at Battle in Sussex, and there Ellen Burgess, one of a large family, was born in 1835. On the dissolution of the Freethinking Christian Society her father rejoined the Unitarians, and Miss Burgess then took a prominent part in the work of the Chapel at Battle. For many years she played the harmonium at the services and led the choir. Some of the former students of Manchester New College will have recollections of the kindly hospitality extended by her mother and herself to the preachers who periodically supplied the pulpit at Battle. She took an interest in public affairs and held the post of treasurer to the local branch of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Increasing years and the changing conditions of the times compelled her to give up the business which she carried on after her parents' death till three years ago. Miss Burgess then went to Brighton to live with her nieces and attached herself to the New Road congregation with which her grandparents had been closely associated in its early days. She accepted the altered circumstances of her last years with quiet and uncomplaining fortitude, and was happy in having the loving care and attention of her own kinsfolk to the end. The funeral took place at the Battle Cemetery, the Rev. Edgar Lockett, of Hastings, officiating.

Ilford.—The annual meeting of the Ilford Branch of the Women's League was held on Tuesday. The election of officers resulted as follows: president, Mrs. E. R. Fyson; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. M. H. Green; treasurer and leader of the Sewing Circle, Mrs. J. G. Foster; treasurer of the special War Fund, Mrs. C. Dupuy. The report showed that the number of members has been well maintained, and that a strenuous year's work has been accomplished in connection with the church itself, and the Belgian Hospital movement. It was decided to increase the annual subscription to the head-quarters of the League, in accordance with Mrs. Sydney Martineau's suggestion; and to undertake some work for the new Hostel at Essex Hall.

Islington.—Last Sunday evening a cordial welcome was extended to Lieut.-Col. Bullock of the Canadian Forces, when for the second time he occupied the pulpit at Unity Church. He dealt with the religious life of Abraham Lincoln—bringing out the vigour and beauty of that great mind which freed itself from bond and dogma as well in the spiritual as in the practical aspect of life.

London: Plumstead.—The annual meeting of the Woolwich and Plumstead Unitarian congregation was held after the service at the Hall in Herbert Road, Plumstead, on Sunday evening, February 11. Mr. T. T. Handcock presided, supported, among others, by Mr. Athelstane A. Tayler, representing the London District Unitarian Society. The Committee's report, read by Miss Hopkins, acting secretary pro tem., stated that, despite many difficulties, the congregation had kept together wonderfully well—harmonious in spirit and united in purpose. It recorded that for three Sundays in the autumn, the services were conducted by the Rev. Alexander Gordon, M.A. (ex-Principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary College), who also very kindly attended the Sunday school, and delighted the teachers and scholars with his homely talks and witty stories. On the first Sunday in October, the minister had entered on his fourth year as "temporary" shepherd of the congregation, the event being marked by a spirited speech delivered at the clase of the service by an old member serving with the Forces in France, who happened to be home on leave. The Sunday school, although temporarily deprived of its able and earnest superintendent, was reported to be in a healthy state. The report concluded: "From time to time it has been our pleasure to welcome among us men in the King's uniform hailing from other Unitarian congregations in many places, including the Colonies. To these brave comrades who have occasionally worshipped with us, as well as to those of our own members gone forth to fight for Home and Nation, we desire to send from this meeting our most cordial and brotherly greetings, with our prayers, for their welfare and safety, and our sincerest hopes that the time may soon come when they are welcomed back among kindred and friends. . . . Still believing in the loftiness of our religious ideals, firm in our stand for Truth, Reason, and Righteousness, and trusting in the guidance of Him who giveth their wisdom to the wise and their strength to the strong, we take heart and go forward to face the hidden future undaunted and undismayed." The Treasurer's statement, presented by Mr. W. H. Smith, showed a slight adverse balance, owing to expenses incurred before leaving the Links Hall; part of this, however, it was understood, would in due course be made good by the military authorities. In the circumstances, the report and statement were deemed satisfactory, and adopted on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Tayler, in speeches that were at once hearty and inspiriting. The officers and Committee were thanked, and re-elected. A resolution expressing the profound gratitude of Committee and congregation to the District Society and its minister, the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson, for their continued sympathy and support, and also to Mr. Tayler for his presence and encouraging words that night, was moved by the Chairman, duly seconded, and carried unanimously. This was suitably acknowledged by Mr. Tayler. Others who contributed interesting speeches were Mr. Bertram, Miss Hopkins, Mr. Irving, and Mr. Pollard, the meeting ending with hearty thanks to the chairman.

Manchester: Oldham Road.—There was little sign of decadence in the Unitarianism of Manchester last Saturday evening in the Oldham Road School. A little organisation and zealous work can still bring together a worthy gathering even in Manchester. It has been felt for sometime in North East Manchester that in connection with our Unitarian Churches there was lacking that spirit of fellowship which ought to exist. This feeling was emphasised by the sufferings and depletions of the war. The need of friendship and co-operation which is always great is now imperative. A strong committee from Dob Lane, Blackley, and Oldham Road churches took the matter up and arranged a series of fraternal gatherings. The first of the series was held at Blackley in October, and was successful from every point of view. The second was held at Oldham Road last Saturday, and it was gratifying to all to see such a crowd of enthusiastic Unitarians. Two hundred and ten people sat down to tea, and a still greater number enjoyed the excellent programme that followed. Mr. Jones welcomed the friends to Oldham Road, and the welcome was acknowledged in fine speeches by Mrs. Booth of Dob Lane and Mr. Walters of Blackley. The success of these fraternals is now assured, and they point to the moral of further interdependence and social fellowship. Already, indeed, there are indications that there will be further fraternal meetings not only of a social character but of an educational and religious character. The next meeting will be at Dob Lane, and all are already looking forward to it. It is to be hoped that the accommodation at Dob Lane will be as severely taxed as that at Oldham Road on the 10th.

North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The Quarterly Meeting of the Union was held at Dukinfield on Saturday last. Owing to the severe winter weather, restricted travelling, and an unavoidable change in the date of the meeting the attendance was much smaller than usual, about fifty persons being present. After tea, a Meeting of the Committee was held for the transaction of business, and to discuss the question of visitation of the schools. At this and at the evening meeting the President, the Rev. Albert Thornhill, presided. The Rev. J. Morley Mills gave an address on 'The Work and Ideals of Sunday School Unions,' pointing out several ways in which he thought the work of the Union might be improved. The discussion which followed was taken part in by the President, the Rev. C. E. Reed, and Messrs. A. Wright, J. Woodall, W. Thompson, A. B. Kellett and A. Slater. Mr. Mills briefly replied, and a hearty vote of thanks to him and to the Dukinfield friends was moved by the Rev. C. E. Reed, seconded by Miss Lees and carried with acclamation. During the evening several musical items were given by Miss Ogden and Miss Worrall.

Preston.—To commemorate the 200th Anniversary of the Chapel a reunion of old and present members and friends was held in the schoolrooms on Saturday, February 10, about one hundred and fifty being present. The schoolroom had been tastefully decorated for the occasion by the Ladies Committee. Tea was served from 3 to 5, followed by a meeting and concert. The chairman, Mr. Geo. Hurst, was supported by the Revs. M. Rowe, J. W. Bishop, and T. J. Bushrod of Chorley, and Messrs. J. J. Rawsthorn (chairman of committee), T. Parkinson, J.P. (treasurer), and F. Preston (secretary). Mr. Rawsthorn on behalf of the committee, gave a hearty welcome to all present, and on behalf of the congregation spoke words of appreciation for the good work which had been given by the Rev. J. W. Bishop during Mr. Rowe's absence, and hoped that he would see his way to remain in charge for a few months longer. In reply Mr. Bishop said that after a short rest he was willing to continue his work and do whatever he could for the welfare of the Chapel. Mr. Rowe, who is now stationed at Blackpool with the R.A.M.C., addressed the meeting, and gave some of his experiences with the forces. During the evening the choir rendered several musical items.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Language of the Trenches.

The French Ambassador, M. Paul Cambon, speaking recently at a large gathering of the National Society of French Masters, emphasised the fact that the Society was continuing its work and its mission of furthering the knowledge of the French language and literature in the United Kingdom. A large number of the members and pupils formerly under its influence, he said, were fighting in the British or the French Army, and the war had brought all classes of Englishmen and Frenchmen closer together than they had ever been before. In the trenches they learned each a few words of the other's tongue, and made themselves understood in a language that was neither English nor French, but it sufficed for present needs. The time was coming when the scanty vocabulary possessed by each army would be considerably enlarged, and when the great mass of English and French people would have no difficulty in understanding each other.

How to Ration Yourselves.

'Facts for Patriots,' published by the Food Reform Association in three series, at 3*d.* each, has already helped thousands to revise and reduce their food expenditure with profit rather than prejudice to the health of their households. Dealing authoritatively with the economical use of meat, fish, meat substitute, the proper place in the dietary of bread and flour, sugar and sweets, milk, vegetables, fruit and salads, it meets a prime need of the hour. Copies, with two little books of recipes, of which over 100,000 have been called for, and other useful publications may be obtained, post free, by forwarding 1*s.* 3*d.* to the Hon. Secretary of the Association, 178 St. Stephen's House, Westminster.

Training in Civics.

The Civic and Moral Education League has published a report of the year's work in which the object of Civics teaching, and the method of its application, is explained in a clear and practical manner. The report gives in full the statement which was drawn up by the Executive Committee before it seriously started work—a most useful summary of ideas and suggestions. At the Conference of Educational Associations in January, 1916, there was a discussion on 'Training for Citizenship' organised by the League, and at the study meeting which was held at Ludlow at Easter, in conjunction with the Regional Survey Committee (the Chairman of which, Prof. Geddes, is also a Vice-President of the League) over forty students met and spent a very pleasant week together. Ludlow itself—a miniature city, with extraordinary natural advantages of position—was the main object of study, and the visitors had for meeting centre, workshop, and studio the historic Grammar School. In August a Summer School was held at Aberystwyth, in conjunction with the Geography Section of the Summer School held by the University College itself. Among the lectures given, the course on 'Human Geography,' by Dr. Fleure, and those by Prof. Geddes, which attracted many lecturers and professors from the College, were of special interest and suggestiveness. The knowledge gained at such gatherings, and the spirit engendered among those attending them, should prove of very great value in the difficult days of reconstruction which lie ahead of us after the war.

Mothers and Children.

We have just received the first number of Maternity and Child Welfare, a monthly journal for workers among mothers and children. It has been started in the interest of the young life of the nation, which at the present moment we are all desirous of preserving and developing with the utmost care, and it will perform a very useful work if it keeps the workers who are specially concerned with the health of children in touch with each other, and helps to co-ordinate the various activities which have been started on these lines. The first article, on 'Maternity and Infant Welfare Work in Birmingham,' by Dr. Robertson, Medical Officer of Health, shows how much there is to be done, and, incidentally, how great is the demand for trained helpers and medical women who have made a special study of the subject. It is announced that in the next issue the first of a series of articles dealing with the work of an Infant Welfare Centre will appear.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding-Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, MISS E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. CANN & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 1*s.* 9*d.* each on silver, 2*s.* 9*d.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

LADIES' HANDKERCHIEFS. Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Fine quality. Size 13½ in. Bundle of six, 3*s.* 3*d.* (postage 2½*d.*). Send postcard to-day for the Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 17, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3895. NEW SERIES, No. 998.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

A SPECIAL NUMBER OF THE INQUIRER FOR THE Sailors and Soldiers

from our Churches and Sunday Schools

will be issued on

SATURDAY, MARCH 3.

Among the Contents will be

A Message to our Men on Active Service.
By the Right Hon. Viscount Bryce, O.M.

Greetings to our Sailors, Soldiers, and Airmen.
By the Revs. A. N. Blatchford, H. E. Dowson, and J. C. Ballantyne.

The Hostel at Essex Hall.
By Mrs. Sydney Martineau.

Carrying On in Church and School.
By the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A., President of the Sunday School Association.

The Jubilee of the Rev. H. E. Dowson.
With Portraits.

The Work of the Belgian Hospital Fund.
By Mrs. Bernard Allen.
With Portrait of Mrs. Allen.

Girls on the Land.
By Miss Ruth Drummond.
With Illustrations.

Some Ministers who are doing their Bit.
With Portraits of Lieut.-Col. the Rev. C. S. Bullock, Lieut. the Rev. H. D. Roberts, the Rev. R. Nicoll Cross, R.A.M.C., 2nd Lieut. the Rev. Walter Short, the Rev. E. Glyn Evans, R.A.M.C., and the Rev. T. P. Spedding.

Copies will be sent to all our Men on Active Service whose names are recorded at Essex Hall, with greetings and good wishes from the Social Centre at Lawrence House, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C. The sale price will be 1½d. As we shall be unable to meet any large demand after publication, readers who wish to have extra copies should send in their orders without delay to the Manager, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

February

25. Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.

March.

4. Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, of Manchester College, Oxford.
11. Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, of Manchester College, Oxford.
18. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON of Kentish Town.

London Sunday School Society.

The ANNUAL MEETING of this Society will be held on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1917, at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand. 7 P.M., Refreshments and Reception by the President. 7.30 P.M., Business Meeting, to be followed by a Conference on "The Work of our Schools after the War," opened by the Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

The meeting will be open free to all teachers and others interested.

A. STEPHEN NOEL, Hon. Sec.

75 Hainault Road, Leytonstone, N.E.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C. Rhetoric Lectures by Prof. FOSTER WATSON, D.Lit., on "BRITISH COLONISATION," at 6 o'clock.

Tues., Feb. 27. "Early Colonies."
Wed., Feb. 28. "Later Colonies."
Thurs., Mar. 1. "Colonial Self-Government."
Fri., Mar. 2. "Imperial Unity."

Free to the public.

SUSTENTATION FUND.

AT the Annual General Meeting of the Contributors held in Dr. Williams's Library, London, on Tuesday, February 13, 1917, Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke in the Chair, the Annual Report and Balance Sheet were presented, and the following resolutions adopted, viz. :—

THAT the Report and Accounts as now read be adopted and printed for circulation among the contributors and friends of the Fund.

THAT the retiring Managers, Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke and Messrs. T. Oliver Lee and G. J. Notcutt, whose term of office has expired, having been nominated, and the requisite number of voting papers having been produced, be and are hereby elected as Managers of the Fund.

THAT the Rev. C. J. Street be elected President for the year 1917-18.

THAT the thanks of the Contributors be given to Mr. Ronald P. Jones for his services as Hon. Treasurer during the past year, and that he be appointed to the office for the coming year.

THAT Mr. Harold F. Pearson be re-appointed Hon. Secretary, and the Rev. W. H. Drummond acting Hon. Secretary for the year 1917, and that the thanks of the Contributors be given to the Rev. W. H. Drummond for his services during the past year.

THAT the thanks of the Contributors be given to Mr. Herbert Gimson for his services as Auditor of the Fund, and that he be appointed Auditor for the year 1917.

THAT the Contributors heartily thank the Trustees of Dr. Williams's Library, who have granted the use of rooms for the meetings of the Fund during the past year.

THAT the cordial thanks of the Contributors be given to Sir Edgar Chatfeild-Clarke for his conduct in the Chair and for his services as President during the past two years.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C., not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, February 25.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. BEGG; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 6.30, Rev. Dr. WALTER WALSH.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Rev. D. DAVIS.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM; 6.30, Mr. GEORGE W. MURRELL.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. GILBERT T. SADLER, M.A., LL.B.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11 and 6.30. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. S. HITCHCOCK.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EDINBURGH, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. HOLT, B.A., B.Litt.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. MAISTER.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, LT.-COL. C. SEYMOUR BULLOCK.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. H. TAYLOR; 6.30, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WAIN.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

BIRTH.

MONTGOMERY.—On February 18, at Tan-y-Bryn, Llandudno, the wife of Charles J. Montgomery, of a son.

DEATHS.

ADDIS.—On February 20, at Twickenham, as the result of a street accident, the Rev. W. E. Addis, lately Vicar of All Saints', Ennismore Gardens, London, formerly Lecturer on Hebrew and Old Testament Literature at Manchester College, Oxford, in his 73rd year. Funeral from Parish Church, Twickenham, on Saturday, the 24th inst., at 2.30 p.m.

ELLIOT.—On February 18, at Southend, the Rev. Thomas Elliot, in his 73rd year.

FORDHAM.—On February 17, Frances Josephine, youngest daughter of the late Frederick Nash Fordham, of Old Bank House, Royston, Herts, aged 64 years.

JOLLY.—On February 19, at Upper Terrace Lodge, Hampstead, Ellen Eliza, widow of William Crucknell Jolly, in her 88th year.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY desires post as COMPANION to Lady where maids kept. Undertake light household duties; small salary; southern counties.—A. F., INQUIRER Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS.

To all parts of the World:—	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N. W., endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 87
THE TESTING OF RELIGION 89
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . . 90
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Late Miss Humphreys 90
Life and Death 91
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
Edinburgh 91
The Inner Life 91
MEMORIAL NOTICE :—
The Rev. Thomas Elliot 92
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 92
National Service 93
Sunday Schools and Temperance . . 93
High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham . 94
Men and Movements 94
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 95

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

As the scheme for National Service is unfolded in greater detail it is seen that its effects are likely to be of a kind which will alter the whole life of the country for many years to come. For this reason some people are inclined to criticise it adversely. They cannot picture to themselves how this far-reaching dislocation of industry is ever to be set right. Others attribute it to the craze for increasing the size of the army, which according to their own scheme of the war they hold to be too big already. On the latter point no private opinion is of much value. If the day comes, as it may well do in the course of the next few months, when we shall be able to win the war by throwing in a large new army at the critical moment, no one will complain that we have too many soldiers. The argument based on economic dislocation after the war is more serious, but it will not carry much weight with men who remember that our first business is to win the war and not to be anxious about the future. What the future will be like after this tremendous upheaval none of us can even dimly guess ; but we know that the only way to make it rich in the promise of good for the generations who come after us is, at all costs, to win a decisive victory over the forces of evil.

* * *

WE are glad to see that the Churches are taking up the duty of National Service as it affects their ministers with energy. A deputation from the Free Church Council waited upon Mr. Neville Chamberlain this week, with the result that steps are being taken to liberate a large number of the younger men for whole-time work. Essex Hall has also been in close touch with the Department, and the proposals which will be found in another column are regarded very favourably by the officials. What is needed now is good organisation, prompt business methods, and a zealous willingness to serve. We have reason to believe that the expectation of the number of ministers who can be liberated is a high one ; Mr. Chamberlain wants all that he can get ; but there is no intention of placing men in unsuitable posts, where mental training and skill can be of little use.

* * *

IT is a matter of urgent importance that ministers in the larger and more responsible positions should confer at once with their congregations about curtailing the ordinary programme of work, possibly to the extent of concentrating their efforts upon one service on Sunday, so that they may lend a hand elsewhere. If they hang back or renounce their plain duty of leadership, they will slow down the pace and discourage men who are anxious to be whole-time volunteers. We have also a right to ask that the Theological Colleges should make their intentions known without delay. We hope that we may take it for granted that their students will volunteer without a moment's hesitation. This will enable the members of the staff to throw their time and energy into the common stock of labour for carrying on the work of the churches.

* * *

THE Prime Minister has pointed out another way in which the Churches can be of use, namely, by helping to organise a campaign for economy and increased production. In a letter to the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, President of the National Free Church Council, he pleads for the co-operation of the ministers and members of the Free Churches to the fullest possible extent.

> I know [he writes] that a great deal has already been done to use gardens, allotments, and waste land for increased production of food in the coming year, but I am sure you will agree that we can make still greater efforts in this direction, and it is right that all who have been chosen to fill positions of leadership in our countryside should direct special thought and effort to making the best use of our native resources at the present crisis. Pastors and teachers have a unique opportunity of rendering national service now. We have to combat in every corner of the land the enemy of waste. We have to see that we are using our spare hours and the spare bits of land that lie around us in the national service, by producing potatoes and other valuable foods for the coming year. In this work old and young alike can do their "bit," and how proud the young children of England to-day will be when they look back in after years to this time, and think how they, too, helped their country to win the greatest of crusades in history.

Mr. Lloyd George concludes by pointing out the need of local organisation, and he appeals to the clergy and teachers of the Free Churches to take this work up energetically, as a matter of public urgency. "There is no time to lose ; the spring will soon be upon us, and unless we catch the spring our chance this year is gone. Our responsibilities at this time are grave beyond words."

* * *

LORD DERBY made a strong and common-sense speech at the opening of a new Y.M.C.A. hut near Bolton on Saturday. He has a shrewd perception of the reasons why a large number of our people still hardly realise the war as a menace to life and freedom which they ought to feel in every fibre of their being. He did not scold them for their blindness, but he gave some hard knocks to the thoughtless optimism which says, "The war will soon be over, and then everything will go on as usual."

> The war is not over [he said]. You won't win the war by saying you have won it. You have got to win it. Be as self-confident as you like—and I am as confident as anybody as to the eventual result of the war—but do not be led into being too optimistic and thinking that the end is near or to be easily gained. There is nothing pleases people more than to hear that the German nation is at its last gasp. I do not think it is true. I believe that the German nation, suffering though it is, suffering in a way which we hardly realise, has still got an enormous reserve of power, and that it will make one great and gigantic effort to place itself in a position of mastery. This country has suffered much in many ways, but we do not know war and, please God, we shall not know war as other nations on the Continent of Europe know it. We don't see our old men shot in the streets, our towns razed to the ground, women and girls taken into slavery. That is reserved for our Allies, and I trust we shall never see it in this country. But I am not sure that in consequence of that this country yet realises the real horrors of war.

Lord Derby went on to warn his hearers that, while we shall not have to suffer these things, before the end comes there will be many more restrictions on the liberty of the subject, and there will be many more privations to be borne. The next six months were not going to be a walk-over, and bad news must be received equally with good news with the same courage, the same calmness and the same determination. "Stick it out, whatever the cost, whatever the sacrifice, stick it out to the bitter end."

* * *

THE same note was struck by the Belgian poet, M. Emile Cammaerts, in his address under the auspices of the Fight for Right Movement last Sunday afternoon. "Victory," he said, "can only be obtained if the whole nation is fighting, if every one of us works for it, prays for it, with all his strength, with all his heart. Nothing else matters. It is only when the war has absorbed every ounce of our energy that we will begin to reap the fruits of our efforts." And then turning to any who may feel tired of working and hoping for an end which is not yet within reach, he asked them to remember the seven million men and women who are living under the German heel in Belgium.

> Hundreds of them [he said] have suffered Nurse Cavell's martyrdom, thousands of them are on the verge of starvation, millions of them are only kept alive through the work of the Commission for Relief, more than 200,000 of them are still suffering the most terrible physical and moral tortures which have ever been inflicted on any modern people. How can we feel depressed when these slaves go away singing? How can we grudge our work and our money when they starve and die under the blows of their gaolers in the German prison camps, when they are sent on the Western front in places exposed to our own shell fire? How can we grumble against food regulations when they are obliged by hunger to search their gaoler's rubbish-heaps for a few potato-parings? How can we ever speak of peace when, in the same message where they tell us of their sufferings, they urge us to carry on the fight to a satisfactory ending?

* * *

WE cannot refrain from quoting one more soul-stirring passage from M. Cammaert's address. The horrors of this war have called forth a spirit of heroism in humble lives which will be a beacon-light to the world for centuries.

> Let us, by all means, think of our soldiers. We could never praise their deeds enough. But it seems to me that the example given by the civil population in Belgium ought to stir our souls still more deeply. They are civilians as we are, they have no weapons, there is among them a great majority of women, children, and old men. The yoke of the enemy is bending their shoulders. Still they resist stubbornly. Two years and a half of oppression has not broken their indomitable spirit. Every liberty has been taken from them. They cannot even wear their national colours, they cannot even hang the picture of their King on their walls. They have no loyal press, no patriotic speeches to cheer them up, and the "Brabançonne" has died on their lips. Their minds are poisoned with false news and their bodies with bad food. And still they say to the deportees: "Do not go when you are called; do not sign if you are taken; do not work against your country!" And they call to us: "Carry on the fight. Do not mind our sufferings. If we must have still another winter of it, let us have it. Peace can only be concluded when Justice has been restored, and the crime has been punished."

* * *

THE result of the War Loan is a revelation of the enormous financial resources of this country, and in a struggle where money is power there is nothing sordid in the satisfaction with which we contemplate the immense sum of seven hundred million pounds. But we are not entitled to speak of a generous response to the appeal of the Government. There is nothing in the least generous in taking up a safe 5 per cent investment in order to secure our own safety. We might just as well expect to be praised for generosity when we pay our premiums for fire or anti-aircraft insurance. The Treasury has employed a good many baits in order to draw money out of our pockets, and has even paid interest on money subscribed in the early days of the Loan so as to overcome the hesitation of the most cautious and niggardly minds. But of course most decent people have given without these inducements, and many have mortgaged their comforts and pleasures in order to do so, in the spirit of the prayer which was recited by the Dean of Westminster at the War Loan Demonstration in Trafalgar Square last week:—"Grant, O Lord, that the men and women of this nation may give themselves whole-heartedly to the common good and the common cause, not seeking wealth or comfort for themselves, but giving much and taking little, so that we may all know the joy of service and the discipline of self-denial in the victorious defence of the world's liberty and the foundation of a righteous and enduring peace."

* * *

THE question of the service of women as public religious teachers is once again engaging public attention. In the Nonconformist bodies there is no question of law or unyielding official regulation, and the matter is likely to be decided by considerations of personal fitness and local preference. In the Church of England a formal and uniform policy is felt to be necessary. A committee was appointed by Convocation recently to consider the whole subject, but its terms of reference suggest that in exploring the ground it will be guided largely by historical precedents. Evidently this is the opinion of Miss Picton-Turbervill, who has taken a prominent part in the discussion of the subject. In an interview which has appeared in The Westminster Gazette she expresses her own hope that what happened in the past will not be taken as the final standard of what should be done to-day. "People need not be afraid," she says, "of a large number of women pressing into the Church, while the majority of women prefer the life at home, and now that there are so many professions open to women the Church would only get those with a strong sense of vocation."

THE TESTING OF RELIGION

We want to write this week about a small book which has come into our hands recently. It is called 'Thoughts on Religion at the Front,' and it is written by the Rev. Neville S. Talbot, Assistant Chaplain-General to the Forces. We call it a small book, but in reality it is big in its meaning and suggestiveness, and big also with the spirit of the man who has written it. Like many others who have mixed freely with our men on active service, Mr. Talbot is impressed by the absence of articulate religion among them. There is little open profession of Christianity and no great appetite for religious observance. He has no good news of revival to tell us. To people of a conventional mind this is all deeply distressing, and they see in it a challenge simply to speak the old message in more ringing tones or to put fresh energy into the task of carving men into their own pattern of ecclesiastical obedience. But for Mr. Talbot no relief is to be found in these familiar prescriptions. As a religious man he is conscious that he has been in the presence of deeds which are honourable and of good report, and of lives which in their courage and unselfishness are more lovely in the sight of Christ than those of many of his professed disciples.

> I am eager to acclaim [he writes] the wonderful quality of spirit which men of our race display in this war, and to claim it as Christian and God-inspired. Deep in their hearts is a great trust and faith in God. It is an inarticulate faith expressed in deeds. The top levels, as it were, of their consciousness, are much filled with grumbling and foul language and physical occupations; but beneath lie deep spiritual springs, whence issue their cheerfulness, stubbornness, patience, generosity, humility, and willingness to suffer and die. They declare by what they are and do that there is a worthwhileness in effort and sacrifice. Without saying so, they commit themselves to the "Everlasting Arms."

Now it is just these fine and adventurous qualities, inseparable from the soldierly character both in war and peace, which find little place in our ordinary notions of piety. It is the piety of self-regard and personal security which most men associate with religion. Religion of this kind, which drives men to prayer in moments of stress, when death hovers in the air, and at other times regards the padre good-humouredly as a sort of "preliminary undertaker," plays its part in the lives of many men at the front, but Mr. Talbot is convinced that it does not touch the deepest springs of action, and by many men is regarded almost as a sign of cowardice.

> Religion [he says] regarded merely as a resort in trouble, as a possible source of good luck, as a charm or insurance policy, is as old as man; but I believe many of the best soldiers up and down history have had little to do with it, and the more sporting and soldierly the man, the less he has had to do with it. After all the soldier-man's code goes clean the other way. It is ever insisting on non-calculating and self-regardless service, endurance, and sacrifice. As such, it lies above the ordinary level of life, calling out the heroic and honourable in men. But religion associated with anxiety touches men at a lower level than the highest in them, it has the morbidity of their weaker moments hanging about it, it wears badly, and, above all, often it does not seem to work. I have had the case propounded to me of "Bill who did pray," but yet had had "his head blowed off!"

Mr. Talbot's main purpose in writing in this way is to produce the conviction in as many minds as he can reach that men are profoundly mistaken when they suppose that this sort of thing, with its constant appeal to the weakness of human nature, is real Christianity. Jesus Christ grips men, he declares, not by the sentimental phrases of popular hymns, or even by means of prescribed religious forms; it is his own religion, as it glows in his life and teaching, which quickens the world. What Mr. Talbot means by this religion of Jesus he describes in a beautiful passage, in which, after pointing out that Jesus himself was not driven to faith in God by anxiety—it came to him "in peace, in full health and youth and powers"—he shows how this faith, having stood the test of normal and uneventful days, was ready for the strain of a campaign.

> He came calling men to a great adventure, to non-calculating and self-regardless co-operation with the active energy and will of the Father. How much He knew beforehand of whither that will would lead Him can never be known. To suppose that He knew all and saw the end in the beginning and had no steps in the dark to take, would be to deny to Him the essential element of human faith and trust, which is that it has to step out beyond the light of knowledge into the darkness of uncertainty. On the other hand, to suppose that He knew nothing, is to deny to Him that humanly heroic resolution with which He set His face to tread the path which led Him to suffering. In our ignorance let us grip this certainty, that for Him the one sufficient thing was that the Father knew all things—the times and the seasons, the cup to be drunk, the will to be done and the final outcome. That was enough for Him and must be enough for us.

To some of us, perhaps, all this is familiar. Through many days of joy and sorrow our hearts have found anchorage and peace in faith like this. We do not regard religion simply as a path to heaven or value it chiefly as a medicine for weak health and low spirits. But we shall be foolish and blind if we think on this account that the moral vision and the deep sincerity of this book have nothing to teach us. If we have known better than some who are still bound by conventional habits of thought, the shame of our failure to speak this message with convincing power is all the greater. Mr. Talbot points out that "the weakness of Catholic Christianity is to get involved in the little things of 'mint and anise and cummin'; whilst the weakness of Protestantism is to become absorbed in the luxuries of one's own religious experience. The upshot of either is the same, namely, to be very religious, and yet to forget the living God." He might have added that men may turn their backs on many dead forms of thought, and seek to walk in new paths, without putting the example of personal sacrifice and a spirit of radiant courage into their religion. In any case, be our creed what it may, none of us can be ignorant of the estrangement of our own institutional Christianity from the mind of Christ, or plead that we have no need to listen to the clear warning of these words:—

> Religious observances and organisations—all the whole apparatus of religion—have come to be looked upon as ends in themselves, whereas they are means to an end beyond themselves. People think that the clergy's one concern is the success of ecclesiastical activities and institutions. We clergy think so ourselves! It is not for her own interests, which are by themselves incurably too small to evoke the heroic in men, that the Church is in the world. She is in the world to change the world, so that its whole extent may be filled with the glory of God, and may become worthy of the eternal destiny of the souls of men. Hers is a high and costly venture. She has strongholds to storm, the entrenchments where the forces of private-mindedness and apathy and money-worship are dug in. In the attempt she can exhaust to its depths the capacity which is in men for dauntless sacrifice.

---

Thoughts on Religion at the Front, by the Rev. Neville S. Talbot. London: Macmillan & Co., 2*s.* net.

We are aware that we have done little more in this article than transcribe some of the most striking passages from Mr. Talbot's pages. But our object was not to set forth opinions of our own, but to call attention to one of the most stimulating books on religion which the war has produced. If we have sampled it skilfully enough to make our readers eager to study it and to reflect upon its message, especially those among them who are themselves teachers of religion, we have achieved our purpose.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

They dreamt not of a perishable home
Who thus could build. Be mine, in hours of fear
Or grovelling thought, to seek a refuge here;
Or through the aisles of Westminster to roam;
Where bubbles burst, and folly's dancing foam
Melts, if it cross the threshold....

Wordsworth.

Ask God for gladness. Be glad like the children, like the birds of heaven. And let not the sin of men dismay you in your doings: fear not lest it choke your work and hinder its accomplishment. Say not, Sin is powerful, Ungodliness is powerful, bad Conventionalism is powerful: while we are solitary and powerless: the world will choke us and will frustrate the good work. Away with such despondency, my children....If a man cast the blame of his sloth and inefficiency upon others, he will end by sharing the pride of Satan and murmuring against God. Now, about the pride of Satan, I think thus: it is difficult for us on earth to understand it, and therefore it is easy to be ensnared in it, and to share it, and even to imagine all the while that we are doing something great and wonderful. And in the profoundest sensations and impulses of our nature also there is much that we cannot now understand....On this earth we truly wander, and are as it were lost; so that were it not for the glorious figure of Christ before us, we should perish utterly....Much on earth is hidden from us, but there is given us in recompense the secret conviction of our living bond with another world, a celestial and loftier world: and the very roots of our thoughts and sensations are not here, but there, in other worlds. And that is why the philosophers say that on earth it is impossible to know the essence of things. Dostoevsky.

O LORD GOD, thou art my refuge and my hope; on thee I rest my anguish and tribulation, for I find all to be weak and insufficient but thee. Many friends cannot profit, nor strong helpers assist, nor prudent counsellors advise, nor the books of the learned afford comfort, nor any precious substance deliver, nor any place give shelter, unless thou thyself dost assist, strengthen, console, instruct and guard us. Thou, therefore, art the end of all that is good, the height of life, the depth of all that can be spoken; and to hope in thee above all things is the strongest comfort of thy servants. To thee, therefore, do I lift up mine eyes; in thee, my God, the Father of mercies, do I put my trust.

Amen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE LATE MISS HUMPHREYS.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—I have read with pleasure the notice in The Inquirer of our old friend Miss Humphreys, and have a desire to add my little word of affectionate appreciation.

For many years I was Librarian to the children's library at the Portland British Schools, and as the book-cupboard was in the Infants' School I had many opportunities of seeing Miss Humphreys at the work she so loved, with the little children. It was quite difficult to attend to my own work when Miss Humphreys was drilling her band of little girls and boys—so pretty and interesting it was. She was so clever and so bright, and so full of resource; she knew every child by name, and was so wideawake to everything that she was an ideal teacher. The little army responded wholeheartedly; she marched before them, or stood and clapped her hands in time with the marching, or sang out loud and clear the little song to which they marched, till they got it by heart; or she played the music on the piano, and when order or energy was lacking in the little army she sprang to her feet, and, leaving the piano, stood or marched before the children, clapping her hands, and continuing in loud clear voice the tune which she had begun on the piano. Sometimes a child would flag, and not join in, and she would notice at once, and say "Tommy, you do not sing; what's the matter?" Perhaps the answer would be (tearfully): "Got the 'eadache"; when she would say: "Poor little man; come and stand by me," and returning to the piano she told him to stand and watch her hands as she played. The "'eadache" vanished, and pride and joy took its place. When some little trot was tired, she would notice it directly, and get it taken to one of the mattresses made by kind Miss Rutt for the tired little ones to get a snatch of sleep. Sometimes the little band of children were decorated for their march, and singing with coloured caps or scarfs, the leaders carrying flags; and then proud children were they that day. It was really a delightful scene; and Miss Humphreys was a pioneer in musical drill, as it was quite new in the schools.

When the elder children were taken for their annual excursion, Miss Humphreys and my father (Superintendent of the Sunday school) used to walk together at the head of the procession, to lead the children safely across the streets on their walk to the station. In those days grown-up ladies seldom wore hats, but Miss Humphreys appeared in a large hat, with a large and roomy bag on her arm, and hung all round her waist with skipping ropes, including a long thick rope to be turned by two people, for the children's skipping. My father used to tell how a working-man on his way to his work stopped to watch the procession of merry children with sympathy and pleasure, and that looking at Miss Humphreys in her curious guise he said audibly: "Well you are a rum-un." Miss Humphreys fought valiantly with her growing infirmities as time went on, and continued her work with the children she so loved (and who so loved her) long after most people would have thought it impossible. All honour to her brave and loving spirit.—Yours, &c.,

Gertrude Martineau.

5 Eldon Road, Hampstead.
February 19, 1917.

Dr. P. H. Wicksteed also writes:—

Miss Martineau's notice of Miss Humphreys will carry back the memories of some of us to College days in the sixties when she and Miss Rutt worked and loved side by side at the Portland Schools, taking such delight in the work and in their associates that to think of our meetings with them is the same sort of thing as thinking of holiday picnics at country houses or dances in town. They were so full of spirits and the joy of life, and the "work" was so completely part of it! Committee meetings when they were present got through the work bravely, but the memory of them is as of delightful reunions. I remember once when Miss Rutt had long retired from the school work she happened to find herself in company with two or three of her old colleagues—Miss Humphreys may have been one of them, F. H. J. was certainly another—and after greetings and the interchange of a few words Miss Rutt cried with a sudden glee "Oh! let's have a Committee!" and every heart sang, not with devotion to duty but with the renewal in memory of old delights. And where Miss Humphreys was there was always fun. She always stood up for her sex for one thing. I remember once (of course it was a Committee we were meeting at) the "deceased wife's sister" bill was under consideration, and I said to her: "But you know it's a one-sided business. It would not allow you to marry your deceased husband's brother." "Wouldn't it?" she said in the tone of one thwarted but not defeated, "why, but that's just the very one I want to marry!" I wonder whether such memories mean anything to others. To a little band of survivors who knew these two gracious spirits half a century ago they mean a great deal.

LIFE AND DEATH.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—I have read Mr. Hargrove's article on the above subject in last week's issue of your paper, and I wish to thank him for so reasonable and reasoned a statement of his position. But can the central assumption of 'Raymond' be left at rest with the mere decision to do nothing? Have ministers of religion completed their duty when they have warned people against the attempt to hold communication with the dead? Shall we have accomplished anything but our own failure to face the facts of the situation? Wide curiosity has been aroused and people are not to be turned aside by the fear of consequences. They will insist on probing for themselves, and the quest will not stop because we cry danger. The influence of the churches, even if it were employed to repress inquiry, would prove quite ineffectual to do so. The danger we can avert is the danger of people dabbling with forces about which they understand nothing. We can learn for ourselves and teach others who have not our opportunities for acquiring knowledge. Every minister ought to read some standard works on psychical research, both for and against. The air is electrical with the subject and the people need sympathetic guides in this difficult field of inquiry. The uninstructed adventurer into the domain of the occult soon begins to assign all unusual happenings to the intervention of "spirit friends," and to accept almost anything offered as evidence, however outrageously non-evidential its true character may be. Having no background of knowledge he is not aware of the action of telepathy, of the complex nature of personality, of the subtle and deceptive play of imagination, and of how to distinguish between reports, or of what constitutes evidence in psychical research. He accepts as the voices of invisible spirit guides the ravings of ignorant persons who are the victims of their own morbid trance personality. In the course of my experience of life I have seen no spectacle more pathetic than the spiritualist circles sometimes held by simple, uninstructed, working people.

Recognising the rapid and inevitable spread of belief in communication with the dead I have begun the experiment of a class for psychical studies. We meet each week, and I impart such knowledge as I possess, gathered in my reading of wholesome, sane works on the subject. I do my best to resist credulity and to develop in people a critical and alert attitude of mind. At the same time I court the utmost freedom of discussion and I encourage the reading of papers by members of the class. There is no feeling of teacher and taught, except in the sense that we are all willing to impart and to receive instruction. "Phenomena" is not only discouraged at these meetings, it has been expressly vetoed. To me it is a matter for regret that some ministers of all the churches content themselves with asking people to leave spiritualism alone. The evils of spiritualism all arise out of ignorance, so far as I understand them. In psychical research there is not only an absence of the objectionable features of some phases of spiritualism, there is a subject of great intellectual interest, an absorbingly interesting study. From such a study any ordinary person should be able to proceed to first hand experiments and investigation without any harm. But to ask the world to shut out of consideration the entire subject is to ask too much. If men think there is even a small chance of communication with non-terrestrial minds they will certainly make the trial. Under the circumstances, knowledge of the forces they are using should prove the best preservative from any ill consequences.—Yours, &c.,

Herbert W. King.

5 Portland Street, Lincoln.
February 20, 1917.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

EDINBURGH.

Edinburgh: a Historical Study. By the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D. London: Williams & Norgate. 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

This book hardly realises the hope expressed in its preface, that it would be "such an essay as R. L. Stevenson planned, set his hand to, but left as no more than a tantalising fragment." But although it lacks the vitality and charm which that great literary artist would have given to it, it is a very readable and valuable work, and it contains many interesting illustrations. Edinburgh has always been the focus of Scottish life, at any rate since the early time when Dunfermline and Perth ceased to be its rivals for the position of capital, till well into the nineteenth century when Glasgow and other cities began to challenge its supremacy in various ways. Its history, therefore, is in the main the history of Scotland. Its importance may be said to have begun in the eleventh century, when Malcolm Ceanmor and his queen, Margaret, made it the royal abode. Sir Herbert Maxwell lets us see what the city was like at different stages of its development, and he is especially informing in regard to social conditions and customs. He recalls the Edinburgh of the Stuart boy-kings and their kidnappers, of Queen Mary and John Knox, and the kind of things that went on during what he calls the tyranny of the Presbyterian clergy; and throughout he shows a sense of the humour as well as of the tragedy of events. In treating of the persecution of witches, he gives an extract from the Records of the Tolbooth gaol, telling that in the year 1671 a certain Marrion McCaull or Reid was sentenced to fearful punishment on being found guilty at the Assizes of "drinking the good health of the divell and all his servantis in maner contanit in ye indigtment." The incident had taken place at Mauchline in Ayrshire. There seems to have been a traditional sympathy with the devil in that little country town; for it was at or near Mauchline, more than a hundred years later, that Robert Burns wrote his famous and friendly 'Address to the Deil.' "Auld Reekie" was at one period notorious for its filth and evil smells, and our author cites faithful witnesses as to the fact. It will be news to many that at one time plans were made, and approved by the Town Council, for putting up a line of buildings on the south side of Princes Street; had this been done—and it was only prevented on appeal to the House of Lords—it would, of course, have spoilt that glorious promenade. Sir Herbert has naturally much to say about the rise and progress of the University, and about the celebrities in literature and learning who earned for Edinburgh the proud title of "The Modern Athens"; and it was fitting that a book in which Presbyterianism has figured so prominently should end with a plea for Presbyterian reunion.

J. M. C.

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD.

The Inner Life. By Rufus M. Jones, A.M., Litt.D. London: Macmillan & Co. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

We cannot be too grateful for the gift of books as sane and helpful in their teaching, and as direct in expression, as 'The Inner Life,' by Dr. Rufus Jones. Writers on mysticism too often use a technical jargon which only the initiated can understand, and which seems almost to have been invented for the purpose of obscuring the great realities upon which, presumably, it is their intention to throw fresh light. That this is a subject which presents many difficulties to the ordinary understanding, and that it is necessary to bring to its study something more than the searching judgment of a rationalistic mind is, of course, beyond dispute, for we are dealing with modes of consciousness to which all cannot immediately attain, and which very few are capable of explaining even when they experience them; but there is a way in which the far-reaching implications of authentic vision may be brought home to earnest souls craving for divine guidance with sufficient clearness to influence conduct, and that way Dr. Jones has discovered. Realising to the full all that is involved in the consciousness of direct communion with God, which is the essential fact of the "inner life," he points out repeatedly that its chief value lies, not in the assurance it gives us of worlds beyond our ken wherein the spirit may ultimately draw closer to the source of all being, but in the effect which this heightening of personality should have upon our activities in this world. The glories of the beatific vision will be dimmed—indeed, will fade upon the sight altogether—if we cannot succeed in making use of its inspiration for the purifying and uplifting of the human race. The "private enjoyment of God," in other words, is little more than a form of selfishness if it does not result in "the joyous business of carrying the Life of God into the lives of men," and the whole secret of saving souls is contained in the spiritual forces locked up within the individual, which, when liberated under the influence of noble ideals and religious passion, act upon others with the compelling power of love itself. It was the method of personal contagion which Christ believed in, and which he exercised to the fullest extent, for the simple truth is that "when a life is set on fire, and is radiant with self-consuming love, it will invariably set other lives on fire. Such a person may teach many valuable ideas, he may organise many movements, he may attack many evil customs, but.... his own burning, shining life is always his supreme service." We should like to note in passing that Dr. Jones does not limit the mystical faculty to those who chance to be dowered also with the literary gift, and are thus able to tell us in beautiful language what has happened to them. "There are multitudes of men and women now living in out-of-the-way places, in remote hamlets or on isolated farms," he says, "who are the salt of the earth and the light of the world in their communities, because they have had vital experiences that revealed to them realities which their neighbours missed and that supplied them with energy to live by which the mere 'churchgoer' failed to find." It is well to be reminded of this, for signs of a spiritual arrogance and exclusiveness are sometimes to be detected among those who claim to be the special vehicles of divine grace, which is at variance with much of Christ's teaching, and which appears to ignore the fine moral qualities of many people who are quite ignorant of the methods by which the professed mystic seeks to apprehend goodness and truth. It was, after all, to the common multitude who followed him up the mountain-side that Jesus said: "Ask, and it shall be given you." It was to the everyday men and women of his time that he addressed the adjuration to be perfect, "even as your heavenly Father is perfect."

L. G. A.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—Herbert Fry's Royal Guide to the London Charities. 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

Messrs. Sampson, Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—The Empire of Silence. Rev. Charles Courtenay. 6*s.* net.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

THE REV. THOMAS ELLIOT.

It is with much regret that we have to announce the death at Southend last Sunday evening of the Rev. Thomas Elliot in his 73rd year. Mr. Elliot was born in Long Acre, W.C., in 1844. As a young man he worked for many years as a lay preacher in the Congregational body in Coventry in connection with the West Orchard Church and Hill Fields and Stoke Branch Churches. In 1890 he removed to London on his appointment as Inspector of Weights and Measures under the L.C.C. He joined Junction Road Congregational Church, Upper Holloway, where he was for some time organist and choirmaster. He also worked in the Sunday school and preached occasionally. After about eight years he became aware of a definite change in his theological opinions, and attracted by the teaching of the Rev. Robert Spears he joined the Highgate Unitarian Church. His connection with the religious life of the congregation became very close, and he was soon known as a most acceptable lay-preacher in many other churches. After the death of Mr. Spears he occupied the pulpit at Highgate for about six months during 1901. In 1902 he published a volume of sermons entitled 'Gleanings from a Lay Preacher's Ministry.' On his retirement from the service of the L.C.C. Mr. Elliot went to live at Southend. Though in delicate health he was able to accept an invitation to take charge of the Unitarian Church, Darnley Road, and in recognition of his long and devoted services as a lay preacher his name was placed upon the roll of the regular ministry. Growing weakness caused him to retire from active work in 1913, though he was still able to act as Hon. Secretary to the Bernard House Holiday Home in which he took a most affectionate interest to the end of his life.

Such is a brief outline of a life which was as simple and unassuming as it was true and good. His friends loved him, many men and women have been helped by his teaching and example, and little children knew that he had a heart of gold. As he lived quietly at home during the last two years the horror of the war hurt his sensitive nature and caused him much mental distress. He was too honest with himself not to face the spectres of the mind, but in the end faith triumphed and there was peace. His home-life was singularly happy. He celebrated his golden wedding last year amid the rejoicings of many friends. With Mrs. Elliot, who survives him, and his son and daughter and his devoted sister-in-law, Miss Harrison, the deepest sympathy will be felt. The funeral took place at Southend on Friday. The service was conducted by the Rev. A. A. Charlesworth of Highgate and the Rev. W. H. Drummond.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

110th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,268	17	11
Miss Scott (eighth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. F. Burton (fifth donation)	0	5	0
Mr. James Brent Price (seventh donation)	0	5	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. Yates (twenty-first monthly donation)	1	10	0
Mr. and Miss Hirst (fifteenth donation)	2	2	0
Mr. Julius Hess (fifth donation)	2	2	0
Miss E. S. Hollins	2	10	0
Mr. J. C. Hollins	2	10	0
Miss M. E. Swaine (twenty-third donation)	2	0	0
Nurse Copeman (tenth donation)	0	10	0
Mr. W. N. Martin (fourteenth monthly donation) ..	0	6	0
"Thomasina Smith" (fifth donation)	0	10	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (twenty-sixth monthly donation) ..	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. F. E. Shepherd (fifth donation)	4	4	0
	£16,303	11	11

Parcels have been received from: Anon.; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Anon. (by hand); Mrs. W. Reeve; Adult Class of Girls, Church of the Messiah, Birmingham (per Miss M. Abbott); Ladies of the Unitarian Church, Preston (per Miss A. Smith); The Girls of Rochester Grammar School; Mrs. Hanna; Miss Elsie Brown; Mrs. Walker; Mrs. Sydney Martineau; Acton Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Sceats); Mrs. S. Wilson; Mrs. Mayer; Plymouth Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Bond); Bank Street, Bolton, War Workers' Circle (per Mrs. Flower); Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Essex Church Work Parties (per Mrs. Worthington); All Souls' Ladies Sewing Society, Belfast; Finchley Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); Miss Johnson; Mrs. de Zouche; Miss Garrington; Miss Short; Birkenhead Sewing Party, Bessborough Road (per Miss Ogden); Miss Swaine; Mrs. E. Ellis; Mrs. Wm. Tangye; Mrs. Dent; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb); "C. D."; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. V. D. Davis); Mrs. Macdonald; Redlynch House Work Depot (per Mrs. Robinson); Mrs. Notcutt; Mrs. Russell Martineau; Mrs. Barber; Anon.; Mrs. Ussher; Mrs. Harold Coventry.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Shirts, socks, pants, vests.

Slippers, handkerchiefs.

Mufflers, cardigans, mittens, helmets.

Games of cards, chess, draughts, dominoes, backgammon, &c.

For the Maternity Home at Calais :—

Layettes (on Belgian methods), patterns to be obtained here.

Chemises and flannel petticoats for women.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

NATIONAL SERVICE.

In response to the public appeal of Mr. Neville Chamberlain the Executive Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, at their meeting on Wednesday, February 14, 1917, agreed to submit the following suggestions to ministers and congregations in respect to National Service during the continuance of the war :—

1. That, as far as practicable, congregations hold only one service each Sunday—morning, afternoon, or evening, as may prove most convenient. Where the churches are only a mile or so apart, the morning people might all attend one of two churches, and the evening people the other. The same minister could then preach and attend to the pastoral work at both places, thus setting a minister entirely free for national service.

2. That in cases where it proved impracticable owing to distance for one minister to preach at two places the one service method might still be followed, so that the minister of the congregation would to a larger extent be free to employ his week-days at some important and urgent local work.

3. That the salaries of ministers who engage in national service remain as at present; but that they might hand over wages earned (less expenses) to the treasurers of their congregations, to be applied in such ways as are deemed advisable.

4. All out-of-work or retired ministers under 60 years of age will naturally offer their services to the nation of their own accord. Those over 60, if not physically incapacitated, will doubtless be willing to relieve younger men of Sunday duty; a modest fee in such cases might be paid by the congregation, the District Society or Union, or the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

5. Lay-workers and pioneer preachers in charge of congregations would follow the same plan as regular ministers, with the necessary modifications according to circumstances.

6. Offers by ministers and lay-workers of part-time national service may be made to municipal or other local bodies or employers, or, if desired, to the Director-General of National Service.

7. Women belonging to our churches might very well be invited to take a larger part than at present in conducting religious services, in superintending Sunday schools, and in pastoral work.

The Committee of the Association need hardly add that the importance and value of the Sunday worship, in sustaining and strengthening the religious thought and life of our people in a time of national crisis, are beyond question. National Service is a call to consecration as well as to labour; and it is in this spirit that the suggestions are made.

Replies or suggestions from Ministers or Secretaries of Congregations may be addressed to the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., who will endeavour to keep a record of what has been done in response to the appeal.

In support of these suggestions the Executive Committee of the National Conference has issued the following letter to the Mimisters and Congregations on the Roll of the Conference :—

DEAR FRIENDS AND BRETHREN,—You will be aware that Mr. Neville Chamberlain, the Director-General of National Service, has appealed to all men between the ages of 18 and 61 including "those who may consider themselves as fulfilling some form of national work or engaged in an essential occupation, to enrol themselves, and leave it to the Government to determine in what capacity a man can best serve his country."

The Church of England has responded to this appeal, and the Archbishop of Canterbury is forming a Clergy National Service Committee with an office at Church House, which will act as a central bureau. Every clergyman will receive through his bishop a form on which he will be asked whether he will offer for whole-time or part-time service, and whether he will be able to make arrangements for carrying on the work of the parish during his absence. Volunteers are asked for help by ministerial service in poor parishes, and also for munition works, agriculture, &c. The Free Church Council is also preparing a scheme of a similar kind.

It is impossible that we of the Conference Churches should be behind others in alacrity to offer ourselves for the service of the nation in this time of its sore need, we who have everywhere and always maintained and acted on the principle that Divine Service did not consist mainly in practices of devotion, but included as chief and essential part, the service of man and the advancement of God's kingdom on earth.

We have, therefore, taken council with the leaders of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and join with them in submitting to you the enclosed suggestions, in the first instance made tentatively by Mr. Bowie, and approved after consideration and amendment by their Executive on February 14. We trust that you may find them helpful for yourselves or your congregations.

We are, of course, fully aware of the difficulties under which you labour, especially how far separated our churches generally are from one another, which renders co-operation often impossible, but we trust you may be able to arrange with your congregations for at least part-time service, offering perhaps three days a week, or six half days to some form of National Service.

Taking leave to speak for ministers who by reason of age are not available for service, we may venture to say that they too will do all that in them lies to help their brethren in the active ministry by taking occasional duty for them if so desired.

We are, yours sincerely,

For the National Conference :—

CHARLES HARGROVE, President.
F. W. MONKS, Treasurer.
JAMES HARWOOD, Secretary.

For the British and Foreign Unitarian Association :—

J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, President.
HOWARD CHATFEILD CLARKE, Treasurer.
W. COPELAND BOWIE, Secretary.

London,
February 21, 1917.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND TEMPERANCE.

AN APPEAL.

THE following appeal has been sent to the superintendents and teachers of our Sunday schools in the United Kingdom and the Colonies :—

DEAR FRIENDS AND FELLOW-WORKERS,—On behalf of our several Sunday School Associations we ask your aid in keeping constantly before our scholars the enormous importance of the practice of temperance.

This is the case at all times and under all conditions, for indulgence in alcoholic drink exposes the young to manifold dangers, both physical and moral. Health is less secure, and powers of self-control are imperilled. In the early years, when life-long habits are being formed and principles of conduct established, it is essential that boys and girls on the way to manhood and womanhood should be trained in the path of steadfastness to resist and overcome temptation. How much of the poverty, madness, and crime that lie at the base of our civilisation are due to excess in drink is, alas, an old story.

But in the stress of the present war the need for such effort is especially grave. We have been made to realise more keenly than ever before how seriously the national efficiency is impaired in all branches of its activity by the use of strong drink. Irregularities of attendance diminish the output of factory and mine. The soldier's discipline is lowered, and the warning of Lord Kitchener at the beginning of the war, supported by his personal example (following the lead of the King) should be ever remembered. Vast sums of money are squandered which might be saved for the nation's support. Foodstuffs are diminished that drink-stuffs may be grown, and barley is cultivated instead of wheat. Labour is diverted from industries of defence where it is urgently needed. Precious coal is withheld from the public use or the supply of our allies to feed the distilleries and breweries. Ships that might bring necessaries of life are filled with materials for beer ; and railway transport is engaged in distributing coal and other requirements of the trade so that ordinary goods are delayed.

Some of these difficulties may be abated at the end of the war. But many will remain as permanent obstacles to that improved organisation of our national resources which will be urgently demanded if we are duly to discharge the duties of the Empire, and to sustain the tremendous burden of indebtedness which mounts up daily to sums beyond our grasp.

We owe it to the men who have fought so bravely, and upheld the cause of international justice and liberty with such self-sacrifice and courage to provide a better future for those who will come after us. The character of that future will depend upon the wisdom and earnestness of the young. The needs of improved education are being pressed on us with great force by leaders in science and men of practical affairs. But we all know that more thorough intellectual training will be of small avail if it is not directed to high moral ends, and quickened by high moral example. In this great task the Sunday school has a most important duty as it has also a most precious opportunity. Let us avail ourselves of the opportunity that we may the more faithfully discharge the duty. The preparation for citizenship has many aspects, and chief among them is the practice of self-control. Shall we not do our part by strengthening our Bands of Hope, our Temperance Societies, and other similar agencies, to lead the future manhood and womanhood of the land along those paths which lead most effectively to personal health, purity, and moral strength, and to the larger issues of national righteousness and welfare ?

We are, dear friends,

Faithfully yours,

(Signed)

J. Estlin Carpenter,
President of the National Unitarian Temperance Association.

Albert Slater,
President of the Manchester District Sunday School Association.

Edward Morgan,
President of the Bolton District Sunday School Union.

Albert Thornhill,
President of the North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.

S. F. Dufton,
President of the Yorkshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.

H. French,
President of the Newcastle and District Sunday School Association.

A. Leslie Smith,
President of the North Midland Sunday School Association.

J. A. C. Davies,
Secretary of the Sunday School Section of the South-East Wales Unitarian Society.

J. C. Odgers,
President of the Liverpool Sunday School Society.

Arthur W. Fox,
President of the Sunday School Association.

Wm. Cheshire,
President of the Midland Sunday School Association.

J. Park Davies,
President of the South Cheshire and District Association of Sunday Schools.

Flora Conway,
President Southern Unitarian Association.

Frank Kenyon,
President of the Bury District Sunday School Union.

A. H. Biggs,
President of the London Sunday School Society.

A. Wadsworth,
President of the North-East Lancashire Sunday School Union.

W. F. McRobb,
President of the Scottish Sunday School Union.

S. E. Bowen,
Convenor of the Sunday School Committee of the Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church of Ireland.

HIGH PAVEMENT CHAPEL, NOTTINGHAM.

OLD SCHOLARS' AND TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

A large number of old scholars and teachers met on the evening of Saturday, February 10, for the Annual Social Gathering of the Association. Tea was served at 5.30, the President (Mr. J. C. Warren) and Mrs. Warren presiding. Thereafter conversation of the "Do you remember ?" variety flowed in a steady stream for an hour, broken occasionally by songs from Mrs. Griffiths, Miss Chadbourne, and Mr. Trueman. The evening was made memorable by Mr. Warren's address on 'The Old Days of the Sunday School,' which held the attention of all present and gave the greatest pleasure, recalling old times, old scenes, and former joys. Beginning with a brief reference to the origin of Sunday schools in this country and the story of the first Sunday school in Nottingham, whose various branches opened in 1784 and drew together scholars and teachers from churches of all denominations. Mr. Warren described the inevitable partition that took place, and the formation of the different schools in connection with the various churches, the last to break away from comradeship with the English Church being the group of scholars and teachers who established the High Pavement School in 1904-5. Then followed many interesting, sometimes humorous, and again pathetic and tender references, firstly to the ministers who had taken their share in the conduct of the school and its memorable Anniversary Services, then to the superintendents and teachers who had played their part, and to some of the outstanding personalities, the light of whose influence still shines in our midst. A large number of photographs, books, and records of various kinds illustrated Mr. Warren's story, and were examined carefully both before and after the lecture by those present.

Mr. Ballantyne expressed the thanks of the members to their President for his address, which all had thoroughly enjoyed, and a suggestion that those of to-day might show forth in some practical way their reverent admiration for the faithful men and women of the past and for the spirit in which they worked, met with cordial approval. At least one new avenue for the kindly expression of fellowship was opened up, and a number of volunteers were enrolled there and then for a task which will keep alive something, at least, of the neighbourly sympathy so characteristic of the High Pavement School in former days. No lecturer on such a theme could have desired more fitting thanks for his address, or better testimony to the fact that all he had said had touched a responsive chord in his listeners.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

Our next issue will be our Special Number for Sailors and Soldiers. We shall go to press on Tuesday. Will advertisers and others please note. Orders for extra copies should be sent at once to 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

We are obliged to postpone one feature which we had hoped to include in the Special Number. It has been found impossible to make the list of military honours gained by our men complete, and it would be unfair to send it far and wide in its present imperfect state. We propose to publish a preliminary list shortly and to ask our readers to supplement it by any information in their possession. When it is complete it will be kept as a permanent record at Essex Hall.

We hear of readers here and there, to whom the recent necessary increase in the price of The Inquirer has caused some inconvenience. They feel that they are guilty of extravagance if they spend more than a penny upon it. May we suggest that in such cases two families should combine to purchase a single copy, and pass it on, as a special war measure.

The Jubilee of the Rev. H. E. Dowson as minister of Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, will be celebrated on April 15. It has been decided to confine the subscription list to the special Jubilee Memorial to past and present members of the Chapel and School and their families. It has been difficult to trace some of the old members. Mr. Percy Hibbert, 45 Clarendon Place, Hyde, will be glad to receive the present address of any friends who may have been overlooked.

The officers of the National Conference of our Churches have addressed a letter to Ministers and Congregations directing attention to the suggestions agreed to by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at the meeting of the Committee on February 14. Copies of the circular containing the suggestions were sent out this week.

Already several ministers have responded to the call. The Rev. J. V. Laughland (Islington) and the Rev. G. C. Sharpe (Wood Green) have volunteered for munition work. The Secretary at Essex Hall has received a number of letters warmly commending the scheme, also a few offering criticisms and alternative suggestions. In re-drafting the suggestions some modifications were made with the object of meeting the views expressed by some of the correspondents.

The General Purposes Committee of the Manchester District Sunday School Association has decided, on account of various difficulties due to war conditions, that there shall be no Good Friday meetings this year, but that the Annual Meeting shall be held in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on a Saturday evening, probably April 14, of which particulars will be advertised.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Lewes.—The Annual Meeting of the members and adherents of Westgate Chapel was held on Thursday evening, February 15 in the Lecture Hall adjoining the Chapel. There was a very good attendance. The chairman, Alderman J. H. Every, J.P., in his opening remarks, congratulated the pastor, the Rev. J. M. Connell, and the congregation generally on the increased membership, the satisfactory state of their finances, and on the better understanding which exists to-day between their church and other denominations. The fact that three Nonconformist ministers in the town—the Rev. B. Wilkinson, the Rev. J. P. Morris, and the Rev. H. W. Shrewsbury—had delivered lectures in that hall, and that Mr. Wilkinson had promised to occupy Mr. Connell's pulpit on the following Sunday, marked the long stage they had travelled since the days, not so very far distant, when people, not understanding nor troubling to find out what Unitarianism really was, feared to enter their gates lest dire disaster should instantly befall them. The secretary, Mr. W. B. Funnell, having read his Report, the Chairman expressed the appreciation of all the members for the faithful and painstaking manner in which Mr. Funnell had for so many years carried out his secretarial duties. He next referred gratefully to Mrs. Funnell's services as organist for over twenty years. The time had come, he said, when minister and people alike felt impelled to show their appreciation of the work done by Mr. and Mrs. Funnell, and, on behalf of the church, he asked them to accept a token of the esteem and gratitude of its members. A beautiful silver rose-bowl, filled with tulips, was then presented. It bears the inscription: "Presented by the Congregation of Westgate Chapel, Lewes, to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. B. Funnell as a token of affection, and in grateful recognition of their long and devoted services as honorary Secretary and Organist, Feb. 15th, 1917." Mr. and Mrs. Funnell were both taken thoroughly by surprise, having been very much engrossed by another presentation which was to take place that evening. It was, indeed, an evening of surprises, for, after a short reading by one of the members of a passage from Ian Maclaren's book 'St. Jude's,' wherein an elder of a little Scottish kirk voices the love and admiration of the members for their minister, the Chairman again rose to perform another congenial task. With a few short sentences of appreciation for their minister, and his devoted and very helpful services both in the pulpit and out of it, he asked Mr. Connell, on behalf of the members and certain friends of the congregation, to receive a note-case of morocco leather, containing certain useful slips of paper adorned with probably the most familiar and popular signature in England at the present time—John Bradbury. To Mrs. Connell was presented a bouquet of beautiful spring flowers. After Mr. Connell had expressed his thanks, coffee and light refreshments were handed round. The secretaries of the various societies in connection with the church then presented their very encouraging and interesting reports, and Mr. Connell gave a brief address on the meaning of Liberal Christianity. Before the Benediction was pronounced, the members rose and repeated with their minister the old Covenant, which has been adopted as the Covenant of this church: "We covenant with God and with one another to walk in all His ways, made known, or to be made known unto us, according to our best endeavours."

London: Wood Green.—The Annual Meeting in connection with Unity Church was held on Wednesday, February 14, Dr. Curtis presiding. Mr. Sudbery, the secretary, presented a report which was in every way the most satisfactory for many years, despite unusual difficulties. It showed an increase in membership, and also an increase in funds. Mr. Cowan, the treasurer, explained that instead of a deficit, he now had a balance in hand. Thanks were given to the minister, the Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe, for his inspiring sermons, and the earnest work that has helped to improve the condition of the church. Mr. Sharpe announced his desire to obey the call to national service, and to devote six days in the week to work in a munition factory, preaching twice on Sunday as usual. The congregation has released him for this purpose, and he began work last Monday. Mr. Sharpe holds that sermons should be wrought out of some of the rough experiences of life as well as from meditations in the study. It would be well, he says, for all preachers to have some experience of ordinary working life.

Nelson.—The Annual Report presented to the members of the Unitarian Church recently records that the church has passed through its most critical time during 1916, owing to the loss of nearly all the men for the war, and other removals from the town. In consequence there have been three changes in the Church secretaryship, and the Sunday school secretaryship. The Church and school treasurers have had to be replaced by others, and more demands have been made upon the women, who have bravely endeavoured to make up as much as possible for the loss of the men. The attendances at the Sunday services have inevitably decreased. At the usual special Anniversaries the collections showed an increase on 1915. During the winter in the first quarter week-evening meetings were held for the young people, including Band of Hope, Recreation evening, and the Minister's class, but owing to the darkened streets these were stopped later on. Week-night lectures, concerts, and socials have been carried through with satisfactory results. The Women's League has conducted Sewing Meetings, held a successful Sale of Work, and a Cake and Apron Sale, in addition to other activities. In the summer there were Saturday afternoon rambles to places of local interest. The Sale of Work in April cleared over £80, from which £60 went to the reduction of the building debt, to which sum a 10 per cent grant was added by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission. The Church building has been licensed for marriages, and a Church Trust Deed drawn up and Trustees appointed. Charitable appeals have been responded to, including the Y.M.C.A. Hut Fund, Red Cross Fund, Belgian Hospital Fund, Blind Soldiers' Fund, Soldiers' Christmas Puddings Fund, and Belgian Children Fund. The Church had its share in establishing the East Cheshire Unitarian Association of Churches. The minister, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, has taken his turn in helping at the Burnley Lane Mission. A successful Unitarian War Savings Association has been formed in connection with the Church, with twenty-eight members, who up to December 31 paid in over £132 for War Certificates. The Church membership has been affected by removals, and now stands at fifty. The Treasurer's annual statement shows that the Church has paid its way, and ended the year with a small balance in hand, the income with grants being £308, of which £186 was raised locally. The minister has regularly had a brief summary of his sermons inserted in the local newspaper, which has helped to a better public understanding of the Unitarian position. Up to date, the men on the Roll of Honour called away number 22, and one more is away on munition work.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The Superintendent of the Sunday School of the Church of the Divine Unity, Mr. H. Boothroyd, has left for France, where he will spend six months as a volunteer worker of the Y.M.C.A. On the evening prior to his departure a Teachers' and Elder Scholars' Party was held, when he was presented with a luminous wristlet watch. The Rev. Alfred Hall and the Secretary of the School, Mr. Eugene Mein, spoke of Mr. Boothroyd's popularity among the teachers and the affection in which he was held by all the scholars, and the presentation was made in appropriate words by Miss Isabel Thompson. Subscriptions of a penny and upward had been received from the scholars and Mr. Boothroyd was asked to accept the watch as a token of regard from all the young people associated with the school. Mr. Boothroyd is also an active lay preacher of the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Association.

Nottingham.—On Thursday, February 8, a large congregation, in addition to the relatives and nearer friends of the bride and bridegroom, gathered at the High Pavement Chapel to witness the marriage of Miss Margaret Forman, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Forman, and grand-daughter of Mrs. J. M. Perry, to Major William A. Potter, D.S., A.S.C. The chapel had been beautifully decorated for the occasion.

Plymouth.—On Thursday, February 8, the members of the Unitarian Church in Treville Street celebrated the fifth anniversary of the settlement of the Rev. W. H. Burgess. A special service was held in the afternoon, when the Rev. George S. Woods, of Taunton, preached, and a social gathering was held after tea in the evening. Mr. Woods, in the course of his sermon, dealt with the subject of a religion of utility and the new ideal in education, pointing out that everything in our practical life had been revolutionised, and that the world was faced in the immediate future with the task of organising human life from pole to pole. Religion must be the handmaiden of the new, budding human society, and each one of them could make it in his respective station a true servant of human life. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Arthur Dufton, M.A., B.Sc., who spoke with appreciation of Mr. Burgess's services to the church. The Rev. Alfred Lancaster (Tavistock) and the Rev. G. S. Woods also spoke, and later on a cheque was presented to Mr. Burgess by the Chairman, on behalf of the Church Committee, Mrs. Burgess being the recipient of a handbag from the Ladies' Sewing Society. In his reply Mr. Burgess emphasised the necessity for bringing religion to bear upon the social conditions which prevailed so that they might move forward to better things. Musical items were contributed by Mrs. Cruickshank and Mr. Bamford.

Pontypridd.—The nineteenth annual concert of the Unitarian Church was held at the new Town Hall on February 1, and was well attended. War work, in which the chief promoter, Mrs. John Lewis, was engaged, made it necessary to choose a date about three months later than usual. The standard maintained by the performers precludes the possibility of the concert becoming popular in the ordinary sense, and the audience is always made up of music lovers, a number of whom think it worth while to travel long distances to be present. A noteworthy feature of this year's concert was the appearance of Miss Enid Lewis, an artist from the Unitarian Church itself. The other artists were Miss Muriel Jones (soprano), Miss Lily Fairney (contralto), Mr. Warwick Evans (violoncello), and Mr. Arthur Beckwith (violin).

Portsmouth.—Last Sunday afternoon St. Thomas's Street General Baptist Chapel was placed at the disposal of the International Bible Students Association for a special service of baptism, when ten men and seven women were baptised by immersion. The lady members of the choir are to be congratulated upon the success of the tea and musical entertainment which they have just given to fifty aged people. The evening was greatly enjoyed.

St. Helens.—On Monday, February 19, at the Free Church, the new minister, the Rev. J. Horace Short, late of Blackpool, was welcomed at a meeting of the congregation. The Church has been without a minister for two years, and during that period it has been chiefly supplied by the Lay Preachers Association of Liverpool. Nearly one hundred friends were present, and the chair was taken by Mr. A. Dodd. Letters of apology for absence from Mr. A. S. Thew, J.P., President of the L.D.M.A., the Revs. J. Collins Odgers, W. Jellie, J. E. Jenkins, and H. W. Hawkes, Mrs. H. D. Roberts, and Mr. Green, the local minister of the Society of Friends, were read by the secretary, Mr. Valentine. The Chairman extended a hearty welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Short, which was supported by Mr. John Cox on behalf of the congregation, Mr. George Smith for the Sunday school, Mr. James Thackray for the Adult School, Mrs. Fryer for the ladies, the Rev. J. Bellamy Higham, B.A., an old minister of the Church, now retired, Dr. S. A. Mellor for the L. D. M. A., the Revs. Charles Roper, A. E. Parry, and Fisher Short (brother of the minister) for the ministers of the Liverpool district. Mr. Short in reply thanked the meeting for the goodwill expressed during the evening, and said that he looked forward to the work that lay before him in his new sphere with hope and joy. He did not intend to make the pulpit sensational, but hoped rather that the same ends would be gained by a sympathetic personal contact with those interested, and the cultivation of a deep and sustaining fellowship. It is hoped that the church has a prosperous future before it under Mr. Short's leadership.

Sheffield: Upper Chapel.—The annual meeting of the congregation, which was a very successful and agreeable function, was held in Channing Hall on Thursday, 15th inst. The tea was the gift of the Rev. C. J. and Mrs. Street, the proceeds, amounting to £4 10*s.* 3*d.*, being handed over to the Sheffield Unitarian War Distress Effort. During the evening a musical programme was rendered by members of the choir, a special welcome being given to the organist, Lieut. Arnold Bagshaw, who has been in the army since the outbreak of war. At the meeting Mr. George H. Hunt presided. The annual report and accounts were adopted, and considered satisfactory under present circumstances. Miss Gamble and Messrs. J. B. Taylor, T. Peters, and S. E. Deeley were elected to fill vacancies on the Committee. Hearty thanks were given to the minister (the Rev. C. J. Street) and assistant minister (the Rev. J. W. Lee), on the proposition of Mr. J. R. Wigfull, seconded by Mr. J. W. Bell; and to the officers, trustees, and committee, on the motion of Mr. W. Sinclair, seconded by Mr. F. Stead. The Revs. C. J. Street and J. W. Lee, Mr. G. H. Hunt (treasurer) and Mr. Robert Stevenson (secretary) responded. Thanks were accorded to the artistes, Mr. and Mrs. Street and their helpers, and the Chairman, on the motion of Mr. W. J. Turner, seconded by Mr. H. R. Bramley. The Rev. Dr. Carpenter preached last Sunday morning, on the occasion of collections being made on behalf of the Armenian Refugees Fund. On February 18 Mr. Street began a series of special evening sermons on 'Books with a Message.' His subject last Sunday was 'The Ultimate Belief,' by Mr. A. Clutton-Brock.

THE LATE REV. W. E. ADDIS.

IT is with very deep regret that we hear of the sudden death of the Rev. W. E. Addis as the result of a street accident on Tuesday. His memory will be cherished with deep and reverent affection by many of our readers who had come under the spell of his wide learning and his simple religious character. Before his appointment as Vicar of All Saints', Ennismore Gardens, he was minister of the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, and afterwards for many years Lecturer on Hebrew and Old Testament Literature at Manchester College, Oxford.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to. strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO, 16 New Brown St., Manchester

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, MISS E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. CANN & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 1*s.* 9*d.* each on silver, 2*s.* 9*d.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. RAYBURN & Co, 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

GENTS' HANDKERCHIEFS. Slightly imperfect hemstitched Irish Linen. Size 18 or 19 inches. Bundle of six, 3*s.* 3*d.* (postage 3*d.*). Send postcard to-day for the Bargain List, free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any?

I will pay 5*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. What is the use of artificial teeth that you do not wear lying in a drawer? But don't be misled by higher advertised prices. Far better write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any make of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Bankers: London City and Midland Bank, Ltd. When sending kindly mention THE INQUIRER.

E. LEWIS & CO., 29 London St., SOUTHPORT, Lancs.

ESTABLISHED 1873.

Printed by THE ATHENÆUM PRESS, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 24, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

Special Number for our Men on Active Service.

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY
Berkeley, California

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3896. NEW SERIES, No. 999.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

THE BOOK ROOM, ESSEX HALL, LONDON.

WHEN IN LONDON—

if you are interested in Liberal and Progressive Religious Thought, or want to know about Unitarians and their Free and Open way of looking at Life and Religion in the Light of Modern Knowledge—

VISIT THE BOOK ROOM AT ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

BOOKS TO BUY AND READ.

MODERN HANDBOOKS OF RELIGION.

"These Handbooks deserve a large hearing."—The Nation.

Religion as Affected by Modern Science and Philosophy. By STANLEY A. MELLOR, B A., Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"Mr. Mellor's masterly discussion of these problems may be strongly recommended."—Review of Theology and Philosophy.

Religion in Social and National Life. By H. D. ROBERTS. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"He writes with much freshness and earnestness."—Liverpool Post.

The New Testament in the Light of Modern Knowledge. By H. McLACHLAN, M.A., B.D. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"Every topic is carefully and interestingly treated."—Christian World.

Communion of Man with God. By R. NICOL CROSS, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"A bracing and broadening study of an inexhaustible subject."—Christian Commonwealth.

Jesus and Christianity in the Twentieth Century. By ALFRED HALL, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"An able review of modern Christology."—Times Literary Supplement

The Revelation of God in Nature and Man. By EDGAR THACKRAY, M.A., Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"He lays stress throughout his work on divine immanence as suggesting the true sources of revelation."—Glasgow Herald.

The Divine Element in Art and Literature. By W. L. SCHROEDER, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"He adds to a serious and devout mind a considerable knowledge of the music, the art, and the letters of present and past times."—Times Literary Supplement.

Eternal Life Here and Hereafter. By S. H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

"An extraordinarily cheap book considering its size and the amount of hard thinking and good writing that it contains."—Expository Times.

Ethical and Religious Problems of the War. Addresses by Prof. GILBERT MURRAY, Sir HENRY JONES, Dr. WICKSTEED, Dr. JACKS, and others. Edited by Dr. CARPENTER. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

"Of the highest practical value and interest."—Manchester Guardian.

"It comes from the Extreme Left in English thought, both in politics and religion."—The Spectator.

UNITARIAN TEACHERS AND PREACHERS.

Courage and Cheer. Sermons. Second edition. With Portrait. By BROOKE HERFORD, D.D. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

Endeavours after the Christian Life. By JAMES MARTINEAU, D.C.L. Two volumes. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 1*s.* 6*d.* net each.

A Spiritual Faith. Sermons. By J. HAMILTON THOM. Second edition. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

God and the Soul. An Essay towards Fundamental Religion. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

The Historical Jesus and the Theological Christ. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., D.D., D.Litt. Crown 8vo, 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

Converging Lines of Religious Thought. By SYDNEY H. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

Studies in Christian Doctrine. By JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.Litt. Demy 8vo, 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

The Bible: What it is and is not. By JOSEPH WOOD. Crown 8vo, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

The First Three Gospels: Their Origin and Relations. With a New Chapter on the Historical Value of the Gospels. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., D.D., D.Litt. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

Agnosticism and Theism in the Nineteenth Century. An Historical Study of Religious Thought. By R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

The Story and Significance of the Unitarian Movement. By W. G. TARRANT, B.A. Fcap. 8vo, 1*s.* net.

Unitarian Affirmations. Six Lectures. By R. TRAVERS HERFORD, B.A. Fcap. 8vo, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

The Secret of Righteousness. By WILLIAM WOODING, B.A. Crown 8vo, 2*s.* net.

The World of Matter and the Spirit of Man. By THEODORE PARKER. Crown 8vo, 3*s.* net.

For Those Who Mourn. Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved. Edited by W. G. TARRANT, B.A. Cloth, 1*s.* net; paper covers, 3*d.* net.

For Freedom and Right. Booklet in Case. Readings, Prayers, Hymns—for Men on Active Service. Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE. Price 6*d.* net. Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund, Lawrence House.

Catalogues of Books and Pamphlets sent post free on application to

THE LINDSEY PRESS, ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, March 4.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Lieut.-Col. C. S. Bullock.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. H. Smith; 6.30, Mr. J. Begg.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. Vint Laughland; 7, Rev. Dr. Walsh.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. Peterken.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. J. W. Gale.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. P. Rosling.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Dr. Carpenter.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. L. Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Cambridge, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. L. Redfern, B.D.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Edinburgh, St. Mark's, Castle Terrace, 11, Rev. R. V. Holt, B.A., B.Litt.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. A. Cobden Smith.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. Edgar I. Fripp, B.A.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30. Supplies as announced locally.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Wm. Stevens.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Wain.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Jellie, B.A.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 3.15, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March.

4. Rev. Dr. Carpenter, of Manchester College, Oxford.
11. Rev. Dr. Carpenter, of Manchester College, Oxford.
18. Rev. Frederick Hankinson of Kentish Town.

DEATH.

Ellis.—On February 7, in France, Edward Vezian Ellis, M.C., died of wounds received in action, elder son of Henry and Margaret Ellis of Potters Bar.

LADY desires post as COMPANION to Lady where maids kept. Undertake light household duties; small salary; southern counties.—A. F., Inquirer Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.

MR. ISRAEL ZANGWILL will deliver the EIGHTH CONWAY MEMORIAL LECTURE AT SOUTH PLACE CHAPEL, FINSBURY, on THURSDAY, MARCH 8, at 6.30 p.m., the subject being "THE PRINCIPLE OF NATIONALITIES." Mr. Percy Alden, M.P., will preside. Admission free; reserved seats, 1s. each, to be obtained from the R.P.A., Ltd., Nos. 5 and 6 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C. (by post 1s. 1d.)

"HERE COMES THE SOLDIER."

A Welcome-Home Song (S.A.T.B.)

BY J. L. HAIGH.

Specimen Copy, 1½d., post free.

LIVERPOOL: 37 OBAN ROAD.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:
H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. Montgomery, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

and Boarding School for Girls,

Highgate, London, N. Head Mistress Miss Lilian Talbot, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the Head Mistress.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W., endorsed "Inquirer."

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

THE HOUR OF DESTINY 99
LORD BRYCE'S MESSAGE 100
GREETINGS TO OUR SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND AIRMEN 100
TO THE GIRLS WHO SERVE AT HOME . . 100
HOME-SONG 101
THE JUBILEE OF THE REV. H. E. DOWSON 101
OUR GIRLS ON THE LAND 102
THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND 103
IN A RED CROSS HOSPITAL IN FRANCE . 104
HOW WE CARRY ON IN CHURCH AND SCHOOL 104
SOME MINISTERS WHO ARE DOING THEIR BIT 105
LAWRENCE HOUSE 106
ONE OF OUR HEROES 107
AMONG OUR SOLDIERS IN THE HOME CAMPS 107
SOME OF OUR CONTRIBUTORS 108

THIS SPECIAL NUMBER of THE INQUIRER has been prepared because we want to send a word of greeting and good cheer to all the men from our Churches and Sunday Schools who are on active service. A copy is being forwarded by the Committee of Lawrence House, the new Social Centre for Soldiers and Sailors at Essex Hall, to all whose names are known to us. Of course there may be omissions and mistakes in such a long list, and we shall be glad to receive the name and address of any man who fails to receive his copy.

The shortage of paper and the grave warning in the Prime Minister's speech last week have interfered with our plans. It has become a matter of patriotism to cut down expense wherever we can and to make a little go a long way. But we hope that our readers will agree with us that the few pages which we offer to them are rich in good things. The portraits will recall many a familiar face, while the heartening words written by Lord Bryce, Dr. Jacks and others, have in them a glow of religious faith and of confidence in the virtue of our cause, which will help us all to be strong and of a good courage.

There is one thing which we are very anxious that every one should feel in reading this Special Number. It can be expressed best by the word Fellowship. We are friends. We stand very close to one another. We have common memories and affections. We share together the best and most beautiful things in life. Our worship of God, our trust in His love and goodness, His guidance and His care, our desire to be followers of Jesus Christ in some real way, by trying to be good and to do good, our belief that to help and serve our comrades is a gladder and a nobler thing than to seek for safety for ourselves—all this is what we mean by Religion. These are the strong and simple things which matter to a man when he is face to face with his duty. Many things have been burned up in the furnace of the war, but this kind of religion is not one of them. We want its help all the time, and we find it when we try to bear our own burden cheerfully and to give the strength of our lives and the love of our hearts to the service of our brothers.

THE HOUR OF DESTINY.

"WE are upon an Engagement very difficult. The enemy hath blocked up our way at the pass of Copperspath, through which we cannot get without almost a miracle. He lieth so upon the hills that we know not how to come that way without great difficulty: and our lying here daily consumeth our men.... The business nearly concerneth all Good People. If your forces had been in a readiness to have fallen upon the back of Copperspath, it might have occasioned supplies to have come to us. But the only wise God knows what is best. All shall work for Good. Our spirits are comfortable, praised be the Lord—though our present condition be as it is. And indeed we have much hope in the Lord of whose mercy we have had large experience."

These words were written by Cromwell to the Governor of Newcastle on the evening before the Battle of Dunbar. His position was desperate. He was hemmed in, with the sea behind him: his supplies were cut off; he was outnumbered—lost to all outward seeming. Carlyle has made the scene immortal.

The hour of destiny was about to strike. The great soul was upon "an Engagement very difficult," as we are, as the cause of civilisation is, at the present moment. For us as for him everything hangs upon the issue. What would all our discussions of the war avail us, what would become of all the "lessons" it is to teach us, and of all the "reconstructions" that are to follow, if the event of the war were to miscarry? The question confronted Cromwell. His position was closely akin to ours, but worse, for it was desperate as well as "very difficult." Yet he carried his head high. "His spirits were comfortable, praised be the Lord"; "making no complaint for himself; doing, with grave brevity, in the hour the business of the hour." "He was a strong man; in the dark perils of war, in the high places of the field, hope shone in him like a pillar of fire when it had gone out in all the others."

How he won through we know. Two days afterwards, when all was over and the hard-won victory his, he wrote in a similar strain—this time in an official dispatch—to the Speaker of the House of Commons:—

"The enemy lying in the position before mentioned, having those advantages; we lay very near him, being sensible of our disadvantages, having some weakness of the flesh, but yet consolation and support from the Lord himself to our poor weak faith, wherein I believe not a few among us stand: That because of their numbers, because of their advantages, because of their confidence, because of our weakness, because of our strait, we were in the Mount, and in the Mount the Lord would be seen; and that He would find out a way of deliverance and salvation for us:—and indeed we had our consolations and our hopes."

Casually reading these words the other day I found my attention suddenly gripped and held fast as it has been by nothing I have heard or read during the course of the war. Here was the trumpet call of "the unconquerable mind," which stirs the heart more deeply than any sound of earth. Here was the soul of England making answer as it has always answered when summoned to the last test of its fidelity. As I read the passages again and again, and pondered the circumstances among which they were written, it seemed as though a voice was calling to me from the buried past: "We are in the Mount and in the Mount the Lord's hand will be seen." The words matter little, but surely the exultation that breathes through them should have its echo in our hearts to-day. How well has Carlyle caught the spirit! "And so the soldiers stand to their arms, or lie within reach of their arms all night; being upon an engagement very difficult indeed.... Whoever has a heart for prayer, let him pray now, for the wrestle of death is at hand. Pray—and withal keep his powder dry! And be ready for extremities and quit himself like a man! Thus they pass the night. ....The hoarse sea moans bodeful, swinging slow and heavy against those whinstone bays; the sea and the tempests are abroad, all else asleep but we—and there is One that rides on the wings of the wind." That also is for us.

L. P. JACKS.

LORD BRYCE'S MESSAGE.

The Right Hon. Viscount Bryce has sent us the following Message to our Men on Active Service :—

"We have in this war, what nations seldom have had in any war, a perfectly righteous cause, a cause in whose success the future of humanity is involved. You are fighting for International Right, for the safety of the smaller nations, for the immunity of non-combatants from cruelty, murder and slavery. You are fighting to set the brand of failure upon the most shameful faithlessness and the most atrocious methods that ever disgraced a government carrying on war. Our hearts are with you. We honour your valour, and we trust that with such valour, and with so righteous a cause, you will save Europe and insure a lasting peace."

TO OUR SOLDIER LADS.

My dear Boys,—As about the oldest of your ministers, I am quite past rendering active service at the front. But in my 80th year I am as full of enthusiasm as any of you for the righteous cause in which you have gone forth to fight. I send you my message of benediction. I hope these words will reach two of my own sons in France, and a hundred and more of my dear Gee Cross boys. I want to tell you all, not alone of my own church and school, but of all our churches and schools throughout the land, how we old folks at home think of you and love you and take a pride in you night and day, and remember you in our prayers. It is for us a source of infinite satisfaction and a light shining on the darkness of this hour that, when the call came to you, it was so nobly answered ; and that you went forth, with deathless courage, carrying your lives in your hands, and that you now set your faces to see your dear native land through this great battle, not alone in its own defence but for the redemption of the civilised world from the assaults of a ruthless barbarism, and from the dominion of a military despotism under which might would reign supreme and right be trampled in the dust. In my old age I envy you your part in the victory for human kind that will ring through the ages as the greatest event in the history of the world ; while, as I think of your dear comrades from our household of faith who have fallen at your side, I join with you in laying a wreath of immortal honour on their graves. God bless and keep you every one.

H. Enfield Dowson.

The Parsonage, Gee Cross.

TO THE LADS OF THE NAVY.

It is a happy privilege to be allowed to send a word of hearty greeting and good cheer to the brave sons of Britain manning the Empire's "first line of defence."

We know that British folk are not much given to vaunting in such matters ; and those, who know us not, may be forgiven if the gallant services of the Navy are accepted in a silence, which many think might well be more frequently broken.

But it is to be hoped that both the Quarter Deck and the Lower Deck will know that the sympathy and the gratitude of the whole nation are ever sincere, and its interest keen and constant for the men afloat, who keep watch and ward over the dear old land, alike in calm and storm, and by night and day. To the men of our Fleets, Naval and Mercantile alike, we offer the assurance that we cannot fail to think of them, and that we dare not be so ungrateful as to forget them.

To them each and all we say : In your hands lies the hope of our country, and the maintenance of civil and religious liberty the whole world over ! Against an inhuman foe, brutal in deed, and false in heart, your valour must be our defence ! You it is who keep inviolate the peace of our shores, and the industries of our cities ; and behind the yet undinted shield of your dauntless courage and indomitable endurance, the old homes you love so dearly stand in safety, and give shelter to the sweet and honoured lives of mother and of sister, wife, and sweetheart !

There is no need to ask how our sailor-lads keep their high and sacred trust ; but, if men seek an answer to such a question, let them ask of the stormy winds and of the raging seas that find our heroic seamen steadfast in their matchless obedience to duty, and in their cheerful and never-failing endurance.

If that reply is not sufficient let men call to mind the battered and broken warships of an enemy valiant enough to crush the harmless and unarmed merchantman, but feeble beneath fire of those British guns that shall yet sweep the Pirate's flag from the face of the ocean that it dishonours.

God's blessing upon our fearless and ever ready sailor lads ! Let every one of them surely rely upon the gratitude and the honour that await them in the homes, which we pray may know the joy of their glad return, when, at last, the war is done, when national righteousness and lasting peace, shall bless an enfranchised world, and when the men who delight in war shall be scattered to the four winds of heaven !

Ambrose N. Blatchford.

Bideford, Devon.

TO OUR FLYING MEN.

One hardly knows how to address you—whether, with the poet and the poet's theme in mind, "Hail to you blythe spirits ! " or, "Dear, daring, nonchalant youths, whom we hold in affectionate awe ! " At one moment we think of you as the embodiment of all that is most poignant and alluring in adventure and exhilarating enterprise, drinking indeed "great draughts of space" in your swift and skyey flight ; at another we realise with solemn gratitude all that your arm of the service has done for our majestic cause. But whether in your appeal to the imagination of us humdrum and pedestrian folks, or in actual war-achievement, you have triumphed, and our thought of you already finds focus in the vision of "Winged Victory."

Accept, then, our thanks : between these lines and among these words, find everywhere grateful tribute to you for all you have already done for the cause of justice, public right and national integrity.

We still watch you with breathless wonder as you wheel and circle above our home-towns ; and when we read of your astounding feats in the war area—your constancy as observers, pilots or gunners, your bravery and coolness in the face of war perils made ten-fold more perilous by the danger of flight itself—words fail us, and we fall back upon the simple expression of our affection and gratitude.

Many of you, in your clean-limbed, strong and resilient youth, were among those who had seen, before the war, the vision of the new and nobler civic life to come, and you had joined in the organised efforts towards that goal. Then the call came challenging, "Do thy duty, that is best." Had you stayed then (but you did not stay) the vision must have fled ; and now, not only is the vision still "standing where you left it," but we at home believe you are even now building some part of it into foundational reality. And as in the noise of your war machines we hear the evolving of a new science, a new art, and a new civilian experience to become of far-reaching influence upon our daily life, so we see in your self-dedication to our cause presage and prophecy of that new and better peace-life to come, more earnest than the life we have known, more chivalrous, more full of the daring and romance you have found in the skies.

God speed to your flight ! And while you rise above the battle, yet still in it, forget not to mount in heart and mind, for only in the strength of the spirit shall our true victory be won.—Yours in admiration and gratitude,

John C. Ballantyne.

Nottingham.

TO THE GIRLS WHO SERVE AT HOME.

I have heard from all parts of the country of the work for the war that you girls are doing, how you are going to hospitals to nurse the wounded, knitting and sewing at home and school for those abroad, working at munition factories, getting up concerts for wounded soldiers at the hospitals, and helping to raise money required in so many ways by this all-absorbing war.

Besides this I know that many of the places formerly occupied by men, now on service, are being filled by you, not only as officers or teachers in our Sunday schools but, beyond their walls, as clerks in banks and offices, or as assistants or managers in places of business, even as drivers of bread or milk carts. All this activity means a great amount of sacrifice, to many it means loss of liberty, turning out early on cold winter mornings, long hours of work, giving up accustomed recreations and maintaining a steady and determined effort to surmount the difficulties of learning some new form of work. For all this we honour you and would like to send you a word of encouragement and sympathy. You are taking your place in the nation's life, you are showing that you love your country, and are willing to help in the cause of justice, liberty and civilisation.

The call has come to the womanhood of our nation to show that they can be true citizens, and you among others have responded to that call. The result of what you are doing will not end with the ending of the war ; it will help to raise the position of women in our country, and it will help to bring on that better time when the influence of women will make itself felt for good in all departments of life.

And will not the efforts you are making cheer the hearts of the men who are enduring so much for us all ? Will not many of those who have had to leave their ordinary work to serve their country feel satisfaction in thinking that their place is being filled, and well filled, by you girls, and will not they be proud of you ?

But above all I would like to encourage you to make and keep your homes orderly and bright and well cared-for. "Here woman reigns supreme." Ruskin said : "Wherever a true woman comes, home is always around her, home is where she is." Mr. Gladstone used to say he found in his home "a temple of peace." Make your houses real homes, so that when peace is proclaimed the long absent ones will return to find a welcome peace also in their homes.

Lucy Dowson.

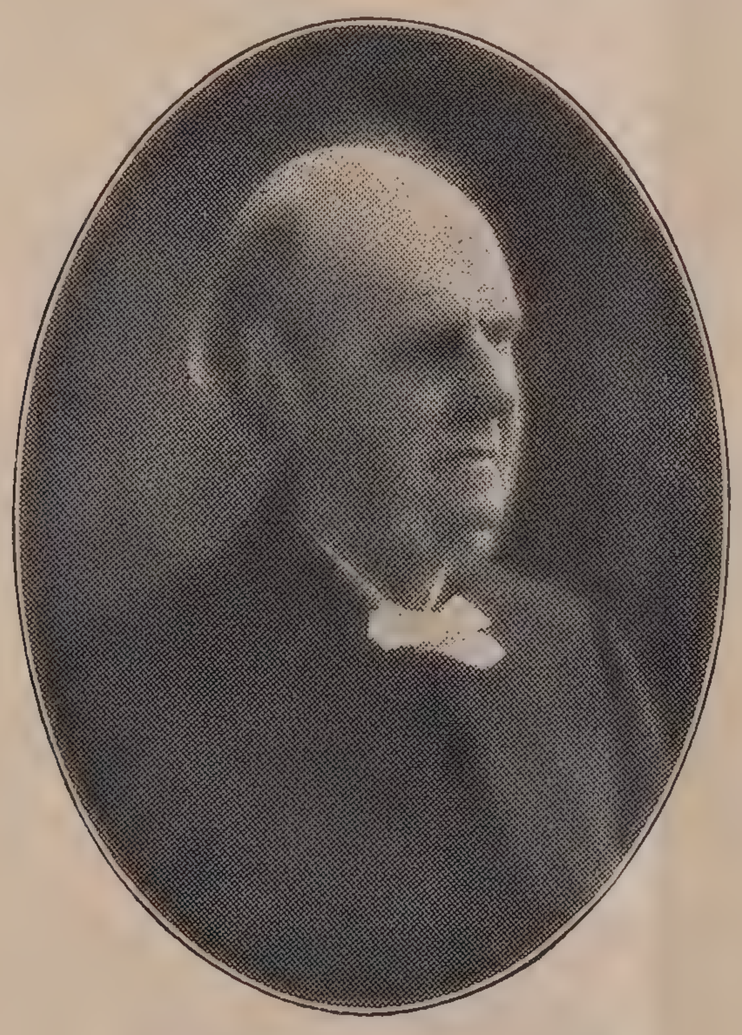
Gee Cross.

HOME-SONG.

There is a word above all other words
That we desire to sing,
While memories, like a choir of birds
In flowery Spring,
Their promise bring
Of joys to be, with "Come, boys, come !
Love is the beacon bright that leads you home."

Chorus.

Here comes the soldier from his weary round,
Here comes the sailor from the cold North Sea ;
Stern Duty spoke, and both were faithful found,
"But oh !" they cry,
"But oh to be among our own folk,
Our warm true-hearted home folk !
In that dear land of love and liberty
Washed by the waters of the cold North Sea,
Sheltered and safe beside the cold North Sea."



Our sons are ready in the time of need
To serve the cause of right
Against tyrannic hate and greed,
And ruthless might,
Their hearts alight
To obey their country's trumpet-call,
And hold her honour high whate'er befall.

Our fathers kept the faith in days of old,
And walked the strenuous way
Erect and calm, yet ever bold
To speak and pray ;
We, in our day
Remembering them, should truly cry,
"God keep me clean and strong until I die."

J. L. Haigh

THE JUBILEE OF THE REV. H. E. DOWSON.

On April 15 the Rev. H. E. Dowson will celebrate his jubilee as minister of Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross. In these days of movement and constant change a ministry of fifty years in the same place is in itself remarkable, but in the case of a man so popular and so beloved as Mr. Dowson it is an event of public importance and will be the occasion of widespread rejoicing. He is one of the best known and most popular men in our ministry. Wherever he goes his fine presence and his infectious enthusiasm radiate warmth and friendship, but it is among our churches and Sunday schools of Lancashire and Cheshire that he reigns supreme. To them he stands for all the simple human qualities which they value most, a big heart, a broad mind, and an open hand. Mr. Dowson has always worked with all his strength for his large parish, and has taken special pride in his schools, which have grown from the modest proportions of fifty years ago to the present splendid pile of buildings. In 1869 the Gee Cross Undenominational School was opened in the Sunday school building. Under the Education Act of 1902 it wa turned over to the Education Committee of the Hyde Town Council along with five other schools. Of the Joint Committee of Management Mr. Dowson is still Chairman. A new building was added to the old one in 1889 at a cost of £3,000. It is characteristic of Mr. Dowson's popularity that on the occasion of the stone-laying twenty-two ministers of all denominations walked in procession, while at a bazaar held a little later two Roman Catholic priests spoke at the opening proceedings.

The Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, B.A.

Mrs. Dowson.

Mr. Dowson's activities in his own neighbourhood are almost too numerous to mention. He is at the present time President of the Hyde Division Liberal Association, of the Hyde Students' Association and the Nursing Association; and in past years he has filled the office of President of the Hyde Cricket Club, the local Swimming Club, and the Hyde Young Liberals. No institution has been nearer to his heart than Manchester College, to which he always refers with a special note of pride in his voice as his "Alma Mater." He is deeply attached to its noble traditions of sound learning and religious liberty. He took a prominent part in the removal of the College from London and the erection of its beautiful buildings at Oxford. For many years he served as its clerical secretary, and subsequently as Chairman of Committee.

Mr. Dowson was married on December 5, 1866, to Miss Lucy Osler, daughter of the late Mr. A. Follett Osler of Birmingham. On the occasion of the celebration of their Golden Wedding last year they received numerous tokens of affection and regard and a beautiful gift from the members of the congregation. Mrs. Dowson has taken a deep interest in all matters affecting public health, the welfare of women and girls and the beautifying of home life. She has been President of the Hyde Women's Liberal Association, of the Hyde Branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and of the Nursing Association and Women's Suffrage Society.

Mr. Dowson has always been known as an ardent lover of peace and a promoter of international friendship. He has many gracious memories of German life in the days when he was a student at Heidelberg with his cousin the late Right Hon. Henry Enfield Roscoe; but Germany's policy of insolent aggression made him at once an ardent supporter of the struggle for freedom and humanity. Few men have spoken with more ringing conviction of the righteousness of our cause, and three of his sons have joined the Army. Major Edgar Enfield Dowson served with the 6th Cheshire Territorials for two and a half years, when he had to retire owing to ill-health; Mr. Aubrey Dowson, who was a notable athlete and won his double blue at Rugby and Oxford, is a Lieutenant in the 12th Battalion of the Rifle Brigade; while Capt. Oscar Follett Dowson is attached to the Headquarters of the 2nd Army in France. Many of Mr. Dowson's old boys are in the trenches. They will read with special gratitude and delight the words of greeting and encouragement, which their revered teacher and leader has written in this special number for them and for all their comrades, and on the day of his jubilee their voices will be among the loudest in the chorus of congratulation.

(Photos by Mr. Warwick Brookes of Manchester.)

OUR GIRLS ON THE LAND.

Last summer many of us who had been working hard at college made up our minds to do our bit of war-work in the vacation. None of us thought twice about the form it should take, for outdoor work appealed to us, after college life. As soon as we were free off we started, a party of eight, well equipped with boots, leggings, overalls, &c., ready to do any kind of work that came along. Several members of the squad had not met before, but a few days of farm life made them fast friends.

The estate we worked on in Dorsetshire comprised about five or six farms, so we had plenty of scope for our work, and a great variety too. At first we took up our abode in a hayloft and had swallows and mice as our fellow lodgers. Of course it was all cleaned up and looked very nice, with a row of beds down each side. Here we had all our meals outside in the garden of the farmhouse.

In August and September we had a change in billets, for then we inhabited loose boxes, newly built for the horses, who, however, had to put off coming in till we had gone. These were really the height of luxury, and each was like a room, in which four or five of us lived. Each box had a name: one was called The Dugout, which was not at all complimentary, but mine went by the original name of The Crocodile, becaues it contained a clock that ticked.

It is time now that I told you a little about what we did. July was mostly spent in getting in the hay, and when this was done there were everlasting turnips to hoe. We often wondered why the sheep and cattle needed so many turnips, and mangels. During the haymaking season we used to be in the field all day, and a little boy from the farm brought us out our meals, for which we were always ready. I used to think grooming a horse was very difficult, but it is not really, though it is very hard work if the horse is dusty after a good day's work. Most of the horses we had to deal with were very slow old beasts, and we developed very deep voice trying to make them move. However, when it came to riding them home their pace increased considerably. They knew tea awaited them in their stable. The foreman used to give me the orders for the day every morning, and one day, to our great surprise, he sent two of us off to wash pigs. This was an entirely new job, and we set to with eagerness. We had to follow the pig round the sty, with the brush in one hand and the pail in the other, trying to get in a scrub. Some pigs liked it, but others barged about, squealing as if they were being killed. Now, I suppose you are wondering what on earth was the good of washing pigs, but there was an object, for there was to be a large pig auction on the estate, and all the beasts had to look as attractive as possible. The sale was a great success, and three of us spent a lively day driving pigs up and down the road, and in and out of pens and pigsties. I never came across a more obstinate animal than a pig.

On the whole, the carting of the harvest was the most satisfying work, for by this time we were thoroughly practised in pitching and loading, and to see the fields being cleared, and the stacks growing up, made us feel we were really doing something worth doing. The first part of September was wet, so we had to work all the harder when the weather was fine. Every day we were out there till it was dark, having sole charge of the cart, for there were only one or two men and they built the rick, with a few more girls to help them. There was another gang of carters, who were all men, and though, of course, there were more of us, still we kept up with them and our ricks shot up as quickly as theirs. Picking up potatoes was another autumn job, which was even more back breaking than hoeing. One of the photographs shows us riding down the field on the cart, after a hard morning's work.

Our spare time was spent mostly in bathing in the little river or writing everlasting letters. We were all very sad at having to go home, for, although we had spent a very enjoyable holiday, we had been doing war work, helping to win the war. It is not our privilege to be able to give our whole time to war work, but we mean to give all our holidays to working on the land. RUTH DRUMMOND.

GREEN fields of England! wheresoe'er
Across this watery waste we fare,
One image at our hearts we bear,
Green fields of England, everywhere.

Sweet eyes in England, I must flee
Past where the wave's last confines be,
Ere your loved smile I cease to see,
Sweet eyes in England, dear to me.

Dear home in England, safe and fast
If but my lot in thee is cast,
The past shall seem a nothing past
To thee, dear home, if won at last;
Dear home in England, won at last.

A. H. CLOUGH.

To be fit to live is to be fit to die. Until we can learn to live bravely, we cannot die bravely. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

ARM yourselves, and be ye men of valour, and be in readiness for the conflict: for it is better for us to perish in battle than to look upon the outrage of our nation and our altars. As the will of God is in heaven, even so let Him do. From an ANCIENT LITURGY.

To love God is our Happiness, to trust in Him is our Repose, to surrender ourselves entirely to His will is our Strength. CHARLES BEARD.

THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

President: The Rev. W. H. Drummond, Editor of THE INQUIRER.

Hon. Organiser: Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W., to whom all cheques and parcels should be sent.

Mrs. Bernard Allen.

THE BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND was established in January, 1915, in order to give help to the hospitals for Belgian soldiers in the north and west of France. These soldiers were part of the gallant little army which, under the command of King Albert, had rallied on the banks of the Yser and barred the road to Calais—and to England. In response to appeals in THE INQUIRER the Unitarian churches threw themselves heartily into the cause. Up to the time of writing over £16,000 has been collected for the Fund. This sum includes collections made in 102 churches, donations from 101 societies connected with those churches, the proceeds of 82 entertainments, and a gift of £200 from Unitarians in America sent by Dr. Samuel Eliot, the President of the American Unitarian Association. The number of individual subscribers was 1,587, the contributions coming from all parts of the British Empire and from the United States. Help has been sent to 117 hospitals and convalescent depots (and to most of them continued at regular intervals); 160 doctors at the Front have been provided with surgical equipment; three motors have been sent out; while assistance has also been given to about 30 orphanages and maternity homes. Besides money, 116,236 articles of clothing and other requisites have been sent in as gifts. These were contributed by 1,282 private workers and by 236 working parties (including 56 branches of the Women's League).

The most important undertaking during 1916 was the erection of a recreation hut at Calais for the Belgian soldiers of the base. This hut contains a large hall, which can accommodate 1,500 men, a reading and writing room, and a well equipped restaurant. Concerts, cinema or theatrical entertainments are given most days, and as there is no other provision of the kind for Belgian soldiers in Calais the gift of the Fund has been greatly appreciated by the army. Both Mr. Drummond and I have paid frequent visits to the hospitals in France so as to keep in close personal touch with the work.

ROSE ALLEN.

IN A RED CROSS HOSPITAL IN FRANCE.

John Campbell, M.D., F.R.C.S.

When a surgeon first arrives in France he cannot fail to be impressed by the vastness of the work which is being carried on by the Royal Army Medical Corps, the St. John Ambulance Association and the British Red Cross Society. There is no parallel to it in civil life. It is at the outset bewildering in its magnitude. Further observation compels him to marvel at the perfection which has been attained. Splendid hospitals have been improvised in hotels and casinos, or have been established in huts. Large fleets of motor ambulances are constantly at work as adjuncts to the hospital trains. Doctors, nurses and orderlies are everywhere ready to deal with the wounded and the sick. The whole great organisation is co-ordinated throughout the north of France by telephone and telegraph. Truly never in the history of the world has such splendid provision been made for the care of the wounded and sick of an army. The fine wards, the comfortable beds, the well-equipped operating rooms and X-ray installations, the electric lighting and the provision for getting rid of sewage matter and destroying refuse are all highly creditable to British enterprise.

Needless to say those who carry on the work of these splendid hospitals are worthy of their opportunities. Physicians and surgeons have left their lucrative practices at home and come out to give their best skill to the sick and wounded men. A great concourse of highly trained nurses and members of voluntary aid detachments are busy night and day, with that devotion of which women only are capable, ministering to the needs of the sufferers. Their tenderness, their patience, their unselfishness deserve the highest recognition and win the admiration of all who know the anxieties and discomforts of their dreary vigils. The orderlies, highly trained in the lifting and laying of wounded men, render kind and compassionate service by night and day.

Of the soldier patients it is impossible to speak in high enough terms. Brave and fearless in the hospital as on the battlefield, they show British manhood at its best. Uncomplaining in suffering, grateful for all that is done for them, courageous and cheery in face of great afflictions, they offer an example of manliness and self-sacrificing devotion to duty which is as wonderful as it is inspiring. To be associated with them raises one's opinion of the sterling qualities of the race from which they spring.

It was my good fortune to serve in a Red Cross Hospital which received the personal attention and the munificent liberality of Lady Hadfield. Her constant care and anxiety was to have everything possible done for the men and done in the best way. She spared nothing in her endeavour to give them every comfort and to provide all instruments and apparatus which could be to their advantage. Such is the spirit which actuates every one connected with the British Hospitals in France.

John Campbell.

HOW WE CARRY ON IN CHURCH AND SCHOOL.

The war has made all our work more difficult. Many of our best teachers and workers have gone to do their grim duty in the field. It has been hard to fill their places even for the time being. Some of the old teachers have come back to the work, while many of our girls have cheerfully undertaken the task of teaching the younger classes of boys. Our absent ones are ever in our minds; we think of them Sunday by Sunday and long for the time when they will be able to come back to us. Some have fallen, and their memory is precious beyond all telling. One who had been teacher and school secretary for over a quarter of a century fell in Gallipoli. His beloved memory is kept green by a fine portrait of him hung on the school walls by the side of many other past worthies. We are doing our utmost to keep things going as well as in the time of peace. We have been much cheered by an increased attendance in school, both at the morning and afternoon meetings. At Christmas we remembered our absent ones by sending to them one hundred and twenty parcels, all of which have arrived safely. Last year many were sunk by an enemy submarine. This year all of the Egyptian parcels arrived in good time on Christmas Eve, so that "our dear boys" could see how near they were to our hearts. We have received many letters from them, in all of which their affection for Church and School is plainly seen. Many have been able, as they say themselves, to face and conquer the temptations of a soldier's or a sailor's life by recollections of the teaching and example of an exceptionally devoted body of teachers in the past.

We remember the absent ones always in our prayers. Now and then one or two come home on an all too brief furlough. It is delightful to see some of them taking their place with their classes, as they used to do in happier times. Almost all of them at least find their way to the Church, whose value to them has greatly increased by their enforced absence from its services. Such always receive the affectionate welcome of dear and tried friends. It is always a pleasure to see how well most of them are looking, to hear them tell the story of their service to our land and to common humanity. Many vacant places are left in the Church and School, which cannot be filled, until the loved ones return. But we maintain the services with their accustomed heartiness, their fervour deepened by the continual thought of those not with us. So there is still a communion of spirits pervading our worship, which not even death itself can break. Of course the work to be done by those at home is increased; but no one murmurs. All realise the urgent need of doing their best, so that "our boys," when they return, will be able to take up their old places and find the Church and School much as they left them.

All of our Churches and Schools are doubtless working in much the same way and with the same solemn purpose before them. From them a greeting sacred and loving goes forth as with one voice to the dear ones far away. We never for a moment forget them: their well-being is precious to us. We look for the coming of the postman with an unwonted eagerness. If he only brings us a field-card, we are content; we know that the writer is well and doing his duty. The sight of the actual handwriting is more precious still; we fancy we can hear the tones of the well-known voice, we share communion with him across the sea. So, as President of the Sunday School Association, I send a warm and affectionate greeting to all of the old scholars fighting or in training to fight for our country and the cause of righteousness and justice. May God our Father watch over them, and if it be His will, give them back to us, to fill their wonted places in Church and School. May they soon have the blessed consciousness, that they have sacrificed themselves and endured such terrible dangers and hardships for a peace, which shall unite the nations together in the resolution to have no more war, but to live as members of one family, children of one Father.

Arthur W. Fox,
President of the Sunday School Association.

SOME MINISTERS WHO ARE DOING THEIR BIT.

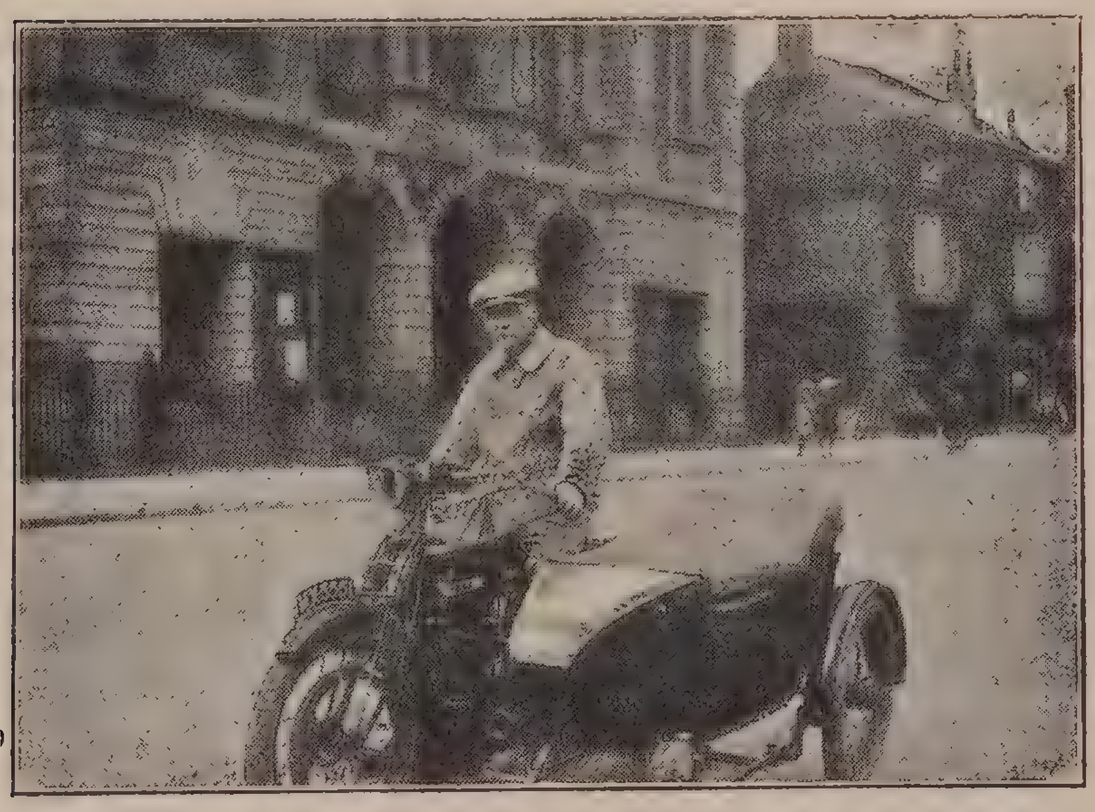
Lieut.-Col. the Rev. C. Seymour Bullock.

Lieut.-Col. the Rev. C. Seymour Bullock is an American citizen who has settled in Canada as minister of the Unitarian Church at Ottawa. He owes his position in the army to his great success in raising an American Legion for service in France among his fellow-citizens in Canada. He is Lieut.-Colonel in the Fifth Battalion of the American Legion Brigade, and also holds the position of Chaplain in the 97th O/S Battalion, C.E.F. Since he has been in England Lieut-Col. Bullock has preached in several of our pulpits, and his breezy manner combined with a whole-hearted enthusiasm for our cause have proved very attractive.

Lt. the Rev. H. D. Roberts has had a varied career. As a young man he had experience of colonial life both as a labourer on the land and as an extension lecturer for the University of Sydney. Subsequently he studied for the ministry at the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, and settled at Chester in 1896. He was minister of Hope Street Church, Liverpool, 1903-13, and in the latter year was appointed District Minister by the Liverpool District Association. He has taken a deep interest in social questions, especially in a crusade against sweating, and in the improvement of the general conditions of women's labour. In 1915, being debarred from general service in the army by his age, he enlisted as a private in the Liverpool Navvies Battalion and went out to France. Recently he has been raised straight from the ranks to a Lieutenant's commission in the Railway Transport service, a remarkable testimony to the value of his services and th high esteem in which he is held.

Lt. the Rev. H. D. Roberts.

The Rev. E. Glyn Evans, R.A.M.C.



The above photograph of the Rev. E. Glyn Evans, R.A.M.C., of Dudley, was taken in a village on the Somme Front last winter. Mr. Glyn Evans enlisted in June, 1915, in the South Midland Field Ambulance. After a short period of training he was promoted to the rank of Acting Quarter-master Sergeant. By the courtesy of his Commanding Officer he was also Honorary Chaplain to the Ambulance during the term of camp training. After six months' service in England he volunteered to relinquish his rank and stripes to proceed with the next draft of men to the front. As a private he has performed nearly every form of Ambulance work required on Active Service. Arriving in France in the middle of winter he commenced duty in emergency hospital huts. Later he was sent to an advanced dressing station near the line. During that time he was attached for first-aid duties to a Battery of French 75's from Verdun. He worked with the Battery during the first stage of the great Somme advance last summer, and afterwards went into the trenches and sometimes over the top with the infantry on the battlefields between Albert and Bapaume. On the application of his Church he was released last autumn to resume his clerical duties until such time as his services would be again required.

Second Lieut. the Rev. Walter Short, B.A.

Second Lieut. the Rev. Walter Short, B.A., is minister of the Bootle Free Church, Liverpool. He was educated at the Unitarian Home Missionary College, and is a graduate of Manchester University. He was minister at Stalybridge, 1909-12, and settled at Bootle in 1912. Last year he joined the Inns of Court O.T.C. and on the completion of his training received his commission as second lieutenant in the King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry. He is now on active service in France.

The Rev. T. P. Spedding.

The Rev. T. P. Spedding is the Missionary Agent of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, a position to which he was appointed in 1907 after twenty-one years at Rochdale. He has taken a prominent part in open-air preaching as leader of the Van Mission movement. Since the outbreak of the war he has devoted a great deal of time to visiting our men in the Home Camps and Hospitals with the special permission of the War Office. Our illustration shows him en route, with his motor cycle and side-car which were the generous gift of Mr. Charles Hawksley.

The Rev. R. Nicol Cross, M.A., R.A.M.C. (on the left).

The Rev. R. Nicol Cross, M.A., R.A.M.C., was educated at Glasgow, where he was a distinguished student, and at Manchester College, Oxford. After a year as assistant-minister at Essex Church, Kensington, and short ministries at Pendleton, Manchester, and Southport, he was appointed to the important position of minister at Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, as successor to Dr. Charles Hargrove in 1913. He is the author of an excellent book on Socrates, which was published shortly after the outbreak of war. In 1915 he enlisted in the R.A.M.C. and is serving at present in Egypt.

LAWRENCE HOUSE.

THE NEW HOSTEL AT ESSEX HALL.

We hope that Lawrence House will soon be a familiar name to every man from any of our churches, schools, or homes serving in the Army or Navy, for it is that of the house adjoining Essex Hall in Essex Street, Strand, which is now being converted into a hostel for their use, and which will be opened, we hope, at the end of March. There every one of them may be sure of a warm welcome, whether he be on his way between the trenches and a distant home or on leave from a Home Camp ; or perhaps a soldier from Overseas in London for the first time, and without friends in the great city ; or, it may be, a man broken in the war waiting his discharge from the Army, who needs a bed and a helping hand back into civilian life. It matters not what brings the man, or whether he will stay but an hour or two or as many days, at Lawrence House he will be welcomed and cared for, and if he has a pal with him, whom he would like to bring in, he may do so.

At the hostel there are to be six bedrooms, each containing the simplest fittings but a comfortable bed, where a man may sleep the clock round if he so desire. Meantime he may, if needful, have his clothes stoved in the disinfecting chamber, and exchange soiled and worn underclothing for clean and sound things. A convenient shower bath is near the disinfector, and a good bathroom is also provided upstairs. On the first floor is the little room where we hope to install a matron who will give the homelike touch which is to be a feature of the hostel, and where a little stock of dressings and bandages will be stored ready for use. There is a small sitting-room on the ground floor, and in Essex Hall, adjoining, are two more rooms—one for writing, smoking, games, &c., the other larger one for teas, which will be served as wanted throughout the afternoon. This room, known as the American Room, owes its comfortable furnishing and easy chairs to the generous gift sent by American Unitarians through Dr. S. A. Eliot of Boston. Beyond teas, it is not intended at first to provide other meals, with the exception of hot coffee for those men who have to make a start in the early morning, as meals, both good and cheap, are easily obtainable near by.

The usefulness of Lawrence House will not end with the war. In peace-time it will be a centre of friendly interest and help in many ways to our young men coming as strangers to London, and will offer, when needed, comfortable sleeping accommodation until more permanent quarters can be found.

In conclusion, I would say to all our lads, look in at Lawrence House when you are in London; it is for you, and you may count upon a hearty welcome.

M. E. Martineau.

ONE OF OUR HEROES.

Peter Stanley Livingstone, H.M.S. Lion.

Peter Stanley Livingstone belongs to Crewe and his name appears on the Roll of Honour of the Unitarian Sunday School. His rank is that of leading seaman, and he wears the Distinguished Service Medal for a brave deed on the Lion, the flagship of Admiral Beattie. After the Dogger Bank action in 1915 the enemy claimed that the Lion had been sunk, but she is still proudly afloat, and Peter Livingstone is one of those who know why. She had been struck, and it was necessary that certain valves should be closed. Two men volunteered for this perilous duty, one for the work for'ard and the other aft. One of those men was Peter Livingstone. He descended a shaft, reached the danger point; toiled in the darkness for three hours; closed the valves single-handed, and returned to report that the work was done. His brave deed had helped to save the ship. We shall always remember him with honour, as one of our heroes.

AMONG OUR SOLDIERS IN THE HOME CAMPS.

It was my high privilege last year to meet some hundreds of the men from our schools stationed in camps in all parts of England. The War Office granted the Missionary Agent of the Association unique opportunities for visiting men of our communion in all the military establishments; the Committee gave me a roving commission to do my utmost in the way of friendly visiting; above a hundred ministers and secretaries sent names and addresses of men from their churches and schools; friends provided generous funds for some simple hospitalities towards the men; Mr. Hawksley made it possible for me to travel in remoter districts where railways were not always available; and in a short time I was away on my journeys as an unconventional chaplain, and I trust as good friend also, to little groups of men and individuals here and there, who everywhere appreciated the fact that their own Church was "looking them up."

No doubt this special number of The Inquirer, with all its messages of goodwill and proud recognition of the splendid services of the men, will meet the eyes of many whose acquaintance I have made, and they must know I yield to no one in that goodwill, in the depth of my feelings towards them for the great thing they have done: foregoing the comforts and decencies and contentment of good homes for the vastly different conditions of the camp—conditions which folk must meet if they would come at the comparison, and then surmise the sterner things beyond.

I once listened to an impassioned address at the foot of a notable war memorial in a Hungarian town by a lady, now the wife of one of our ministers, who compared the sacrifice of the men whose names were inscribed there to the sacrifice of Christ, for they too had died that their country might have life. And to-day we hail those who have passed on, and those who happily are with us, as our saviours in that same good way. Nay, the quiet heroisms and endurance of thousands in our own day light up the records of all other days for us; only that the witness of this hour comes home to us more intimately, for these men are our brethren—we have clasped their hands, and looked into their eyes, and shared to the full with them the measures of this life. All that we have of love and reverence, of home and family, our wives and kindred, old folk and children, the things that are nearest to us, and to which our affections cling most tenderly—they are ours because of you, comrades, and millions like you, who fight for us, not because you would, but because you must, for honour's sake, and the true things that alone make life worth while. And when you come back, on the big day that we are waiting for, we shall try to show you in our own way that we have made old England, if that were possible, better worth the saving than before.

I need hardly recall for some of you the worship we have shared, the social hours spent together—especially you men of the 66th—the lonely talks, heart talks, about our faith and schools and the friends we knew in common in them; the farewells and the greetings; the odd nights in my own home; the coming in of the late night trains, and the departure of the early morning trains—when it was still night and in the depth of winter, too. These are the things in my own mind; and we have not seen the end of them yet. Hundreds more of you I expect to meet as the days go by, either in the field, or at Lawrence House, of which every man, by the way, should make a special note, for no Unitarian, or his friend, once it is opened, need ever pass through the great city without finding a warm welcome and company and a sure lodging in its wilderness.

T. P. Spedding

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

SOME OF OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

Viscount Bryce, O.M., is one of the most distinguished men of his time both as a writer and as a diplomatist, and we are very grateful to him for sending us a special message. Lady Bryce is a daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Ashton of Ford Bank, Didsbury, whose name is still a fragrant memory among us for his large-hearted philanthropy and his devotion to the liberal tradition of our churches.

[The] Rev. Lawrence P. Jacks, D.D., LL.D., is Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, and editor of the Hibbert Journal. He is also a brilliant writer. We recommend our soldier friends who are in search of good reading to try his volume called 'Mad Shepherds'; they will not regret their choice. Dr. Jacks married a daughter of the late Rev. Stopford A. Brooke. He has three sons serving in France, 2nd Lieut. Oliver Jacks, Lieut. Maurice Jacks, and 2nd Lieut. Stopford Jacks.

The Rev. Ambrose N. Blatchford, B.A., closed a long ministry of forty-nine years at Lewin's Mead, Bristol, in 1915. A man greatly honoured and beloved, he has enriched our religious worship with several beautiful hymns. "Softly the silent night falleth from God" has become a great favourite.

The Rev. John C. Ballantyne is the popular minister of the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham. Eager to be up and doing, he is still only at the beginning of a career rich in the promise of stirring activity and good fellowship.

Miss Ruth Drummond is the second daughter of the Editor of The Inquirer and Mrs. W. H. Drummond of Hampstead. She is a student at Bedford College and plays hockey for London University. Her three brothers are all serving their country.

Mrs. Bernard M. Allen has earned a great reputation among us since the outbreak of the war by the work she has put into the Belgian Hospital Fund. She has been prodigal in time, money, and physical strength, and the Fund has succeeded far beyond the most sanguine expectations. Mrs. Allen is a brilliant musician and an Alpine climber. Her husband, Mr. Bernard M. Allen, is the Deputy Education Officer for London.

Mrs. Sydney Martineau is well known as Treasurer of the League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women and as a speaker of persuasive charm. As the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Frederick Nettlefold, she has done much to continue a fine tradition of personal interest in religious work.

John Campbell, M.A., M.D., LL.D., F.R.C.S., is one of the best known and most successful surgeons in Ireland. He has been chairman of the committee of All Souls' Church, Belfast, for many years. He is also deeply attached to the church at Templepatrick, where his father was formerly minister.

The Rev. Arthur W. Fox, M.A., was educated at Cambridge, where he held a classical scholarship at Christ's College, and at Manchester New College, London. Since 1898 he has been minister at Todmorden. Last year he was elected President of the Sunday School Association. His large undenominational classes for Sunday school teachers at Todmorden have been most successful. He is also President of the Manchester Literary Club.

The Rev. J. L. Haigh, of Liverpool, is one of the most successful social workers in our ministry and has rare gifts of sympathy with young men. He has written plays, cantatas, and popular tunes, all as a means of helping his lads to be true men and good citizens.

BOOKS WORTH READING

W. E. ADDIS, M.A. — CHRISTIANITY AND THE ROMAN EMPIRE. Cloth, 2*s.* 6*d.* net; Paper, 1*s.* net.

The Review of Reviews says:—"Mr. Addis's manual is an exceptionally good little work. He deals with many points, and puts many things, people and events in their right places, all within a few pages; and yet the result is a real book, not a mass of notes."

A. N. BLATCHFORD.—LANDMARKS IN RELIGIOUS HISTORY. 1*s.* net.

The Inquirer says: "We commend it to all who realise the supreme value of keeping alive the fire of heroic endeavour."

J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., D.D.—LIFE IN PALESTINE WHEN JESUS LIVED. Revised edition, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

The Schoolmaster, in reviewing the first edition, says: "It does not require to read more than half-a-dozen pages to feel that our attention is not likely to flag during the rest of the volume. The country, people, government, and religion are all discussed in turn—nothing hurried or curtailed, every sub-division given its due share, and the result is a whole upon which the author may fairly be congratulated."

FRANCES E. COOKE, Biographies by:

THEOPHILUS LINDSEY AND HIS FRIENDS. Cloth, 1*s.* net.
THEODORE PARKER. Paper covers, 6d.
WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING. Paper, 6*d.*
ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI. Paper, 6*d.*
DOROTHEA LYNDE DIX. Paper, 6*d.*

JOHN DENDY.—THE LARGER LIFE. A Way through Experience towards the Truth. Cloth, 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

The Challenge says: "We do not know any book fuller than this of the kind of religion that a layman needs . . . It is an excellent book."

JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D.—PAUL: HIS LIFE AND TEACHING. Cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

Introduces the writings and teachings of the Apostle Paul, and especially brings home some of his lofty spiritual ideas.

A. W. FOX, M.A.—TENNYSON'S 'IDYLLS OF THE KING': Six Studies. Cloth, 1*s.* net.

Short Biography of Tennyson. The Coming of Arthur. Gareth and Lynette. Geraint and Enid. The Holy Grail. Guinevere. The Passing of Arthur.

ETIENNE GIRAN.—JESUS OF NAZARETH An Historical and Critical Survey of His Life and Teaching. Translated by E. L. H. Thomas, B.A. Cloth, 2*s.* net.

With this little volume in his hand, the intelligent reader is able to compile from the New Testament an approximately accurate account of the life and teaching of Jesus.

BROOKE HERFORD, D.D.—THE STORY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND. Sixth edition. Cloth, 2*s.* net.

Describes, in a graphic and interesting way, the history of the growth of religious thought and its results from the earliest times to the present day.

K. F. LAWFORD.—STORIES OF THE EARLY ITALIAN MASTERS. With 15 Illustrations. Cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

Cimabue, Giotto, Lorenzo Ghiberti, Paolo Ucello, Donatello, Fra Angelico, Filippo Lippi, Andrea Mantegna, Sandro Botticelli, Perugino, Piero di Cosimo, Leonardo da Vinci, Michael Angelo, Raphael, Titian.

E. R. LEE.—THE PILGRIM FATHERS, their Trials and Adventures. Illustrated by Alice M. Odgers. Cloth, 1*s.* net.

This short account of the Pilgrim Fathers gives some idea of the hardships and trials that faced those who first sought refuge in America from religious persecution

S. H. MELLONE, M.A.—LAWS OF LIFE. An Introduction to the Elements of Ethics. Cloth, 1*s.* net.

LUCKING TAVENER. — LESSONS FROM THE PAINTERS. With 15 Illustrations. Cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

Written in order to show how reproductions of pictures might be used to illustrate ideals and duties.

A. HERMANN THOMAS, M.A.—THE EARLY CHURCH. Its Orders and Institutions. 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

This little volume is a sequel to the manual Christianity and the Roman Empire. Assuming the relations to the State described in that book, it endeavours to delineate in simple terms the complicated phases of the internal growth and organization of the Church.

ALBERT THORNHILL, M.A.—HEROES OF FAITH: From Wiclif to Priestley. With 14 Illustrations. Cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.

People have only to learn the story of the lives of the great Heroes of Faith to be moved with the desire to emulate their noble examples in the field of daily duty.

FRANK WALTERS.—

STUDIES OF SOME OF SHAKSPERE'S PLAYS. Cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.* net.
STUDIES OF SOME OF LONGFELLOW'S POEMS. Cloth, 1*s.* net.
STUDIES OF SOME OF BROWNING'S POEMS. Cloth, 1*s.* net.

London: The Sunday School Association, Essex Hall Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, Cannon Street, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

Directors.

Chairman—Sir Alexander Waldemar Lawrence, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I.

Leslie T. Burnett. | Miss Cecil Gradwell
Humphrey G. Russell.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. Cumberland.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

OLD GOLD AND SILVER JEWELLERY BOUGHT. — Watches, Chains, Rings, Bracelets, Cameo Brooches, Trinkets, Gold Coins, &c., any kind, broken or otherwise. Highest value given. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted parcel returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers, Parr's.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 1*s.* 9*d.* each on silver, 2*s.* 9*d.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

HUCKABACK TOWELLING in bundles of Remnants. Will make six full-size Bedroom Towels, only 6*s.* (postage 6*d.*). Send postcard for Bargain List, free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 5*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1878.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C., and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 3, 1917.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3897. NEW SERIES, No. 1000.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

Library of the PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL FOR THE MINISTRY Berkeley California

SUSTENTATION FUND FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

Secretaries of Congregations not already on the List desiring Grants from this Fund may obtain the needful forms of application by writing, before March 31 next, to :—

The Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND,
Acting Hon. Sec.
23 Cannon Place,
Hampstead, London, N.W.3

N.B.—Secretaries of Congregations already on the List need not apply for forms, as they will be forwarded in due course.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

JUST PUBLISHED.

Fcap. 8vo, 64 pages, cloth, gilt edges with ribbon, 1s. net; paper covers, 3d. net (postage 1d.).

For those who Mourn.

Selections of Prose and Verse for the comfort and inspiration of the bereaved.

Edited by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

For Freedom and Right.

Booklet in Case: Readings, Prayers, Hymns for Men on Active Service.

Price 6*d.* net.

Proceeds of Sales to Social Centre Fund.

ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK, 1917.

Price 1*s.* net; by post, 1*s.* 2*d.*

Book Room, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed ..	£19,500,000

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March.

11. Rev. Dr. CARPENTER, of Manchester College, Oxford.
18. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON of Kentish Town.
25. Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE ATHENÆUM completed with the December Number a series of papers the object of which was to set forth not only the changes made in the direction of our national activities during the War, but also the modifications in thought and outlook. The papers are not primarily concerned with future policy and developments, though they may, perhaps, indicate the lines upon which the future appears to be shaping itself.

The following is the complete List :—

No. 1. The War and Education. By A. G. [September.
„ 2. The War and National Temperance. By H. G. Chancellor, M.P. [September.
„ 3. The War and Women. By M. S. Reeves. [October.
„ 4. Agriculture and the War. By Arthur W. Ashby. [October.
„ 5. The War and Wages. By R. Page Arnot. [November.
„ 6. The War and Labour. By A. G. [November.
„ 7. The War and Wealth. By X. [December.
„ 8. The War and Religion. By H. G. Wood. [December.

Copies of THE ATHENÆUM containing the above may be had price 1*s.* each, by post 1*s.* 1½*d.*, or the papers separately 1*d.* each, by post 1½*d.*, from

The Publisher, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, March 11.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Mr. J. Begg.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. T. Pipe.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 6.30, Supply.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Lieut.-Col. C. S. Bullock; 7, Rev. J. Vint Laughland.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson; 6.30, Rev. Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Mr. J. W. Gale.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. H. Smith.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Supply; 6.30, Mr. John H. Smith.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Dr. Carpenter.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. G. T. Sadler, M.A., LL.B.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Cambridge, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Hargrove, M.A.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. Edgar I. Fripp, B.A.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11. Rev. Harman Taylor, M.R.C.S.; 6.30, Rev. W. Jellie, B.A.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30. Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Matthew R. Scott.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. Jacks.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Wain.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATHS.

Beard.—At Torquay, on March 4, suddenly, James R. Beard, J.P., of Manchester and Hazelfield, Knutsford, in his 75th year.

Coe.—On February 14, at Colehill, Wimborne, Eliza, widow of Clement Coe of Manchester, in her 93rd year.

Greenhalgh.—On March 2, at 105 Avenue Parade, Accrington, Walter Israel Israel Greenhalgh, in his 66th year. Interred at Accrington Cemetery, March 5.

Turner.—On February 20, William, youngest son of the late John Turner of Rosier, Billingshurst, aged 61.

Turner.—On February 27, at 50 Albert Palace Mansions, Battersea Park, Robert Turner, formerly of Ditchling, Hassocks, aged 81.

Worsley.—On March 7, at Rodney Lodge, Clifton, Bristol, Philip John Worsley, aged 82.

Young.—On February 23, at 24 Dennington Park Road, West Hampstead, N.W., the house of his daughter (Mrs. E. H. S. Barnes), William Jeremiah Young, aged 79 years.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 111
THE CALL TO NATIONAL SERVICE . . 113
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 114

CORRESPONDENCE :—
Ministers and National Service 114

MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
The Rev. W. E. Addis 114
Lieut. Edward Vezian Ellis . . . 115

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 116
Ministers of Religion and National Service 116
Mansford Street Church and Mission . 117
Our Special Number 118
Men and Movements 118
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 118

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

WE were obliged to omit several familiar features last week owing to the issue of our Special Number for Soldiers and Sailors, and some of the news which appears to-day is in consequence a little belated. In present circumstances, in view of the severe shortage of paper, no other course was open to us. We have reason to believe that the Special Number has been well received and given pleasure, and we are grateful for expressions of appreciation which have reached us. We hope that it may be possible to repeat the experiment later in the year, but it is impossible to promise anything or to make plans far ahead where printing and paper are concerned.

* * *

THE press has been very hard hit by the new order for the restriction of paper and the severe shortage of labour. Many of the smaller papers and journals will have a hard struggle to survive, and THE INQUIRER is no exception to the rule. However we mean to make a gallant fight for it, and fortunately no immediate change will be necessary. Several of the weekly religious newspapers announce that they are raising their price to twopence. We have already dealt with the question of price, and we cut down our size when the first warnings about the need of economy were issued. May we ask our readers to do all they can to help us during this time of special stress? THE INQUIRER has been published every week for seventy-five years, and is regarded by many people all over the country as an honoured institution of their religious life. If it were worsted in the struggle to survive something else would have to be created to take its place.

* * *

WE regret that no satisfactory announcement about the use and distribution of paper has yet been made by the Government. It saves a good deal of trouble simply to cut off half the supply, and then leave customers to scramble for the remainder in the open market; but it is very unfair. It sends up the price at once to a prohibitive figure and gives the victory to the longest purse. This policy is of course quite consistent with the immediate object, which is restriction of supply; but we believe that the same object can be obtained without dealing a heavy blow to that side of journalism which represents the spiritual and intellectual life of the country. There must be some system of rationing if the big capitalist is not to be left in solitary possession.

* * *

TWO events seem to have hardened the situation in America. The announcement of a German plot in Mexico against the United States at a time when there were open professions of friendship and good will has been the last straw for many wavereis. Information about this plot has been in the hands of President Wilson for some time, and it has now been made public apparently with the definite political purpose of strengthening his position. Of the plot, which miscarried entirely, it need only be said that it was a compound of the base intrigues and the grandiose dreams at the expense of other people, with which the strange breed of German diplomatists has made us familiar. Mexico, for instance, was to have Texas as her share of the booty. Every revelation of this kind only deepens the abhorrence of the spirit against which we are fighting on the part of all decent people.

* * *

THE other event is the success of twelve intransigent members of the United States Senate in giving a temporary check to the President's proposals for arming merchant vessels against German submarines. Their brief and ignoble victory was won not by argument but by talking. Obstinate crankiness on the part of men who think that they are serving the cause of freedom and peace is one of the dangers of democratic institutions. It deprives the machinery of government of public respect and makes it the slave of insignificant minorities. The man who does not know when to yield whether in Parliament or on a committee is unfit to govern. His fussy self-will is simply the negation of freedom for other men to act according to their judgment.

* * *

PRESIDENT WILSON'S inaugural address on Monday, when he assumed office for a second term, was worthy in its noble eloquence of the gravity of the occasion. It may be read in coming days like Lincoln's Inaugural as a great exposition of national duty and the principles of government. After a glance at the special difficulties of their own situation—"We are a composite and a cosmopolitan people. We are of the brood of all the nations at war"—he sketched the tremendous forces which have brought a nation, devoted to peace and desiring nothing that can be had only at the cost of another people, into the vortex of the world's conflict. "We are provincials no longer," he said, "the tragic events of thirty months of vital turmoil through which we have just passed have made us citizens of the world. There can be no back turning. Our own fortunes as a nation are involved, whether we would have it so or not. And yet we are not the less Americans on that account. We shall be the more American if we but remain true to the principles in which we have been bred. They are not the principles of a province or of a single continent. We have known and boasted all along that they were the principles of liberated mankind."

* * *

With the solemn words of aspiration, which follow, our own hearts beat in closest accord. Here are the very things which we have desired most for ourselves. "We are being forced into a new unity amidst the fires now ablaze throughout the world. In their ardent heat we shall, in God's providence, let us hope, be purged of faction and division, purified of errant humours of party and of private interest, and shall stand forth in the days to come with a new dignity of national pride and spirit. Let each man see to it that the dedication is in his own heart, that the high purpose of the nation is in his own mind, that he is ruler of his own will and desire."

* * *

Mr. G. O. Trevelyan has sent to The Times some extracts from a letter by a friend in America "of high academic position, widely respected for his abilities and character." As reflecting the moral idealism on the side of the Allies, which is a growing force in American life, they are of special interest. "The German-Americans," this writer says, "are resigned to the President's action, if not pleased with it. The long campaign against disloyalty has had the result of making them see that policy, if nothing else, counsels them to be acquiescent. Many of them have come to see, too, that Germany is like a fine horse, ridden by a demon-rider; and that its terrible guide must be brought low before civilised life can go on."

* * *

A passage in which Mr. Trevelyan's correspondent describes how the American heart is becoming deeply sensitive to the suffering of our people and the way in which they are bearing it without flinching, will be read everywhere with deep gratitude and appreciation. We may not deserve such warm words o praise, but they bring us no little gladness and encouragement.

> You Englishmen [he writes] are so generous that you may not have thought much of the fact that for a long time American sympathy, as a whole, went out more to France than to you. Within the last three months there has been a great change. The sympathy for France has not lessened, but there has been a great welling up of sympathy for England. One manifestation of it is the desire to do something for the English wounded, for the English orphans, for any good cause in England. But England has gone her fine, proud way—asking nothing, making no complaint, but doing her whole duty without a murmur. Suddenly it has dawned on people here that England, too, is suffering, that this noble strife of hers is tearing her very heartstrings, and drawing upon her every resource. Everywhere I go, not only here among my friends, but out in the State among business and professional men, I am asked, "What can I do for England?" The spirit is there to do many things, if only the avenues were open. Whether England wants this aid or not, it will, I am sure, be gratifying to you to know that the spirit is here. My own great effort is to foster the friendly feeling between the English and the American people. In that friendship only do I see any practical way for the realisation of the widespread desire to attain a permanent peace. I have little hope in leagues to enforce peace, or other artificial devices not founded on the everlasting rock of human nature.

* * *

The new method adopted by the Admiralty of issuing weekly returns of the losses to British shipping by submarines is a great improvement. The accounts which appeared formerly day by day played into the hands of newspapers with an appetite for sensational headlines and kept the public in a state of disordered nerves. We can now see the menace in its true proportions, and while realising its seriousness accept it as an incident in a long battle rather than as a threat of disaster which is new every morning.

* * *

We admire the patience with which Mr. Neville Chamberlain gives interviews to all sorts and conditions of men ranging from the Free Church Council to Sir George Alexander and his actors. He is doing his utmost to overcome hesitation and to make a voluntary system work. But the most momentous announcement this week is that the present campaign for volunteers will come to an end on March 31. We shall be surprised if this is not intended to be a clear foreshadowing of compulsion. We have not concealed our own opinion that it was unlikely that this gigantic scheme of National Service could be made to work without compulsory powers. Any scheme of social organisation is extremely difficult without the force of law behind it, and this is especially so when the people to be persuaded have not been trained in common social action and the time for persuasion is short. We do not say this because we have any liking for compulsion in itself or wish to advocate it except under the whip of necessity. The question before us is that of mobilising the whole force of the nation as quickly as possible in a fight for existence, and we prefer compulsion for a season to lasting defeat and dishonour. Because we are always young for liberty we are willing to submit to some loss of it for ourselves in order that we may preserve it for our children.

* * *

We shall have to keep the claims of the campaign against extravagance constantly before us. It is good news that the first weeks of voluntary rationing have been a success. But can we keep it up? That is the test of our loyalty. The shock of the first stern appeal wears away, and then we are left to the resources of our own common sense and good feeling. Old habits tend to reassert themselves, and the claims of hospitality in public and private. It is just here that we must be vigilant, and never play with the specious argument that occasional transgressions do not matter. May we suggest to our religious societies that they should cease to regard eating and drinking in public as necessary. The Food Controller gave a broad hint the other day that he thought such a policy desirable in the interest of rigid economy.

* * *

On the other side of the account there are still many people whose lives are so well padded with money, and with the comforts and pleasures which money can buy, that they seem quite insensible to the claims of good feeling and decorum. They have been described in a biting phrase as "enjoying the war." We have no personal knowledge of the extravagance and vulgarity, which have been pilloried lately in the Press, but we fear that there is little reason to suppose that the picture is overdrawn. We always suffer from these social parasites of low morals and narrow intelligence; they are the spawn of a wealthy civilisation; but their tawdry insolence in days which are big with the issues of life and death makes us ready to pray that the miseries of the war may strike deeper yet, until they too are scourged.

THE CALL TO NATIONAL SERVICE.

There is no question of graver practical importance for the Churches at the present moment than that of National Service. It affects them in a threefold way.

1. An appeal has been made to the manhood of the nation to volunteer for special work even at the cost of grave personal inconvenience and sacrifice.

2. The Churches have received a request to organise their own resources with a view to liberating as many of their ministers as possible for other work. By leaving the matter to them, at the present stage, the Director of National Service has virtually put the Churches on their honour to do their utmost.

3. There has also been a message to ministers asking them to bring the claims of National Service before their congregations as a matter of urgent personal duty. It is a word which can only be spoken with effect from the pulpit, if ministers themselves show a real eagerness to release some of those who are lusty and strong in their own ranks for the army of volunteers.

Any one who is familiar with the conditions of English religious life will realise that the task is not an easy one. It requires a closer co-operation than has ever been achieved before, and a largeness of mind which does not always exist either in small communities or in strict ecclesiastical circles. Many men of independent judgment and an eager spirit have already offered themselves, and others inspired by their example are pressing forward in their train. But there are signs that many more are likely to be held back by a variety of motives, ranging from the indolence of mind which is chained to familiar habits to a deep and prevailing sense of the imperative claims of their present work.

On this matter there are a few considerations which we wish to lay before our readers. The situation is one, which, above all others we have ever known, calls for bigness and freshness of mind. The times are grave beyond the power of words to express it. We cannot live worthily at the heart of the most awful tragedy of the world's history, and watch it slowly moving forward through the efforts of our friends and brothers to the glory of triumphant good, unless our minds are purged of all pettiness. Already many of the prejudices and controversies of our past lives have disappeared, and we do not want to bring them back, for we know that in spite of the hot passions which they once aroused they have neither power nor blessing in them. But in religious circles such things die hard. Nowhere else is it so easy for the formula to usurp the place of living thought, or for personal suspicions, once they have been aroused, to show an obstinate power of survival. We have an uncomfortable feeling that some of the resolutions on the duty of ministers of religion to national service, which we publish to-day, have not escaped entirely from these dangers and entanglements. We have no wish to be critical, but we doubt whether any body of intelligent citizens would be impressed by their masterful grasp of the situation. They are for the most part the considered utterances of meetings of ministers, who desire to explain to their own people, and to a listening world, what they conceive their duty to be in view of the most rousing challenge which they have ever had to face. But we miss in them the glow of inward fire, the energy of dedication to a great cause, which will arrest the attention of other men and make them confess, "Here is a simplicity and greatness of soul in face of this demand for National Service which puts the rest of us to shame."

Is it that the official view of things has been allowed to dominate a great human situation? The official mind is one of the inward foes against which the Christian minister has to wage a fierce struggle all his life. Its influence is subtle and deadly. It develops into professional standards of conduct and a professional manner of life. It sets him in a class apart, and raises barriers between him and much that is noblest and most interesting in the life of the world. Even in the case of the Protestant Dissenting minister, who has no part nor lot with sacerdotal claims, it creates sometimes a claim to special authority upon matters of faith and morals by virtue of his office, though any real authority he possesses upon these things comes to him because he is a man of large intelligence and fine spiritual gifts. There are times, and this hour of common duty and peril is one of them, when the minister of religion honours his profession most if he lays aside all official claims and ceases to think of himself as one who stands in a class apart. Judged by the ultimate standards of love and sorrow and duty his highest dignity is one which he shares with all his fellow-citizens. He is simply a man, and all human nature belongs to God.

But, after all, this is common ground. We recall it now for fresh emphasis because we believe that our actions in these days can only win nobility and usefulness if we are guided by it, whatever our special calling or profession may be. The distinctions of a highly organised and prosperous society have lost much of their significance. It is the man not the profession that counts, and because the chief glory of the minister of religion is that he also is a man, it is in the light of the broadest human considerations that he must weigh and determine his duty. There is of course no desire to interfere with the essential work of religious institutions, nor even to hinder many of their secondary activities; but it cannot be pleaded that all ministers are so fully occupied in large and absorbing spheres of work that none of them can be spared. Given cordial co-operation, and the will to overcome difficulties, much can be done; and we urge once again that it should be done with all eagerness and dispatch. We have to act now as we should do if the enemy were on our own soil, and only our personal effort could save us from shameful disaster.

We notice in one of the resolutions, which have been sent to us, a warning against the danger to the ministry as a sacred vocation, which may lurk in this call to National Service. We venture to suggest that we must look for the influences which rob the ministry of its sacred bloom not in the calls which come to it from the great world to live the life of suffering and toiling humanity, but in a precisely opposite direction. Everything which tends to mould the ministry into a sacred caste, or encrusts it with an official manner and an official mind, makes it intrinsically secular, though it may still use the most exalted religious language to enforce its claims. For the vice of secularism consists in separation from the whole in devotion to some narrow segment of life. Men fall victims to it both in the Church and in the world, in the counting-house and in the cloister, and the end of it is always separation from the universal life of God. Against that danger we want to guard all men and women whom we can influence, by urging them to break down every sundering habit, which keeps them back from complete service of the whole, or threatens to secularise religion by turning it into an official routine. To yield with a ready will and an eager heart to all the claims of the strange duties of this time is the royal road to exultant faith in God.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

There is one way for thee; but one; inform Thyself of it; pursue it; one way each
Soul hath by which the infinite in reach
Lyeth before him; seek and ye shall find;
....O joy, joy, joy to fill
The day with leagues! go thy way, all things say,
Thou hast thy way to go, thou hast thy day
To live; thou hast thy need of thee to make
In the heart of others; do thy thing; yea, slake
The world's great thirst for yet another man!
And be thou sure of this; no other can
Do for thee that appointed thee of God.

R. W. Dixon.

It is the critical moment that shows the man. So when the crisis is upon you, remember that God, like a trainer of wrestlers, has matched you with a rough and stalwart antagonist. "To what end?" you ask. That you may prove the victor at the Great Games. Yet without toil and sweat this may not be!

Epictetus.

Strengthen me, O God, by the grace of thy holy Spirit. Grant me to be strengthened with might in the inner man, and to empty my heart of all unprofitable care and anguish; not to be drawn away by sundry temporal desires, but to look on all things as passing away, on myself also as soon to pass away with them. Teach me, O Lord, to do thy will; teach me to live worthily and humbly in thy sight. Amen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

MINISTERS OF RELIGION AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—The suggestions respecting National Service submitted to ministers and congregations have evidently provoked thought and activity in various directions. From letters received one gathers that there is already a genuine desire on the part of several ministers and congregations to do everything in their power to assist Mr. Neville Chamberlain in his very difficult and intricate task.

Perhaps the fact that they are only suggestions has been overlooked by a few correspondents; and one is glad to witness a healthy revolt against even the shadow of ecclesiasticism, provided it is not made an excuse for sitting still and doing nothing.

In The Essex Hall Year Book there are the names of 356 ministers; and it is not perhaps unreasonable to expect that from 50 to 100 ministers might be set free for whole-time service; 100 or more for part-time service; 100 or more being now employed at full pressure by their church and public work.

Ministers are being set free by concentration upon one service a Sunday instead of two; by pulpit exchanges and by utilising retired ministers; also by making a larger use of laymen and women in conducting services and attending to pastoral work.

There is apparently general agreement among congregations that the salaries of ministers volunteering for National Service are to be maintained; in some instances a war bonus is being voted to the minister; neither party, one may feel sure, is bent on "profiteering."

The four pioneer preachers now residing at the Hostel have volunteered for whole-time service, simply asking that work may be found for them sufficiently near to enable them to get home at night, and to have their Sundays free for preaching and other religious duties.

In endeavouring to find suitable employment, the wiser plan is for ministers to make use of their own local knowledge or that of the members of their congregations. Several men have already done this with excellent results. In most cases it is practically impossible for the Director-General's office staff to render wise or effective advice to ministers, especially to those who can only give part time.

Where National Service is looked upon as a call to consecration as well as to labour, difficulties have a way of disappearing; and the joy of the work, so the Rev. J. V. Laughland says, puts new heart and hope into one's life as a minister. Joy in service is what is demanded of us all in this hour of grave peril and utmost need in the history of our country. To remain mere passive witnesses of the endurance and sacrifice of others would soon become intolerable to every earnest religious man and woman.—Yours, &c.,

W. Copeland Bowie.

March 6, 1917.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—Mr. Neville Chamberlain has specifically stated that he hopes ministers will not make their offers of National Service locally or through the Labour Exchange, but direct to him and through their denomination. I write this brief note now to ask those of our ministers who contemplate offering themselves to hold their hand for the moment. A Special Conference of the members of the Ministerial Fellowship, which numbers over two hundred of our ministers, is called for Wednesday next in Manchester, and I am hopeful that a lead will then be given to the whole body of our ministers. My intention is to propose that the secretaries of the National Conference, British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and Ministerial Fellowship, in consultation with their presidents (all of whom are ministers), be constituted a Special Committee ad hoc, to receive and transfer all offers of the kind. Mr. Chamberlain recognises ministerial work as vital National Service, but nevertheless hopes that some adjustment of present arrangements may permit of the release of a proportion of ministers, and undertakes that suitable spheres of useful work will be found in such cases.—Yours, &c.,

C. J. Street,

Hon. Sec. The Ministerial Fellowship.
Sheffield.

March 7, 1917.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV. W. E. ADDIS.

As briefly recorded in our issue of February 24 the Rev. W. E. Addis, M.A., died in London on February 20 as the result of a street accident. He was born in Edinburgh in 1844, and educated at Merchiston Castle School. From Glasgow he went to Balliol College, Oxford, as a Snell Exhibitioner, taking a first class in Classical Mods. and in the Final Classical Schools. As a young man he came under the influence of the teaching of Cardinal Newman, with the result that he became a Roman Catholic in 1866 and two years later joined the London Oratory. In 1878 he was appointed parish priest of Sydenham, and continued in that office for ten years when he ceased to be a Roman Catholic. After a short ministry in Melbourne, Australia, as assistant to Dr. Strong, he became minister of the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham. In 1898 he was appointed to the chair of Old Testament Criticism at Manchester College, Oxford, and continued on the staff of the College till 1910, when he was presented by Dr. Hensley Henson to the living of All Saints, Ennismore Gardens, S.W., from which he retired owing to failing health a few months before his death. As a scholar Mr. Addis first came into fame as editor with Thomas Arnold of 'The Catholic Dictionary.' He also published the Documents of the Hexateuch in two volumes; a small and masterly volume on 'Christianity and the Roman Empire'; 'Hebrew Religion and the Rise of Judaism under Ezra'; and a number of articles in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica' and the 'Encyclopedia Biblica.' He was an excellent and stimulating teacher, and many students remember with gratitude the patience and enthusiasm which he threw into the task of overcoming their difficulties. But those who knew him will remember him chiefly as a friend. He was a brilliant conversationalist with a rich fund of reminiscence and anecdote. He kept up the Oxford habit of taking walks, and it was a privilege to spend an afternoon in his company, the goal being a village church which satisfied his passion for architecture while the way was enlivened by discourse both grave and gay, which poured forth in almost ceaseless flow from his richly stored mind. Running through everything was the charm of his personality, brimful of affection, and reflecting in everything he said and did the power of a simple and steadfast Christian faith. With all his learning and his friendships with distinguished men he never forgot the claims upon him of the ignorant and the poor. He had the true pastor's passion for souls.

The funeral service was held at Twickenham Parish Church on Saturday, February 24. In addition to Mrs. Addis and the other family mourners Dr. Hargrove and the Rev. H. Gow attended as representatives of Manchester College, Oxford.

Dr. James Drummond, formerly Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, has sent us the following tribute to his late colleague :—

"Through the death of Mr. Addis a notable figure, perhaps not widely celebrated in the world, but deeply honoured and loved by those who knew him, has passed from among us. My first acquaintance with him was indirect, through the pages of the 'Catholic Dictionary,' in which his learning and his candour were both conspicuous, though he once characteristically remarked to me that one of his articles would have been more candid if the Censor had permitted. The various changes in his thought and his religious associations were a marked feature in his life; but these were not due to instability of mind, but to his earnest longing for satisfying truth, and his willingness, at any personal cost, to follow whatever divine light he was permitted to see. His nature was profoundly religious, and we can hardly doubt that his religious sympathies had some effect on his ecclesiastical movements; but his intellect was too vigorous and his scholarship too wide and exact to allow him to accept Catholic dogma without misgiving. It was my happy fortune to have him as a colleague for several years. It was impossible for any colleague to be more loyal; and when our theological views began to diverge more and more widely, no one could have been more true to the principles of our College, or more faithful to the obligations of his position. Not a cloud ever rested on our friendship. It was not his theology, but his deep Christian spirit, the purity and simplicity of his character, the modesty with which he bore his weight of learning, and the width of his charity, which could see things beautiful and good under other forms than those which he himself adopted, that drew one to him with an absolutely unshaken trust. I am not skilful in dissecting the character of a friend; but with heartfelt love and reverence I would lay this little tribute of honour on the grave of the departed, and follow him with faith and hope into that world of light where, at last, in the unity of the Spirit, we shall see face to face, and know even as we have been known."

With very genuine sorrow the congregation of the High Pavement Chapel learned on Sunday morning, February 25, of the death of their revered friend the Rev. W. E. Addis. At the close of the morning service Chopin's Funeral March was played, and afterwards the congregation remained to pass a resolution of condolence with Mrs. Addis and her family. In the course of a brief memorial address Mr. Ballantyne said :—

"Mr. Addis, I need hardly remind you, was minister of this congregation for a period of six years, preaching here for the first time in March, 1893, and for the last time in June, 1899; and you will also recall the fact that this was the only one of our congregations to which he ministered, for he came here after he had resigned his post in Dr. Strong's church in Australia, and when he bade farewell to you it was to go to Manchester College, Oxford, as tutor in Hebrew and Old Testament Literature. I heard of his work from Dr. Strong himself and others in Melbourne, and knew what an influence for good he had been among the people there, and when at Manchester College I had the honour to study under his guidance, so that I know full well those qualities in him which so endeared him to this congregation. When I visit among you I often hear words of admiration and regard concerning your past ministers, but for none do I hear expressions of more high esteem and more sincere affection than for Mr. Addis. I believe that the words written of him when he left you were abundantly true, that all who came to know him in Nottingham learned to love and respect him; that his ability and learning were equalled only by his kindness of heart; that his sympathy and tenderness, so unobtrusive and yet so real, had lifted the load from many a sorrowful heart; and that he had greatly strengthened and deepened the spiritual life of this congregation."

LIEUT. EDWARD VEZIAN ELLIS.

Last month we had pleasure in recording that the Military Cross had been awarded to Lieut. Edward V. Ellis. Now with deep regret we record that on February 7 he died of wounds received in action the same day. He was born in 1884, and was educated at University College School, London, from 1898 to 1902. Then he had three years' training for the Indian Forest Service at Cooper's Hill, finishing with some months in Germany and France. In 1905 he began work in Burma, chiefly in connection with teak timber. Here he proved his capacity and showed considerable power of initiative in dealing with the problems of the logs and the rivers, and his happy relations with the natives in his employ is illustrated by the fact that for many months recently they have been going daily to their mosque to pray for his safety. He met with an accident which necessitated an operation, and in 1914 came home for a year's leave. He had just reached Marseilles when war was declared. He was at once eager to serve in some capacity. The India Office was reluctant to part with a trained man, but finally yielded to his persistency, and as soon as ever his health permitted he secured a Commission in the Royal Naval Division, which his brother, Bernard, had already joined. His principal military training was on Blandford Down, and from there his Battalion, the Benbow, was sent out to Gallipoli. He went all through the trials of that ill-fated expedition, and when the evacuation came, he had a post of much danger and responsibility, being one of the last to leave, left for a whole day to guard trenches which he knew could not be defended if attacked. His name is mentioned in Sir Ian Hamilton's Dispatch.

The Turks had, however, made their attack one day too soon, and our casualties were one man wounded. But when they reached Mudros our men found waiting there ten great hospital ships ready for what might have been. After a short period of service elsewhere the Royal Naval Division was brought to France, and found war in its most strenuous and grimmest phase. Last November the Division had its first chance of doing great things. Lieut. Ellis was Adjutant to the Howe Battalion, but the casualties among officers on November 13 were so great that he had to undertake much that was not properly his work, and it was his resource and courage in leading bombing parties and taking prisoners that well earned the Military Cross. The whole Battalion received much praise, and as it was being withdrawn from the front line happened to meet the official cinematographer and was filmed as part of the battle of the Ancre. After a short leave in England, Lieut. Ellis was soon back at the front, and it was when returning from an expedition over some recently captured trenches that he and his men had to cross ground that was being heavily shelled. The only cover was shell-holes, and here he was hit in head, foot, and back. He made light of it, and thought he could walk in to the dressing station, but this was impossible. A stretcher conveyed him to the Station, and he died soon after being received there. The Commanding Officer writes: "In his death I deplore not only the death of a brilliant officer but of a personal friend whose integrity was always a source of admiration to me. May you and yours be comforted in the knowledge that I believe your son suffered very little, and that he died so gallantly and nobly." The Chaplain writes: "Your son who, you know, had already won the M.C., was a young man whose courage was an inspiration to the whole battalion, and whose accurate military knowledge and splendid initiative were known to officers and men alike."

A fine soldier, he was also something more. He was a keen Naturalist and specialised on moths and butterflies. He sent home many specimens, including some new to science, from Burma, and continued his pursuit in Gallipoli. His letters home were admirable illustrations of how interesting such communications may be without telling anything to which the censor might object. Most characteristic is it that he was able to retain the natural kindliness of his disposition through the horrors of the war. His soul was polluted by no spirit of hate. After a talk with some German officers in their dugout where they were captured last November, he said in his cheery way, "They were not bad chaps." He recognised good where it could be found, and was prompt to acknowledge it. Another saying lives in the memory of those who heard it. Someone had praised another soldier for doing well in spite of his dislike of war. Edward Ellis rejoined, speaking very gravely and seriously, "We none of us like war."

H. S. S.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

111th List of Subscriptions.	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,303	11	11
Mrs. Russell Rea (second donation)	5	0	0
The Misses Wurtzburg (fifth donation)	0	10	0
Miss H. A. Partridge (second donation)	1	1	0
R. L. (thirteenth donation)	0	10	0
Mr. L. N. Williams (eleventh donation)	1	1	0
Miss Katherine A. Finer (fifth donation)	0	5	0
Miss M. Bruce	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly donation)	1	0	0
Miss Dora Roscoe (fourth donation)	10	0	0
Miss Ada Fricker, Trinidad (thirteenth donation)	2	0	0
	£16,329	18	11

112th List
Highgate Unitarian Church (fifteenth monthly donation)	5	4	0
Westgrove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (twentieth donation)	0	14	0
The Rev. R. Jenkin Jones (fourth donation)	0	10	6
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (eleventh donation)	1	10	8
X. (twenty-fifth donation)	1	0	0
Z. A. (seventeenth donation)	10	0	0
Miss Lucy Colton and the Misses Gillespie (twenty-first donation)	0	7	6
Mrs. Rooke (third donation)	1	0	0
Mrs. Winser (twenty-sixth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. J. E. Mace (fifth donation)	1	10	0
Miss Blake (fourteenth donation)	2	0	0
Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson (fourteenth donation)	25	0	0
	£16,379	15	7

111th List of Parcels.

Parcels have been received from: Mrs. Philip Vizard; Highgate Ladies' Sewing Meeting (per Mrs. Fitzsimmons); Miss K. F. Purdon; Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee; Mrs. Crompton, Adelaide (a case containing 155 new children's garments); Platt Chapel Dorcas Society (per Miss A. Fryer); The Misses Grundy; Miss C. A. Wilkinson; Mrs. Levin; Miss J. C. Jevons; Ilford Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Fyson); Bank Street War Workers' Circle, Bolton (per Mrs. Flower); Mrs. S. Wilson; Mrs. John Mahler; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. V. D. Davis); Mrs. Helsby; Mrs. Varian; Mrs. Wallis; Mrs. Davis; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Trim Street Sewing Society, Bath (per Mrs. Alfred Taylor).

112th List of Parcels.

Parcels have been rec ved from: Miss Aphra Hargrove; Ru and Gilbert Brownson; Mrs. T. lkinson; Miss Lilian M. Stillwell; Mrs Grant; J. S., Plymouth; Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Miss E. M. Buckley); Miss Margaret Ashton; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Ullet Road Sewing Circle, Liverpool (per Mrs. Odgers); Mrs. F. E. Baines; Unitarian Church Sewing Circle, Southport (per Mrs. Harris); Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee; Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, Sewing Meeting (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb); Miss Jolly; Mrs. Murray Macdonald; Mrs. Classon Drummond; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas).

WEEKLY OTE.

The transport of large bales is now so lengthy an affair, the goods often being from four to six weeks en route, that we send all we possibly can of the urgent needs in small parcels. These go by Belgian post free and generally arrive in about three days. Each parcel has, however, to be enclosed in an unbleached calico bag tied round the neck with string. Last week, for instance, thirty such parcels were dispatched, some containing urgently needed instruments, some a few games, some warm comforts, &c. I should be very glad of unbleached calico bags from about 8 by 12 in. up to 14 by 24 in. and any intermediate size, as the parcels, which must all be under 4 lbs., vary considerably in size and shape.

Among the Belgian hospitals in Calais which we have assisted during the last two years was one run by the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry Corps. It was always a great pleasure to help them as they did such splendid work. The nurses, orderlies, cooks and chauffeurs were all English girls, and nowhere were the Belgian wounded better cared for or happier, as the piles of grateful letter testified. This hospital has now been given up, owing to the erection of the large new hut hospital outside Calais. The English staff then offered their services to the French, and they are now installed at Port-à-Binson, near Chalons, where they have a hospital for two hundred French wounded. We felt we could not sever connection with them, so we have decided to continue helping them, although they are no longer nursing Belgians. In fact, we felt that many of our subscribers would welcome the idea of extending our aid to our allies, the French, even in this small way. The coming months are likely to be a time of great stress for the French nation, and this hospital, being only 20 kilometres from the front, has probably some very strenuous work before it, and we shall be glad if by helping to equip it thoroughly we may feel we have had a hand in making that work a little easier.

Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 8 by 12 in. up to 14 by 24 in., and all intermediate sizes.
Pyjamas (urgent).
Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens, helmets.
Pants, vests.
Towels of all sorts.
For the Maternity Home at Calais:—
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).
Chemises for women.
Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

MINISTERS OF RELIGION AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

Mr. Neville Chamberlain has written as follows to the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, Secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, with reference to what ministers of religion may do in promoting National Service:—

National Service Department,
St. Ermin's,
Westminster, S.W.
February 23, 1917.

Dear Mr. Bowie,—I should like to take this opportunity of saying that I attach the very greatest importance to obtaining the goodwill and hearty cooperation of Ministers of Religion in my campaign for National Service Volunteers. Many Ministers are themselves volunteering for one form or another of National Service, but the influence which they can exert over those around them can hardly be over-estimated, and in this time of national need, I am looking to them to use all their powers of persuasion to induce men of the prescribed ages to place their services at the disposal of the State.

The task of organising the national labour supply is one which presents the greatest difficulties, but the more complete the control which I can exercise over all classes of labour, the more effectual will be the result I am able to achieve.

We must not under-rate the difficulty of overcoming our enemy, but if we all put our whole strength into the effort, I am confident that victory will be secured at no very distant date.

Believe me,
Yours very truly,
(Signed) Neville Chamberlain.

The following resolution was passed at a meeting of Manchester ministers on February 22 :—

That this meeting of ministers in the area of the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches, while deeply convinced of the responsibility of all men to render the best national service in their power, feel that their first responsibility is to the moral and spiritual life of the nation and that this demands still the highest service they can render, especially having regard to the withdrawal of the men of their congregations, which leaves the detail work of the churches and Sunday schools increasingly to them, in addition to special urgent pastoral duties arising out of the war ; but they are, where possible, eager to undertake teaching or other suitable work, and in such circumstances they guarantee to each other the continuance of their religious and pastoral duties.

At the Quarterly Meeting of the Executive of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association which was held at the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, on Monday, February 26, it was resolved to send the following resolution on National Service to the secretaries of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and the National Conference : "That this meeting, and the ministers of the district it represents, while deeply sympathising with every effort to win this war, feel that the matter is one for each individual minister and congregation, and deprecate any proposal or recommendation which might possibly reflect upon any minister who does not act in accordance with it. They are, however, of opinion that the work of a minister in connection with his congregation is far more valuable than any labour he is likely to be capable of performing. They also hold most strongly that any money earned by a minister by individual work should be entirely at his disposal, and they trust that no congregation will consider it ought to be paid over to them."

At the Annual Meeting of the Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and Neighbouring Counties held in Birmingham on February 21, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas in the chair, the following resolution was passed :—

That this Annual Meeting of the Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and Neighbouring Counties expresses its eagerness to respond in every practical way to the appeal for National Service, and earnestly commends that appeal to all its members. It especially welcomes the statement of the Director-General to the President of the Midland Christian Union "that ministers are a class apart and only in exceptional cases could they properly undertake to do National Service on the terms and conditions of the ordinary citizen," and also thanks him for his promise to provide facilities for the acceptance of their part-time service.

The following resolution was also passed unanimously :—

That the members of the Meeting heartily endorse the Rev. J. Cyril Flower's protest in The Inquirer and The Christian Life of February 17, being anxious that nothing should be said or done to secularise the conception of the ministerial vocation or to weaken the spiritual influence of the churches so gravely needed in this hour of national crisis.

DECISION OF LONDON MINISTERS.

Ministers present at their regular monthly meeting in February invited the District Society to appoint a sub-committee to confer with a sub-committee of ministers and inquire what was being done in this matter, and offer such help as was possible. Thirty-one ministers in responsible charges were communicated with, and of these it was found that ten had already volunteered, or were about to volunteer, after consultation with their congregations, or committees, whole week-time work under the scheme of National Service. Four others were doing camp work or work on the land in addition to their ministry, and the rest either said or implied that their duties left them no margin of time to offer under the scheme. Six ministers, retired or without charge, were also written to, and these invariably expressed their willingness to assist ministers with congregational charges who felt that they could rightly participate in the scheme. It was found that churches and ministers generally were loath to suspend any of their services. The Joint Committee hopes to be of assistance in arranging "exchanges," so that the services of the churches may be maintained. The Secretary of the committee is the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

MANSFORD STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

The Annual Meeting of Mansford Street Church and Mission was held in Blyth Street Hall, Bethnal Green, on Wednesday, March 7, the chair being taken by the President, Mr. Ronald P. Jones. The reports of the Committee, Church Committee, and Guild were presented by Mr. W. J. Clark. In spite of the unfavourable circumstances under which all similar institutions are compelled to carry on their work at the present time, these reports were of a distinctly encouraging character, and it is noteworthy that, in spite of the inevitable losses due to the war, the membership of the congregation has increased (the number of subscribing members being higher than it has ever been before) ; the Sunday school is in a healthy condition, and all the usual activities, with but few modifications, have been in full working order throughout the year.

The Minister's Report, which was read by the Rev. Gordon Cooper, sounded the same hopeful note, and recorded the fact that the names on the Roll of Honour numbered over a hundred, and the list is still growing. It does not include, however, old scholars, and past members of the Clubs, who are now with the forces. The Provident Bank has had a busy and successful year. During 1916 £1,008 was paid in, compared with £800 in 1915. The number of depositors, too, increased from 761 to 856. Over £120 was collected in the first month of the New Year. Fortunately there has been no distress and unemployment such as the minister has been called upon to relieve in other times, but the high prices have been acutely felt by the old people and those with large families, and many cases have been relieved out of the Poor's Purse. Mr. Cooper paid a warm tribute of gratitude to those who have helped him so faithfully in his work, and to all other friends interested in the Mission, including the students of Manchester College, Oxford, who have rendered many services. He also referred to the pleasant fact that Mansford House, the Convalescent Home at Birchington, is once more available for the use of members and friends of the Mission after the somewhat extensive repairs and redecoration which were found to be necessary when it was given back to them by the War Office.

Mr. A. H, Punnett, Hon. Treasurer, in presenting the Financial Statement, said that the subscription list was the same as it had been in previous years, a fact which was particularly satisfactory at the present time.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the reports and Treasurer's statement, congratulated the minister and officers most cordially on the extremely encouraging outlook. Such progress as they could show could be claimed, he thought, by very few other churches at the present time. Merely to have kept all their activities going was a great achievement, but they had also kept up their subscriptions and increased their church membership. In regard to Mansford House, it was hoped that when the new Lawrence House scheme organised by Essex Hall was in full working order, it would be made known to the sailors and soldiers who visited it—especially men who were on sick leave, or had been discharged from the army—that they would be welcomed at Mansford House if they could spend a little time there. Mr. Jones urged the Mission workers not to be "weary in well-doing," or to think that other forms of work were now of more importance than those to which they were accustomed. There had been a tendency on the part of many people to think that any occupation in which they had been engaged before the war had ceased to be important, and that they must at once undertake other duties for which they were less fitted by training and experience. He, personally, felt that this was wrong, especially when it affected the ministry, and ultimately it made for national inefficiency. The need for ministers and workers of missions to remain at their posts was more urgent than ever, particularly in view of the deterioration, owing to inevitable causes connected with the war, among the young people. It must be remembered that the boys and girls of to-day would be called upon far earlier than would have been the case in other circumstances to take their place in the world, and fulfil their duty to the community, in order to make good the losses we had sustained, and this made the influence of all workers among the younger generation immensely important for the future of the nation. Touching upon the fact that religion at the front was largely a dead letter, in spite of the expectations that had been raised at one time of a religious revival, the chairman emphasised the necessity of preparing to meet the changed views of many of the young men when they came back to ordinary life, and of presenting religious truths to them in a way adapted to the thought and experience of the present rather than of the past. The work of the churches was going to be of greater national importance than ever before, and therefore they must relax none of their efforts, but carry on their preparations for what lay before them after the war.

Mr. Gimson seconded the adoption of the reports.

A vote of thanks to the officers for their work during the past year was proposed by Mr. Osborn Smith, seconded by Mr. Simms. The Rev. W. H. Drummond, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Cooper, which was seconded by Mr. Punnett, spoke earnestly of the deep affection which they all felt for the minister of Mansford Street, and their gratitude for the beautiful work which he and his loyal band of helpers carried on. They did not feel for a single moment that Mr. Cooper was not amply meeting the claim for national service by remaining where he was. The Mansford Street Church and Mission was endeavouring in everything it attempted to reach out to the people who as yet did not belong to a church, in order to bring them in and give them a feeling that here was a religious home where they would find fellowship and peace.

Mr. Cooper, who briefly acknowledged the vote of thanks, said he was particularly glad that once more those who supported him had expressed approval of his work, and endorsed the decision which he arrived at, after great searching of heart, a year ago, that he would remain at Mansford Street, where he felt his duty lay.

A vote of thanks to the chairman, proposed by Mr. J. G. Foster, seconded by Mr. Clark, brought the proceedings to a close.

OUR SPECIAL NUMBER.

Lawrence House dispatched on Friday, March 2, 5,290 copies of the Special Number of The Inquirer to sailors and soldiers connected with our Churches and Sunday schools. The laborious task of addressing the wrappers was done at Essex Hall by a number of ladies associated with the Women's League and the Social Union. The sorting into alphabetical order, so as to eliminate duplicates, was done by the Pioneer Preachers, under the direction of the Rev. T. P. Spedding.

Several hundred names and addresses from ministers and secretaries of congregations arrived too late to be included in the first dispatch. They have been dealt with since, and it is believed that the total number will reach about six thousand copies. Some of the addresses were incomplete, and the post office regulations did not permit of their dispatch, nor was it possible to send copies to prisoners of war in Germany.

Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C., the originator of the Lawrence House Hostel and Social Centre, has written warmly acknowledging the service which The Inquirer has rendered in issuing a special number for the encouragement and inspiration of our men in the army and navy. He hopes that the experiment may be repeated a few months later.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

It is with deep regret that we have received the news of the death of Mr J. R. Beard at Torquay last Sunday. He was the bearer of an honoured name in our churches, and himself added to its lustre by his enthusiasm for their work and message. He was the friend of every good cause among them twenty years ago till illness laid him aside. He was President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association 1890-91. We hope to give a fuller account of his career next week.

Among the new knights mentioned in the recent list of honours conferred by the King, our readers may have noticed the name of Daniel Thomas Tudor, Esq., K.C., Chief Justice of the Bahamas. Sir D. T. Tudor is a nephew of the late Mr. W. D. Jeremy of Thurlow Road, Hampstead, who was for many years Treasurer of the Presbyterian Board and a Dr. Williams's Trustee, and a Bencher of Gray's Inn. He will be pleasantly remembered in the Rosslyn Hill Congregation, of which Church he was formerly a member, by many old friends who will desire to offer him their congratulations on the honour which has now been conferred upon him.

In the notice of Mr. Warren's interesting lecture at Nottingham in our issue of February 24 by a printer's error a hundred years is taken from the history of the High Pavement Sunday School. It was founded by the Rev. James Tayler soon after the commencement of his ministry at Nottingham (1804). The Rev. James Tayler was father of the Rev. John James Tayler, and also father of the wife of the Rev. Benjamin Carpenter, another minister of the High Pavement Chapel.

We understand that the Rev. J. C. Flower, of Bolton, who sent us an interesting letter recently on the claims of religious work at the present time, has himself volunteered for National Service.

We are informed that the Jubilee of the Rev. H. E. Dowson as minister of Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, will be celebrated on Sunday, April 22, not on the 15th as announced in our Special Number.

Capt. L. N. B. Odgers, M.C., was wounded for the third time on September 17, when a piece of shell lodged in his left arm close to the shoulder. He is now in the London Hospital and we are delighted to hear doing well, though it may be some time before he can return to active service.

Lieut.-Col. Bullock is to preach at Unity Church, Islington, at the morning service on March 11.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Accrington.—The Oxford Street Church has sustained another loss in the death of Walter Israel Greenhalgh, one of its old and faithful members, who passed away in his 66th year, on Friday, March 2, at his residence, 105 Avenue Parade. Mr. Greenhalgh was the second son of Frederic and Hannah Greenhalgh, who were among the few founders of the Oxford Street Church. He became attached to the Church and school in his childhood, and remained a member and supporter to his death. He leaves to mourn his loss a widow, four daughters and one son; also three brothers, Mr. Frederic Greenhalgh and Dr. Arthur Greenhalgh, both of Accrington, and Dr. Handel Greenhalgh of Bury. The interment took place at the Accrington cemetery on Monday, March 5, the Rev. J. I. Jones, of Bolton, officiating.

Belfast.—The following resolution was adopted unanimously at the Annual Meeting of the congregation of All Souls' Church, which was held on Tuesday, February 27, on the motion of the minister, the Rev. E. H. Pickering, seconded by Mr. Adam Millin, secretary of the congregation: "That we, the members of the Second Congregation, Belfast (All Souls' Church). in meeting assembled, pledge ourselves to support the requirements of the Food Controller, also to conform with any calls—so far as in our power—that may be made by the Minister of National Service."

Bootle.—The sinking of the Auxiliary Cruiser "Laurentic" involved the death of Walter Lloyd, a highly esteemed member of the Bootle Free Church. The last cruise of the ship extended over many months, and he longed for home. Only a few weeks ago he had his wish granted, and his friends had the pleasure of seeing him at Church. Now, in his 24th year, his life has been sacrificed like that of so many others who have served their country in her hour of need. Much sympathy will be felt for his widowed mother.

Bristol.—Lewin's Mead Chapel has lost an old and attached member in the death of Mr. H. S. Bunce ("Shapcott Wensley"), which took place on Thursday, March 1. Though in indifferent health for some time past, he attended, as recently as November last, meetings of the Raleigh Debating Society and the Lewin's Mead Meeting

Elocution and Literary Society, the welfare of which he always had at heart. He has been one of the mainstays in connection with both societies for years. His life was bound up with Lewin's Mead Chapel and all its associations from childhood. He was a prolific writer of poetry, cantatas and operettas, while his hymns have found their way into the worship of many churches. He wrote, too, many beautiful hymns for children, specially used at Sunday school anniversary services at Lewin's Mead Chapel. His old school in the Croft (of which he was a feoffee) is indebted to his pen for its school song, 'Old Bristol,' sung everywhere by old boys of the school. The Old Boys' Society song, too, is his, and is likely to retain its popularity as long as an Old Croft Schoolboy lives.

Chesham : Bury.—On Sunday, February 25, a Commemoration Service was held at the Chesham Unitarian Church, when the Roll of Honour of Chesham scholars was unveiled. A crowded congregation had assembled, and representatives of most of the families of the soldiers were present. Special hymns were sung, and the anthem, 'Like as a father,' was rendered by the choir. The address was given by the minister, and dealt with the inner motives of the soldiers engaged in the present war. Important as a choice might be, he said, the motive behind it was more important, and while to choose to suffer and die might be the act of a weakling, to choose to suffer and die for some great cause of justice and freedom was worthy of praise and honour. Three things were to be remembered which were borne out by quotations from the writings of men in the trenches: 1. the soldier lived not by the power of the great machine, but by fellowship in a moral idea or purpose....and by the might of unseen forces of justice, kindness, and humility; 2. the soldier hated war, and only because they believed that they might end for ever the system which had made this war possible had their lads gone out; 3. the soldier had no bitterness towards the enemy, and the spirit with which they regarded the men opposite to them in the mud was very different from that which characterised some of those who vied with each other in sowing seeds of hatred between the common peoples. In conclusion Mr. Lee appealed to his hearers not to leave everything to the politicians, nor by selfishness and jealousy, hatred or careless indifference to weaken the forces by which the world hastens to its goal, and the kingdoms of man may become the kingdoms of righteousness and peace and joy. After the address Councillor T. Rigby named the eight scholars who had died: William Orrell, William Currie, Wilfred Rigby, David Currie, Thomas Wilson, John Leach, Alfred Ryan, and Robert Nuttall. Two, Stanley Bracewell and Eric Parkinson, were missing. There were 64 names on the roll, and 28 names would be added to a subsequent one. The inscription and illumination of the names had been commenced by Bombardier Martineau Stott, and completed by Albert Mitchinson. Mr. Isaac Chadwick was responsible for the framing of the roll. Mr. Robert Jackson performed the unveiling ceremony, making a few appropriate remarks. After the speeches the audience joined in a few moments of silent prayer for the absent ones.

Colne.—The Annual Meeting of the members of Stanley Street Unitarian Church, preceded by a tea, was held in the schoolroom on Saturday, February 24, Councillor J. W. Hird presiding. The reports of the Secretary, Treasurer, Brotherly Fund, Envelope Offertory, Soldiers' Parcel Fund, and Sunday school were read and approved. Despite the calls of the country, removals, and deaths, the attendances show a very slight decrease on the previous year. Twenty-seven names are inscribed on the Roll of Honour, while several others will soon be added, and one has made the supreme sacrifice. New Hymn Books have been brought into use during the year, these being the gift of a generous member. The financial condition of the Church has also been much improved, the balance-sheet showing that a deficit of over £16 has been cleared off, and the year ended with a balance in hand. The debt in connection with the Renovation and Repairs account has been reduced by £65, while small improvements and additions have been made. The President, in the course of his address, gave a hearty welcome to seven new members. Officers and committee were thanked for their services and with few exceptions re-elected, and arrangements were made for a special effort to reduce the debt.

Derby.—The Order devised by the Empress of Russia for the decoration of those ladies and gentlemen in these islands who have been mainly instrumental in organising movements in British towns in aid of the Russian wounded, has just been conferred upon Mrs. Albert Green (the ex-Mayoress) and Mrs. George, the wife of the minister of Friar Gate Chapel. These two ladies were the chief organisers of the Russian Flag Day in Derby, which resulted in over £268 being collected for the endowment of a bed in the London Committee's Anglo-Russian Hospital at Petrograd. The award was presented in the Mayor's Parlour on March 1, together with a certificate from the Imperial Court.

Dover.—In connection with the Unitarian Church Guild a "Dickens" evening was held in the schoolroom on Monday evening, March 5. Mrs. Ginever (who organised it) gave an interesting address on the works of Dickens, following which portions of his books were read by a number of friends. There was a good attendance, and all heartily enjoyed this first literary meeting of the year.

Dundee.—On Sunday, February 25, the following resolution was passed by the members of the Free Religious Movement: "This meeting, realising the gross economic waste and moral damage caused by drink, and the imminent danger of a serious shortage of food, regards the proposed restrictions on the trade in alcohol as insufficient, and urgently demands the immediate and entire prohibition of their manufacture and sale." It was further resolved: "This meeting condemns the granting of licences as a social injustice, and the taking of revenue from this source as a national iniquity." Copies of the above were sent to the Prime Minister and the local members of Parliament, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, and Mr. Alexander Wilkie.

Ilford.—A conference of East London churches (Unitarian and Liberal Christian) was held at the Unitarian Church, Ilford, on Saturday, February 24. There were good attendances, representatives being present from Stratford, Forest Gate, Leytonstone, Walthamstow, &c. A devotional service was conducted in the afternoon by the Rev. W. H. Drummond, who preached on the text, "Be still, and know that I am God." The choir, led by Mr. J. Coote, with Mr. T. H. Bartlett at the organ, rendered an anthem, and Miss Dorothy Syer, gold medallist, M.A.M., contributed a sacred solo. Tea was provided in the schoolroom by the Ilford Branch of the British League of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women, and a conference occupied the evening from six till close upon nine o'clock. The Rev. A. H. Biggs presided, and offered a hearty welcome to the visiting representatives, explaining that the meeting was called to consider problems relating to the churches, "now and after the war.', Mr. E. R. Fyson, president of the London and South Eastern Provincial Assembly, spoke on 'Ecclesiastical and Theological Divisions'; Mr. J. Kinsman on 'Religion and Industry,' and Mr. J. W. Peterken, president of the London Lay Preachers' Union, on 'The Type of Preaching necessary after the War.' The open discussion was started by the Rev. J. A. Pearson, London District Minister, and among those who took part were Messrs. Rosling, Begg, and Smith, pioneer preachers; Mr. Willis, Stratford; Nurse Knight, Forest Gate; Mr. S. Field, Barking; Mr. Chas. Syer, Mr. J. Coote, and others.

Liverpool : Ullet Road Church.—The Ullet Road Church Calendar contains an interesting passage recording the courage and heroism shown by one of the members of the congregation—Capt. W. J. Haughton—under circumstances of deadly peril a few months ago. At that time "Capt. Haughton was serving as chief officer on the liner, the 'City of Birmingham,' when that vessel was torpedoed by a submarine. Under the captain's direction the passengers and crew had been assiduous in carrying out boat-drill practice, the wearing of a life-jacket, &c., and this enabled them to show the utmost calmness and bravery when the ship was struck; but it was the captain's intrepidity and coolness which gave courage to all. He remained at his post until every boat was fully manned and got away, and then he sank with the ship. Luckily he was not drawn down to a very great depth but rose to the surface. He remembers passing from the blackness of the deep water to the bright green nearer the surface, and then rising to the light of day. He was rescued by one of the boats after having clung for half an hour to a deal plank from the wreckage. He was instrumental in saving the lives of more than three hundred persons. And in spite of the threat of our enemy to sink without warning any vessel which attempts to cross a certain area around the British Isles, Capt. Haughton is now engaged in taking another ship through the danger zone. Honour to those to whom honour is due!"

Midland Ministers' Meeting.—Seven meetings have been held during the year 1916-17, at the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, Oldbury, Evesham, Kingswood, Coseley, Coventry, and the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. There has been a further improvement in the attendance of members. A service was held at Evesham, when the preacher was the Rev. Lawrence Clare. Papers were read or addresses were delivered at the six other meetings, viz., at the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, by the Rev. R. J. Campbell on 'With our Troops in France'; at Oldbury by Dr. J. Rendel Harris on 'God and the Soul in the Songs of Tagore'; at Kingswood by the Rev. G. H. Smith on 'What are things that matter most in the present Crisis?'; at Coseley by the Rev. Glyn Evans on 'Religious Work at the Front and its possible After-Effects'; at Coventry by the Rev. Dr. Dakin on 'The Holy Spirit in the Church and the World'; and at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, by Prof. E. A. Sonnenschein on 'Sir Oliver Lodge's "Raymond."'

Mossley.—A Service of Recognition and Consecration of new members of the Unitarian Church was held on Sunday evening, February 25. The new members numbered forty-six. Among those welcomed into fellowship by the minister, the Rev. C. E. Reed, who had prepared the young people, were sixteen young men and twenty-two young women, and eight adults. Three young men and one adult were admitted in their absence with H.M. Forces.

Nantwich.—With the present year a branch of the League of Young Worshippers with a Young Disciples Section was started at the Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street. Recently a meeting of members was held to transact business and present certificates of membership. Badges and brooches were also awarded to twenty-one members who had attended evening service during six successive Sundays. The following committee of management was appointed: president, the minister, the Rev. J. Park Davies; secretary, Mr. George Davenport; treasurer, Miss Betsy Ormes; other members, Miss Sarah Butler, Miss Beattie Bebbington, and Mr. Tom Robinson. The pleasure of the evening was added to by the kindness of Mrs. Park Davies in providing light refreshments.

The North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association.—The quarterly meeting of the Executive took place in the Council Room at the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, on Monday, February 26. Several members, including the hon. treasurer, Mr. Royce, were absent through illness, and others (including Mr. Harrop White, the president) could not attend owing to pressure of business. It was decided to proceed no further with the new Literature Distribution scheme in the meantime. It was resolved to abandon the plan of pulpit exchanges on "North Midland Association Sunday," March 11, leaving churches to make the best possible arrangements locally; and a resolution was also passed suspending the publication of the 'North Midland Circular' until the close of the war. The lack of workers, the increase in railway fares, the difficulties of travel in these days, and the high prices of commodities, of paper, printing, &c., easily explain all these decisions. Obvious reasons also lie at the back of the fourth resolution to delegate the whole business of the Association to a small "war committee" until the next annual meeting. This was felt by some good democrats to be unconstitutional in the extreme, but ultimately all submitted with the good grace of the modern Britisher, who sees his ancient rights one by one disappear. The usual annual applications for grants were considered, and the response in every case was as liberal as funds would allow. A vote of sympathy with Mrs. W. E. Addis on the loss of her husband, who had for a number of years acted as a member of this Executive, was carried in silence.

The North Midland Sunday School Association.—The usual quarterly meeting was held on Monday, February 26, in the High Pavement Chapel Council Room, Nottingham. It was decided to abandon the usual Easter meetings, which had been arranged to take place at Loughborough; the business of the Association was delegated to a sub-committee consisting of the office-bearers until the close of the war, and the office bearers for 1916 were appointed to serve for another year. In place of the late Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Cyril Dunford was appointed auditor.

Nottingham.—On Tuesday, February 27, the annual meeting of the Lang Buckland Mission to the Blind was held at Christ Church, the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne occupying the chair in the absence of the president. Mr. J. C. Warren. The first annual Report was presented by Miss M. Kirk, secretary, It stated that good progress had been made, and that in most of the directions contemplated at the inauguration of the society a year ago the work had at least been launched. The visiting had prospered well. There were seven ladies visiting in fourteen homes, the policy being to put only a few blind persons on the list and to be sure they were regularly visited. Two most enjoyable outings had been conducted which the blind guests much appreciated. The library now contained a number of books of deep interest to workers among the blind. The grave of the Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland had been tended by members of the Mission in turn, and Miss Buckland had erected a simple marble cross with a suitable inscription. The lecture promised by Mr. Ballantyne, on 'The Life and Work of Mr. Buckland,' had been given at the High Pavement Chapel on Saturday, January 13, when a number of members of the Mission were present. The treasurer (Miss I. Colton) submitted a satisfactory statement of accounts, which showed a balance in hand. The Society has undertaken to have Mr. Ballantyne's lecture printed as a pamphlet.

Pudsey.—A cordial welcome was given to the Rev. Richard Newell, who has just become the minister of the Unitarian Church, at a meeting held on Saturday, February 17. After tea, which was largely attended, Mr. Richard Berry, the Church President, took the chair, and on behalf of the committee and congregation welcomed Mr. Newell. They were passing through a very critical period, he said, and were being tried as by fire, but there were golden opportunities for the church in the near future, and under the leadership of their pastor and friend they hoped to embrace and develop those opportunities. Reference was made to the enforced absence of the secretary, Mr. Ernest Binks, through ill-health, and apologies for absence were read from ministers in the district and other friends. Mr. I. Noble, Sunday School Superintendent, and Miss Laura Stansfield, membership secretary, also welcomed Mr. Newell, and the Rev. W. R. Shanks, of Bradford, Secretary of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, and Mr. G. E. Verity, on behalf of that body, and as an old member of the church, spoke in cordial terms. The Rev. F. Coleman, of Hunslet, and the Rev. A. Cobden Smith, of Holbeck, on behalf of the Sunday School Union and the Unitarian Ministers' Meeting respectively, and other speakers, added expressions of hearty sympathy and fellowship. Mr. Newell, in the course of a brief reply, said that the gospel of Christ was the power of God unto salvation; it was what the world most needed, but it must be presented in a practical, workable way, so that it might be what it was intended to be, and it must be backed up by character exhibited by the members of that and all churches.

Sheffield.—The Rev. A. H. Dolphin has resigned the pulpit at Unity Church having accepted an invitation to become the minister of the Unitarian Church at Lewisham.

Stepney.—A Dedication and Reconsecration Service took place last Sunday at College Chapel, conducted by the Rev. J. Vint Laughland, of Unity Church, Islington, and by Mr. Walter M. Long, the minister of College Chapel, when new members, who had already signed the roll, were welcomed. The Rev. J. Vint Laughland, in his address, spoke impressively of the need of preparation beforehand for the battle of life, day by day and week by week, and the strength gained by meeting for worship and for mutual encouragement in noble thoughts and deeds. Mr. Long then presented ten certificates of membership, and welcomed the members into fellowship.

"Safety First."

The public is gradually being educated, by means of posters and advertisements in tube railways, &c., in the art of avoiding risks to life or limb in getting into or alighting from an omnibus. The London "Safety First" Council which is assisting the London General Omnibus Company in this work has offered a prize of £5 for the best couplet descriptive of its objects. In addition to this, parodies of familiar nursery rhymes with up-to-date meanings are being published in the press, a notion which will surely attract the children. The following is a specimen of what the Council has been able to accomplish—and we may commend the motive if we cannot admit the correctness of the rhymes:—

So, children, when you'd take a risk
Remember, that you oughtn't.
It's nice to race a motor-bus,
But Safety's more important.

Children on Farms.

The Board of Education has just issued a summary of returns supplied by Local Education Authorities of children excused from school for employment in agriculture on October 16, 1916, from which we learn that the total for England is 14,915—13,823 boys and 1,092 girls, ranging from 11 to 14 years. The largest number of schoolboys exempted from attendance for the purpose of agricultural employment belong to Yorkshire (1,322), Norfolk (957), and Lincolnshire (908); the largest number of girls to Lincolnshire (177), West Yorks (147), and Worcestershire (110). In the whole of Wales and Monmouthshire only 420 boys and 66 girls up to 14 years of age were exempted.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

MERCERISED DRESS LINEN for Overalls, 27 inches wide, 12 yards bundle, 9*s.* 9*d.* (postage 6*d.*). Colours: Wedgwood Saxe, Rose Pink; one colour only in bundle. Bargain List free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any kind. Up to 7*s.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 12*s.* on silver, 15*s.* on gold; 2*l.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 1*s.* 9*d.* each on silver, 2*s.* 9*d.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 5*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 10, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
THE UNIVERSITY
Berkeley California

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3898.
NEW SERIES, No. 1001.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

SUSTENTATION FUND FOR THE AUGMENTATION OF MINISTERS' STIPENDS.

Secretaries of Congregations not already on the List desiring Grants from this Fund may obtain the needful forms of application by writing, before March 31 next, to :—

The Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND,
Acting Hon. Sec.
23 Cannon Place,
Hampstead, London, N.W.3

N.B.—Secretaries of Congregations already on the List need not apply for forms, as they will be forwarded in due course.

WINIFRED HOUSE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL HOME, Wray Crescent, Tollington Park.—The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at the Home on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, at 5 o'clock. Mrs. Munro, Secretary Invalid Children's Aid Association, will preside. The House will be open to visitors at 4.30 P.M. Fifteen minutes' walk from Finsbury Park and Holloway Tube Stations.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March.

18. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON of Kentish Town.
25. Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE MARCH ISSUE INCLUDE

The Conflict of Ideals

Prospects in English Literature

The Nature of "Shell-Shock"

Short Story: 'The Mothers'

Industrial Reconstruction: An Employer's View

Reviews

Scholastic Appointments, etc.

Monthly, 1s.; Annual Subscription, 14s. post free.

Published at "The Athenæum" Office,
11 Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

SPECIAL NUMBER FOR SAILORS & SOLDIERS.

A Few Copies of "The Inquirer" for March 3, containing Special Articles and Illustrations, can still be obtained, price 1½d., by post 2d., from the Office,

13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS,
CHANCERY LANE, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress Miss LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL
ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, March 18.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. T. Pipe.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. Frank G. Fincham; 6.30, Mr. J. Begg.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. Vint Laughland; 7, Mr. J. Harvey Lewis.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Mr. J. P. Rosling; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Mr. C. Sheridan Stevens, R.G.A.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. H. O. Montague.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. John Begg; 6.30, Mr. J. P. Rosling.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. C. Hargrove, D.Litt.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Davis.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. N. Anderton, B.A.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. W. Copeland Bowie.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. J. E. Jenkins.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30 Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. John Hinkins, M.A.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. Carpenter.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Wain.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

Terry—Hall.—On March 12, 1867, at Brixton Unitarian Church, by the Rev. T. L. Marshall, John Terry to Victoria Treacher Hall. Present residence, 8 Hopton Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

DEATH.

Fallows.—On March 6, at Southfield Villas, Middlesborough, Annie Fallows, aged 85, last surviving daughter of the late William Fallows.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 *Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.*4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 123

THE HEALING OF RELIGIOUS DIFFERENCES 125

GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 126

CORRESPONDENCE :—
Ministers of Religion and National Service 126

MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
Mr. Philip John Worsley 127
Mr. James R. Beard 127
Mr. Walter Cliff 128
Major-General Jacob 128

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 128

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 128
Liverpool District Missionary Association 129
The Midland Christian Union . . . 130
The Ministerial Fellowship 130
French Domestic Life 131

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 131

NOTES AND JOTTINGS 132

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE stir on the Western Front is naturally filling us all with keen expectation. Things are going none too well for the enemy, and the armies of liberation are pushing their way forward. But this is only the beginning. The next few months are likely to be among the most exciting in history. They will expose us all to severe strain and many personal sorrows. We must meet whatever share may fall to our own lot with a high heart and a cheerful courage, if we are to be worthy of the splendid fellows who are fighting for us, and of the cause which they serve.

* * *

THE capture of Bagdad is certainly the most picturesque event which has happened in the war, and should send many people who want some cheerful reading in dark hours back to the 'Arabian Nights.' It may only be of secondary importance from the strictly military point of view; but the wise soldier knows that his strategy needs the support of far-reaching political reactions, and nowhere is this more true than in the Near East. We have always hoped that this war would not only put an end to the rule of the Turk in Europe, but also awaken enslaved peoples from their lethargy. With the breath of freedom the genius of Islam may become once again a significant factor in the higher life of the world.

* * *

THE Dardanelles Report has been seized upon greedily by the type of journalist who flourishes exceedingly when he gets a good opening for abusing public men. For ourselves, along with a very large number of quiet and we hope quite sensible people, we cannot understand why the Report was published at all, at such an inopportune moment and in its present truncated form. Partizanship will be satisfied, but some of our Allies may wonder and grieve, while men of a judicial mind will simply suspend judgment. We have not got the evidence, and the conclusions are those of men certainly no less fallible and with no greater competence in public affairs than the leaders whom they citicise. The death of Lord Kitchener, and the consequent impossibility of obtaining his evidence, have limited the inquiry, and no doubt made his friends honourably silent about some things, where they may not have agreed with his policy or his highly individual methods of work.

* * *

THESE points are recognised by the members of the Commission with a fairness of mind, which may be commended to the attention of those who are inclined to exploit certain passages in the Report in the interest of their own opinions.

> We trust [they say] that we have given so full a summary of the somewhat involved events which have formed the subject of our inquiry, that any member of the public who reads this report will be able to draw his own conclusions. Those conlcusions, it may be anticipated with some confidence, will vary. The facts, indeed, are such that no one, who approaches the subject in a thoroughly judicial spirit, will be inclined to dogmatise about them. Notably there is wide room for difference of opinion as to the relative degree of responsibility, as also to the amount of praise or blame which may reasonably be assigned to the principal authorities and Departments concerned.

* * *

PERHAPS we could have no better indication of the necessary absorption of the country in its one supreme task than its feeble interest in public questions, which at other times would be felt to be of the first magnitude. The Irish problem, with all its entanglements and bitterness, is overshadowed by the fate of the Empire and the world. Outside Lancashire the new policy in regard to the Indian cotton duties has been met with acquiescence instead of stormy debate. But the moral of all this seems to us to be that the Government must be very careful not to count on this mood, and allow itself to bring forward contentious business which has no clear connection with the successful prosecution of the war. The policy of no discussion lest we should break up our national unity or put the Government out of office requires great self-restraint on both sides. The argument against giving reasons because the war makes it undesirable for the Government to do so, is one which must be used as seldom as possible in a democratic country.

We fear that there is a growing feeling in the country that all is not well with the scheme for National Service. The practical man is beginning to ask whether anything effective has been done and what is its value to the country. No one with any acquaintance with the enormous difficulties of Mr. Neville Chamberlain's task will be impatient; but possibly a certain amount of emotional force has been lost by a little too much hurry in the matter of public appeals before the machinery for dealing with volunteers was quite ready. We are glad to see that a special form for ministers of religion has been issued this week. This will clear the way for many men who are anxious to serve as effectively as possible, and in their lack of skill in any of the specified trades were genuinely perplexed about their duty.

* * *

An important Conference of ministers of religion, called by the National Council for Combating Venereal Diseases, was held in London last week. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who presided, said that in fighting this evil the two agencies, medical and ecclesiastical, must co-operate. He looked to the meeting to increase knowledge and stimulate enthusiasm in dealing with a form of evil the magnitude of which was now, for the first time in English life, and perhaps in the life of any nation, realised, and the urgency of which was simply incalculable. Most of them, he acknowledged, had been woefully, perhaps culpably, ignorant of the details of this terrible matter. Subsequently Sir Thomas Barlow laid stress upon bad housing as a fruitful source of moral degradation, and spoke very seriously of the bad tone among quite young girls in many of the munition factories.

* * *

The work of religion in this connection is of the utmost importance, and it will require courage and resource to overcome the difficulties which no wise man will under-rate. Among the chief of these must be reckoned a certain bewilderment in the minds of ministers themselves, as they move among problems about which they have little special knowledge and where their books and intellectual equipment can give them little guidance. Some attention should undoubtedly be paid to it in their years of training, but for effective work we must look to the men who have the wisdom of experience, and for them we think that some special course of study under the guidance of qualified teachers, conferences with welfare workers, and the courage not to break down reticence but to deal with the matter gravely on suitable occasions when religious people meet to plan their work and to take counsel together, are among the methods which might be employed. If there is plague in our midst, we must grapple with it and use all our influence not only to put the young and thoughtless on their guard, but also to create that high respect for purity and noble living in the public mind, which alone can stamp it out.

* * *

A good deal is said from time to time about the future of the German Colonies, and some people are fond of urging that they ought to be given back when peace is declared, as we did not go to war to rob Germany of any of her territory. May we recommend our readers in general, and these people in particular, to read a small book on 'Germany's Lost Colonial Empire' which has just been written by Mr. John H. Harris, the Organising Secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society (Simpkin, Marshall, 1*s.* net). No one who knows Mr. Harris and the spirit in which he has carried on his great work for native races will accuse him of being influenced by militarist prejudices, but it would be hard to find a more telling argument than his against giving back any of her colonies in the tropics to Germany. It is a case where people with little knowledge of the facts, and trying to solve complicated human problems by the logic of abstract ideals, may go fatally astray.

* * *

Mr. Harris approaches the whole subject from the point of view not of European politics but of the interest of the native, though he cannot, of course, ignore the fact that there are cogent reasons, both local and imperial, against any policy of restoration. He points out that Germany's attempt at a colonial empire has been a complete failure. She appropriated vast territories with a view to finding an outlet for her surplus population, and her settlers for obvious reasons go elsewhere. The whole grandiose scheme of a colonial empire was badly conceived and has ended in failure. "This disillusionment," Mr. Harris says, "was beyond question one of the main causes of that political irritability which for the last five to ten years has characterised Germany's outlook and has kept Europe on the edge of the precipice."

* * *

But meanwhile Germany has been in possession of vast territories and she has used them simply as labour colonies where the native must be made, by all necessary methods of frightfulness, to toil for his white master. "The German attitude towards the native is that of the overlord, who regards the African and Polynesian races, not merely as subject peoples, but that the only object of their being in the world at all is that they should be hewers of wood and drawers of water for their taskmasters." The result has been a hideous story of oppression and extermination. The native population has dwindled away in its misery or has been systematically done to death, and in Germany itself there has been a growing feeling of exasperation as the failure both in the political and the economic sphere has become more and more apparent. As one candid writer puts it: "We tried to assume to ourselves the functions of Providence, and we tried to exterminate a native race, whom our lack of wisdom had goaded into rebellion. We succeeded in breaking up the native tribes, but we have not yet succeeded in creating a new Germany."

* * *

Whatever the future of Germany may be as a colonising power, it is clear that any legitimate elements which there may be in her dream of expansion can only be satisfied in temperate lands. In the tropics she has only shown a capacity for enslaving the people not for governing them. We have the highest reasons of humanity for refusing to restore any of her colonial victims when the war is over. Their appeal to us is contained in the words of a native of Togoland addressed to Mr. Harris last year: "The Lord has hearkened unto our cry, and we are for ever saved from the clutches of the German Eagle. Do fight for us that Togoland may never be given back to the Germans! Where shall we be, we who hate the Germans so much? Let their coming back be impossible....We are in the hands of the British Government, let us remain where we are...."

* * *

At the Annual Meeting of the Midland Christian Union at Birmingham on Monday Mr. Arthur Chamberlain spoke hopefully of the future relations between Capital and Labour. He took the view that Capital was earning enough but not too much, while Labour was receiving too small a sum to enable people to live in health and happiness. He thought that the way out was to be found in increased output for which Capital must pay Labour at full rates, while the trade unions would have to remove all the restrictions on output which existed to-day, and would have to encourage production to the utmost. The difficulty lay in getting Capital to realise the error of its ways and in getting Labour to believe in the genuineness of Capital's repentance.

THE HEALING OF RELIGIOUS DIFFERENCES.

We heard the other day of an incident, which illustrates the new way in which familiar religious differences are regarded by men who have been drawn close together by the comradeship of duty and danger. At a certain town in France a popular officer had died. At his funeral three chaplains, Anglican, Roman Catholic and Nonconformist, walked at the head of the procession, and the Roman Catholic priest and the Nonconformist minister, looking over the same prayer book, led the responses in the Anglican service. Probably none of the three men had ceased to be tenacious of his own opinions. Theological differences and ecclesiastical divisions have not crumbled into dust under the spell of this and countless other acts of brotherly kindness. But who can doubt that a new spirit is working in the hearts of men, which is giving fresh prominence to things which were once too lightly esteemed, and depressing others, which have long stood first in the eyes of religious disputants, into a position of inferior importance?

We are not among those who wish to indulge in prophecy about the effect of the war upon religion. We are far more conscious of the testing of our familiar habits in faith and worship, than of any clear vision of the forms of thought and ritual which are likely to survive. We are toiling in the darkness, at the foundations of the temple of God's love and praise, which our children's children may see in its beauty.

With aching hands and bleeding feet
We dig and heap, lay stone on stone;
We bear the burden and the heat
Of the long day, and wish 'twere done.
Not till the hours of light return,
All we have built do we discern.

But even now we are beginning to see, dimly it may be but yet with strong spiritual assurance, that men are drawing together just on those things about which there has never been any kind of dispute among Christians. It is not that we have come to some temporary agreement to live on some lowest common measure of faith for the sake of national unity in the face of the enemy. We do really feel that the love and goodness, which Christians of every sect and of no sect at all cherish as an ideal and seek to embody in their lives, are the deepest and most precious things in our experience. No doctrine, however satisfying to our own intelligence, no form of ritual, however helpful to our own religious need, has such power to bring us into fellowship with other men and make us one with the love of God as noble generosity of hand and heart, the courage of unselfishness, and the life spent in doing good.

All this sounds very simple, and yet to countless hearts it is coming as a glad discovery. It is an experiment in a larger kind of religious fellowship than they have ever known before. They are beginning to touch other lives, which once seemed alien to their own, just at the point where they are most sensitive to affection and most open to the joys of comradeship. As they enter more deeply into the entrancing human interest of it all many other aspects of religion may seem to be forgotten for the moment; but this need not give rise to any anxiety as though we were in danger of sacrificing the emotional and intellectual life of Christendom to some scheme of practical duty divorced from the vision of God. The truth is that the theologians and the ecclesiastics have lorded it over us too long, and Christianity will suffer neither in its thought nor its worship if it gives all its strength for a season to the pure passion of goodness, as it did in the days when it won its greatest triumphs.

Differences must always exist in a world that is alive, for they spring naturally from the varieties of temperament and tradition. They become an injury to religion when they fester into intolerance and make the citizens of the spiritual commonwealth into strangers and antagonists. But the teaching of history and the plain human needs of this time should convince us that there is neither peace for divided hearts nor healing for our wounds to be found in any formula, nor even in the recognition of common elements of goodness in our fellow-Christians as a pleasant fact, but one which after all is only of minor importance for religion. Goodness, the Christian character in its purity and beneficence, will accept no divided allegiance at our hands. As soon as we put it in a position of secondary importance religion loses its healing and uniting power.

As we watch the growth of this new sense of comradeship among men who are brave and true of heart, as we overhear many of them who have the gift of expression confess that this is for them the essential thing in religion and the best evidence they can have of the presence of God in their lives, we are full of hope for the future. That the effect of this spirit will be revolutionary we fully expect; for there is much both in our religious practices and our theological schools which has become stale and unprofitable and is ready to die. But instead of following these dim paths of speculation let us fix our eyes upon our own duty, and consider the temper in which we should foster this new spirit of harmony in the community to which we ourselves belong. The best contribution which any man can make to the healing of the wounds of religious difference at the present time is to be found in the effort to make the fellowship of all good men a beautiful and effective thing in the small segment of the religious world, his own church and denomination, where his influence can be most effective. As we look back into the past we are conscious of differences of thought and policy which have been allowed to harden us into narrow partisans, of rivalries which have weakened common efforts for the good of men, of many failures to distinguish clearly between obstinacy of mind and loyalty to principle, of controversies which have come dangerously near to being quarrels; and as we look into our own hearts many of us have to confess that we have had far too little of the religious magnanimity which lives, not in these things, but above them. Seldom has such a golden opportunity been given to men of escaping from these toils of their own past. If common duties have not given a new touch of intimate comradeship to all our work, and common sufferings made us wondrous kind, of what use is it to us that this day of visitation has come to try our hearts? In the fellowship of goodness we are closer to one another than we ever knew before. As for the differences and controversies of the past, some of them we remember calmly and rationally as matters about which sensible men may disagree without estrangement. But there are others which have gone down into the grave, and we do not want even to place a stone to guard their memory or to mark their resting place, for in them there was some root of bitterness which destroyed the noble fellowship of good men, and we do well in rising above them to leave them behind.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

Children of men! the unseen Power, whose eye
For ever doth accompany mankind,
Hath look'd on no religion scornfully
That men did ever find.

Which has not taught weak wills how much they can?
Which has not fall'n on the dry heart like rain?
Which has not cried to sunk, self-weary man:
Thou must be born again?

Children of men! not that your age excel
In pride of life the ages of your sires,
But that ye think clear, feel deep, bear fruit well
The Friend of man desires.

Matthew Arnold.

To live well differs from living extravagantly: for the first comes from moderation and a sufficiency and good order and propriety and frugality; but the other comes from intemperance and luxury and want of order and want of propriety. And the end (the consequenee) of the one is true praise, but of the other blame. If then you wish to live well, do not seek to be commended for profuse expenditure. Epictetus.

Lord God of Humanity, whose hidden purposes are being worked out in the bitter conflicts of the nations; we pray Thee for steadfastness and courage in the trials and dangers of our country defending the Right and upholding Freedom. Teach us daily to place national interests before self-will and private prejudice; to encourage hope and to spread cheerfulness, in ourselves and our neighbours; to wait without impatience; to endure without complaint; to trust our leaders; to honour our soldiers and sailors, both those who have died and those who are ready any day to die, for their friends and for Thee. So may our spirit be worthy of our responsibilities, our dangers and our ideals; and deny us not the Light of Thy Presence and the Comfort of Thy Love as we pray that Thy Kingdom may come nearer, and Thy will be done on earth even as it is in Heaven.

Amen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

MINISTERS OF RELIGION AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—With the broad outlook raised by yourself editorially and with Mr. Bowie's letter in the current number of your journal I imagine most, if not all, of the saner ministers in our body will be in real sympathetic accord. There is a real call to National Service, and one aspect of that call for ministers, as for other men, is secular, not simply religious service. Most of us, I hope, believe that this principle is sound and incontrovertible; there is a real genuine urgent need for national secular service on the part of our ministers. But I confess that I feel not a little apprehension lest the other part of our clear and unmistakable duty to our nation be forgotten, and I emphasise the other part so that no one shall accuse me of wishing to avoid, in my own person or that of other ministers, our secular share of national service. But the secular side is not all that is required of clergymen and ministers at the present time. There is another aspect more difficult to fulfil, and, I am convinced, of the two the more urgent.

At present there is a policy of silence,—I do not wish to raise the issue whether it is a wise policy or not,—in regard to the darker character side of the war, both as regards men and women, old and young, but chiefly the young of both sexes. It may or it may not be right to avoid all mention of evils that are patent to any intelligent man or woman who uses his or her eyes and is not blinded by the gross inaccuracies of our daily press. But I maintain if we are silent we ought not to be negligent, and we ought to clearly realise that while toleration is a grand and noble word, supineness and apathy are ignominious and contemptible.

When you, sir, state that "everything which tends to mould the ministry into a sacred caste....makes it intrinsically secular" I am in complete agreement, but this is true only if the minister has no real spirituality. It does not apply to one who preserves the outward unobtrusive observances of his calling and inwardly is a man who sees the spiritual in everything, and though, of course, a man like other men, tries to carry this spiritual outlook into all his daily life and keep this same spiritual outlook to the fore in social life. Now, it is just here where it seems to me ministers, and the clergy generally, have failed, not merely now but still more definitely in pre-war times. There is a spiritual side of sex, "the lower or cottage ideal," even if this ideal can sometimes be realised in a dwelling larger than a cottage; there is a spiritual side of motherhood and fatherhood and a spiritual relation of the child to the parent, and there has been far too much unpleasant accentuation of the physical side of sex in both of these relationships, often by teachers quite incompetent to teach the truly sublime wonders of science on this wonderful relation. There is a spiritual side to patriotism, not the patriotism that wishes us to be the first empire in the world, but one that can quicken us by honestly teaching our great traditions. The word Providence has still a real meaning to those who take the pains to study social and biographical history sincerely, and our moral consciences of truth and of goodness are still realities of our souls and the whole spiritual outlook, which we neglected before the war and neglect now, would take us back to a great trust and hope in God.

I find little or nothing of this in our life to-day. Divorce, immorality, marriage, duties of parentage, living a natural life, are coming to be thought of as medical and legal problems, while duties and sins and unselfish affections are spoken of less and less. Here is what I would consider the other call to ministers and clergymen, the call to spiritualise our pulpits, to make people feel the sanctities of life because we feel them ourselves and have thought them out; and if we could give some of our time to bring an influence in munition areas, where thousands of young girls and lads are exposed to all kinds of coarsening influences, we could be of real value.

Parliamentary activities are of some importance as regards such grave problems as alcohol, immoral diseases, and other social evils, and the lower grade of medical science teaching, which appeals to the coward in us all by pointing to terrifying consequences, may be of some utility also; but what is wanted is not the unhealthy dwelling on the unhealthy and evil aspects of life, nor the revival of childish superstitions that we all ought to be heartily ashamed of, but the higher reaches of the life sciences, which, by disclosing the grandeur of living, come near to and support the religious purposes that can quicken life.

If we remember the one side of our national service, the secular side, let us not forget the other, to which we have devoted our lives, unless we are indeed hypocrites; and may we not say that for this spiritual call the war is asking, nay demanding, from us not less but far more of the teaching and practice that is sincerely Christian, that makes us see the real grandeur of living, in spite, perhaps even because of its present tragedies? Science is no foe to the sublime; it is only its inferior votaries, like mere commonplace religious teachers, who get such impressions. To see the spiritual in nature and to see through nature to God, this is our calling's mission and our country's need.

In the call for the one service, the secular, the material need, let us not forget the other upon which the very justification and hope of humanity must ultimately rest.—Yours, &c.,

J. Lionel Tayler.

March 10, 1917.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. PHILIP JOHN WORSLEY.

By the death of Mr. Philip John Worsley at Clifton on March 7, in his 83rd year, our community loses another of those high-minded laymen whose purity of character and devotion to the public good are the ripe fruits of their religion. His father, the eldest of three brothers, had early come under the influence of Dr. Lant Carpenter at Bristol, and after his settlement in London had joined the congregation of Essex Street Chapel, where the ministry of the venerated Thomas Madge planted the first lessons of the Gospel in the heart of the young Philip John. Educated at the University College School, he passed in his 16th year into the College, where he was a fellow-student with Mr. Alfred Wills, George Du Maurier, Henry Russell Greg, Vernon Darbishire, Rupert Potter, and James Kitson (afterwards Lord Airedale). Visits to relatives in France, and a period of study at the University of Freiburg with the intention of becoming a metallurgist, helped to broaden the culture of his College days, and awakened the love of travel which was one of his chief recreations in later years. He finally devoted himself to the chemical industry, which was then rapidly developing, and joined the Netham Chemical Works, near Bristol, afterwards incorporated in the United Alkali Company, of which he became a director. His conspicuous business ability led naturally to his association with some other Bristol enterprises.

Happy in his home life by his marriage with his cousin Miss Taylor of Starston, in 1861, he found time to take part in the varied institutions connected with the fine old Lewin's Mead Meeting, and his aid was increasingly sought in the educational activities of the City. His religious faith was the deepest force in his character, veiled, indeed, by a natural reserve of expression, and a sensitive shrinking from display, but none the less clearly the guide of his conduct and the centre of his interests. He was proud to tell his children that through him and their mother they could claim descent from four of the ejected ministers of 1662, John Meadows, Benjamin Fairfax, Nathaniel Fairfax, and George Hughes. To this inheritance of Nonconformist principle he was always faithful. The Schools and Domestic Mission connected with Lewin's Mead never claimed his help in vain; he was intimately acquainted with our congregations and ministers in the West of England; and he brought valuable judgment and advice during many years to the board of Managers of the Sustentation Fund.

A rare and beautiful modesty withheld him from seeking public office, but the development of Board School work soon drew him into active labour, and in 1875 he was formally identified with the Liberal party as President of the Anchor Society. A seat on the magistrates' bench followed, where his patience and impartiality were quickly recognised. When University College was founded he was a member of the governing body, which included Mr. Jowett, then Master of Balliol, Dr. Percival (now Bishop of Hereford), and other distinguished men, and he was for many years vice-chairman. The elevation of the College into a University for Bristol commanded his warm support, and he became an honoured member of its Council. As Chairman of the Charity Trustees he superintended various schools connected with that body, the Bristol Grammar School, Queen Elizabeth's Hospital, and the Red Maids' School; and as Chairman of the Trustees of the Red Lodge Reformatory, founded by Mary Carpenter, he brought it into a state of the highest efficiency.

Declining strength in his latter years involved withdrawal from much of this public work, and he turned with enjoyment to the books and garden in which he had always found peaceful refreshment. Advancing age did not debar him from sharing in public worship, and till a very few weeks before his death he was regularly in his accustomed place in the Oakfield Road Church, Clifton. The tall and slender figure moving with quiet composure, the fair complexion and hair hardly touched with silver, the mellow voice through which the deeps of a strong self-controlled nature found such gentle but definite expression, will long live in the memory of his friends. Happy are the sons and daughters to whom he was bound by such tender affection. As he passes from us along the upward way farewell is merged in faith, Lætabitur justus in Domino. J. E. C.

The funeral took place on Saturday, when the service, conducted by the Rev. Dr. Beckh and the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor of Exeter, was held at Oakfield Road Church, Clifton. There was a very large attendance of relations and friends. Several deputations were also present representing the University and the public and business life of Bristol.

MR. JAMES R. BEARD.

If all the friends and admirers of Mr. James Beard were to record their deep regard for his memory, The Inquirer would overflow with tributes as affectionate as they would certainly be sincere. It is true that during more recent years his health has not allowed the generous affluence of busy intercourse which so long and fruitfully filled the period of his vigour; and in the meantime many of those who were most closely associated with him in good works have preceded him into the Beyond. But happily, he had the gift of drawing younger men to himself, and there are many who will long cherish his name among those of their best helpers and inspirers. It was not, indeed, his part to emulate the academic labours of his father, Dr. John Beard, or to rival the scholarly eloquence of his brother, Dr. Charles Beard. But as a business man he filled a place fully worthy of such eminent kindred, and in his own way he served his generation as diligently, and perhaps as effectually, as they. His influence, no doubt, chiefly lay in the Manchester district, though it was by no means limited to that circle. His sympathies, like his knowledge of men and movements, were widespread, and as occasion served he took a share in efforts far remote from his beloved Lancashire and Cheshire. But it was there more than elsewhere that his kindly voice and hand were most familiar, his wise foresight most displayed, and his persuasive appeals most successful. There is no space at our disposal to enter upon any detailed account of his share in that valiant missionary enterprise which a quarter of a century ago distinguished the Manchester group. Later, his zealous interest in the Home Missionary College was equally warm, and contributed towards an apparently more abiding success. It is known to many of his former correspondents in different parts of the country how deeply he entered into matters of debate which at one time threatened the denomination with disastrous schism. Mr. Beard frankly stood by the definitely "Unitarian" standard, but like all the wiser men he was studious to find the way of tolerant union among the various types of thought in our Churches. It is pleasant to recall that in the background to all his public work there lay, not only that gracious home-life and professional integrity which formed the staple of his life, but also the taste for literature and original expression which one happy day took even his friends by surprise in the publication of a volume of verses, kindly, humorous, thoughtful. The surprise, however, could not last long. When we recalled the real temper of the man we knew and with whom we shared the prose of toil, we felt that—as in so many cases—the goodness and constancy of his life were rooted in habitual love of the best and truest and most beautiful.

On Sunday last at Knutsford the Rev. G. A. Payne referred to the sad loss which the congregation had suffered in the following terms:—

Though we cannot help feeling sad that we are to see him no more in the flesh, there is nothing to lament. He was in his 75th year, and had suffered many serious illnesses. We all have sympathy deep and profound for Mrs. Beard and the members of the family in the sad and sudden loss they have sustained, but for him there can be no vain regrets. He believed in no Day of Judgment. As he expressed it himself, in a few lines:—

> The Priesthood say,
> "Fear Judgment Day,
> God's justice own and laud it."
> The soul replies, "'Tis every day
> God holds his audit."

He had done his work, and he did it conscientiously. In his younger days he was a most strenuous worker in all kinds of ways, and by means of many philanthropic agencies. As a kind and sympathetic and generous friend we shall remember him, as one who had unbounded faith in God, and tried to live a God-like life. Retiring from the larger life of Manchester he came among us in 1899, and for the past eighteen years he has shown a deep interest in our little chapel, its institutions, and its members. We all loved him, and felt for him the deepest possible respect and esteem.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire on Tuesday, March 13, the following resolution was passed :—

"That we have received with the deepest regret the news of the death of Mr. James R. Beard, and desire to express to the bereaved widow and family our sincere sympathy with them in their loss.

"That we further place on record our grateful recognition of the valued services rendered by Mr. Beard to our churches, and especially to the Provincial Assembly, of which he was a life-long member and a past President, serving also, up to the time of his death, on the Advisory and General Committees. That we would finally bear testimony in abiding and affectionate remembrance to his kindly nature, his high character and his earnest devotion at all times to the welfare of his fellow men."

MR. WALTER CLIFF.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Walter Cliff, which occurred on March 1, at his residence at Melbourne Hall, Melbourne, near York, after an illness of two or three weeks. For many years Mr. Cliff, who formerly resided at Western Flatts, Wortley, was one of the best known and most respected citizens of Leeds, and his interests and influence in political, civil, agricultural, commercial, and sporting life have been widespread, and always directed towards the encouragement and maintenance of the highest standard and traditions. His charitable contributions have been on a liberal scale, and many of the most worthy institutions in Leeds have benefited by them.

In public life Mr. Cliff was a Justice of the Peace of the East Riding of Yorkshire, and took an active part in connection with recruiting and Special Constabulary work. He was for many years chairman of the Bramley Guardians, and took an active part in the work of the Board and the Assessment Committee. His interests in commercial life were large and varied, and together with his brothers he was the owner of extensive iron and steel works. His personal work was mainly connected with a colliery, of which he retained active management. He also carried on, with the help of a manager, some refreshment rooms, a hotel, and a café, not for personal profit, but from a desire to practically demonstrate what it was possible to do in providing for the people who used them satisfactory accommodation and food at low cost. He was keenly interested in the question of feeding necessitous school children. Before this became a part of the duties of the Local Education Authority, he paid out of his own pocket a considerable sum for the daily feeding of a number of such children from Wortley.

Preaching at Mill Hill Chapel on the Sunday following Mr. Cliff's death, the Rev. A. Cobden Smith made an appropriate reference to the loss which the chapel had sustained through the sad event, reminding the congregation that, until Mr. Cliff took up his residence at Melbourne Hall, he was a regular attender at their services, and still remained a seat-holder and a generous subscriber to the chapel and its institutions. The interment took place at New Wortley Cemetery on Monday, March 5, in the presence of a large and representative gathering. The Rev. A. Cobden Smith officiated.

MAJOR-GENERAL JACOB.

We are indebted to The Exeter Express and Echo for the following account of the career of Major-General Jacob, whose death on March 8 at the age of 79 will be a severe loss to the Abbey Chapel, Tavistock :—He was the second son of the late Lieut.-Col. W. Jacob, Bombay Artillery, and in 1861 married Eliza, daughter of the Rev. G. A. Jacob, Teignmouth. He entered the army in 1855, served in the Indian Mutiny, 1858, (for which he received medal with clasp) ; in the Afghan War, 1880-81 (dispatches and medal) ; was promoted to the rank of Major-General in 1894, and placed on the retired list in 1897. In Tavistock, where he came to live after his retirement, he was very highly respected and much esteemed in the town, for the poor inhabitants of which he had great sympathy, and he was ever ready to lend them a helping hand, frequently rendering financial aid to deserving cases. He was especially generous to the Abbey Chapel, to which he was greatly attached, and where, on his severing his connection with the Church of England, he was a devout and constant worshipper. He leaves a widow, two sons—Col. Arthur Jacob (India) and General Sir Claude Jacob (France)—and two daughters, Mrs. Colbourne (who is in Canada), and Mrs. Ash-King, the latter being at Brooklands with her mother, Mrs. Jacob.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Cambridge University Press.—Science and the Nation: Essays by Cambridge Graduates, with an Introduction by the Right Hon. Lord Moulton, K.C.B., F.R.S. Edited by A. C. Seward, F.R.S. 5*s.* net.

Messrs. Constable & Co.—Permanent Values in Education: Kenneth Richmond. 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—The Cycle of Spring: Sir Rabindranath Tagore. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

Messrs. G. P. Putnams Sons.—The Growth of a Legend: Fernand Van Langenhove. 5*s.* net. Jesus and The Christian Religion: Francis A. Henry. 15*s.* net.

Messrs. Stevens & Sons, Ltd.—Defensively Armed Merchant Ships and Submarine Warfare: A. Pearce Higgins, M.A., LL.D. 1*s.* net.

Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.—Germany's Lost Colonial Empire: John Harris. 1*s.* net.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—Charles Lister. Letters and Recollections, with a Memoir by his Father, Lord Ribblesdale. 12*s.* 6*d.* net.

Miscellaneous.

Cornhill Magazine, The Round Table.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium ; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais ; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

113th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,379	15	7
Miss Mary E. Swaine (twenty-third donation)	2	0	0
Miss J. Partridge (fifth donation)	5	0	0
A. J. A., Deal (twenty-fifth donation)	0	5	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (sixteenth donation)	1	0	0
Anonymous	5	0	0
Miss Frieda Speller, money earned by invalid girl by embroidery (third donation)	1	0	0
Mr. F. Maddison (twenty-fourth donation)	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Chitty (thirty-second donation) ..	4	0	0
Mrs. Sidney Martineau (third donation)	25	0	0
Mrs. Roscoe (fifteenth donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Aspland (sixth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. Geo. Banks (twenty-sixth donation)	1	0	0
Miss S. J. Gregg (nineteenth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Fred. F. Perris (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Miss C. Harrold (ninth donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. Schultz (fifth donation)	1	1	0
	£16,453	11	7

Parcels have been received from : Redlynch House Work Depot (per Mrs. Robinson) ; The St. Helen's Unitarian Girls' Sewing Circle (per Mrs. Fryer) ; Miss Short ; Mrs. Manning Prentice ; Mr. E. Cook ; Mrs. Comyns Carr ; Miss Evelegh ; Mrs. Hanna ; Miss Lee ; Miss Hervey ; Mrs. R. Roscoe ; Mrs. and Miss Cook ; Mrs. F. Perrot ; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb) ; Anon., Elstree ; Mrs. Keating ; Mrs. Henry Woodall ; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. V. D. Davis), 2 parcels ; Miss Green ; Epsom Sewing Society (per Mrs. James Thorneley) ; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas) ; The Girls at "Farringtons," Chislehurst.

WEEKLY NOTES.

We hear good accounts of the Calais hut. The Commandant writing recently says : "We were glad to see Miss Holmes back, looking much better for her holiday in England. We have always more than seven hundred dinners a day to serve—I need not tell you that it is not always easy for me to find sufficient quantities of food for this number of men. We have just passed through a very hard time. The frost has been really terrible, but since yesterday things are better. We have begun the English classes and we have over sixty pupils already. There are also French and Flemish classes and a class of the illiterate."

These classes have been planned since the opening of the hut, and it was arranged to use the reading and writing room for this purpose. But this turned out to be impossible, as the number of men using it was so great that the room could not be spared. It also became necessary to have a room for the orchestra to practise and the dramatic society to rehearse in. The profits made in the first three or four months permitted the erection of an annexe especially for this purpose, and after the usual delays (due to the fact that the manual work is done by the army, and they are constantly being called off for more important work for the army) the room was completed about Christmas time, and has proved an immense boon. We were always anxious that the Hut should be something more than a place where the men could be well and cheaply fed and excellently entertained. This educational effort crowns the work.

Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 8 by 12 in. up to 14 by 24 in., and all intermediate sizes.
Pyjamas (urgent).
Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.
Mufflers, cardigans, mittens, helmets.
Pants, vests.
Towels of all sorts.
For the Maternity Home at Calais :—
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).
Chemises for women.
Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the Association was held at Ullet Road Church last Saturday afternoon, with the President, Mr. A. S. Thew, in the chair. Supporting the chairman were the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, and Mr. G. G. Armstrong, representing respectively the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and the Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire. The report of the past year's work was of a most interesting and encouraging character. A tribute of esteem was paid to the Rev. C. Craddock, who has retired from the active ministry, and a welcome accorded to the Rev. J. Horace Short, who has recently settled as minister at St. Helen's. Appreciative reference was made to Major Burroughs, the Lay Secretary, Lieut. Roberts, the minister-at-large, and Second Lieut. Short, the minister of Bootle, and the hope was expressed that they might soon return safe and sound. Sympathetic reference was also made to those friends who have been wounded or have died as the result of the war, and to those who have suffered the loss of relatives and friends, or are in grievous anxiety concerning loved ones. The large debt which had hampered the Association for some time has been completely liquidated, and the year ended with a substantial balance in hand. Garston Church had been temporarily closed, except for the Sunday School, while St. Helen's had started on its new stage of development with bright prospects of success. The Assisted Churches at Crewe, Bootle, and West Kirby were holding their own, notwithstanding the difficult war conditions, and throughout the Liverpool District there was evidence that the cause of a Free Christianity is possessed of abounding vitality. Early in the year a Lay Preachers' Union was established, and it has done remarkably good work. Its members comprise 24 men and 3 women, who have conducted 134 services, of which 7 were for other religious bodies than our own. The Council had not "found themselves in full agreement with those who say that the present war period lays upon all one duty, and one only, that, namely, of bringing the war to a successful conclusion. In common with all, they recognise that duty to be imperative; but they feel that it is not by any means the only duty implied in the situation. The duty to the present is impressed upon us daily and hourly from all sides, and, whether in material or spiritual aspects, is not to be neglected. But your Council feel that there is a duty and responsibility to the future and for the future which also must be faced in the present, and this they have sought not to overlook. In this respect the necessity for sincere, sane and strong religious life and effort is not less but greater than ever it was, and a free, spiritual faith, resting on realisation of God in man, and man in God, and inspiring to brotherhood in all human relationships, is a national asset of the first importance, in times of strain and stress to be cultivated and cared for with exceptional zeal, and made adequate not only for present emergencies, but also for the Gospel and message of the churches in days to come when the labour of rebuilding a shattered civilisation will have to be undertaken." The Monthly Conferences arranged for the winter months have been of great value, and have been met by an unqualified appreciation; and a series of sermons is to be preached synchronously in most of the churches this spring on 'The Message of a Free Faith to a World in Travail.' The Missionary Sub-Committee has other suggestions to bring forward in due course, for it believes "that a bold programme of public effort based broadly and comprehensively would have a far-reaching influence which would react favourably upon the life and activity of our own churches."

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Report, said, from a long experience of Annual Meetings he could not remember a more interesting and encouraging Report. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant, in seconding, emphasised the value of the Association's declared aim, namely, the strengthening of the sense of denominational fellowship and corporate unity amongst the membership of the churches. It was rare to find a note like that. If there be any spark of manliness in our heart now is the time for it to burn clearly. Ours is the duty to hearten those around us who seem to have lost faith. Sympathy is the starting-point from which may be rebuilt the religious life. Religion has not failed; but the failure has been with irreligion—neglect of the law of God and of divine service. Conditions for religious effort in Liverpool were favourable, where there was a rich and inspiring heritage of pulpit and civic work. To-day we need an overpowering compulsion to be our best and to do our best.

A resolution was moved by the Chairman, and seconded by Mr. C. Sydney Jones, expressing a warm and affectionate appreciation of the helpful and sympathetic comradeship of the Rev. J. C. Odgers, who, after a long ministry at Ullet Road Church, is retiring from the active ministry next June. Over a considerable period Mr. Odgers had served the Association in the capacity of President, and had done very much towards unifying the churches in common sympathy and aims. He has been everybody's friend, and especially has his genial companionship and counsel been valuable in association with his brother ministers. He leaves behind him an influence and a memory which will endear him to all who knew him as long as life lasts. A more coveted memorial than that no man can wish for. Mr. Odgers replied in feeling terms, saying both he and Mrs. Odgers would find it very difficult to break the many tender ties which bound them to Liverpool; and he hoped that after a period of much needed rest he should be able to render some assistance to the churches of our denomination and to the cause of free religion.

A hearty vote of thanks was passed to the retiring president, whose devotion and geniality have gained the esteem and affection of all his associates in private and public life. The burden of his many years of active life rests lightly upon him, and his friends trust that for many years to come he may move amongst them with his characteristic cheerfulness and belief in progress. Thanks were tendered to the minister and committee of Ullet Road Church for their kind hospitality in entertaining the Annual Meeting.

After tea the members and friends again assembled to hear Mr. G. G. Armstrong deliver a lecture on 'The Churches and International Peace.' He said that for many years peace had been the frequent subject of sermons and resolutions. Some people tried at the beginning of the war to reconcile Christian teaching with what was done; but most have had to readjust their ethical ideas to the actual realities of to-day. Most still believed they had a firm hold on the principles of their Teacher—love to God, and even to their enemies. A very little advance along that path would tax all the strength that some of them had. It imposed upon them the duty of thinking the best possible of their enemy, to be careful and judicial in forming their opinions, while they found themselves faced by a spurious patriotism which wanted them to believe the very worst of their enemy. There were arguments which held human life too cheap. Victory must be brought into relation with its cost, and we must gauge the value of that vicarious bravery which says "We will conquer at all costs." On our honour and before God we must face this question: What are we fighting for? The answer is a permanent peace. Our young men, many of whom will never return, went out for that. There was never to be war again, they said. Surely it meant something more than an armed peace; but it will not be secured merely by exhaustion. It must be a peace of real security, of contentment, of international godliness. Each nation must have its own freedom to develop on its own natural lines, in accordance with its genius. President Wilson will be known to posterity as the one who brought us hope. What have our churches to say of that hope? What will they do to make it a reality? There must be some sort of supernational authority, resting at first upon force. There must be no sectarian or denominational isolation; but all the churches must range themselves on the side of this higher patriotism in order to achieve the higher law of duty. They must aim at, as well as preach, the brotherhood of man. Racial animosities must cease, for true Christianity is the most international of all things. A faith in the possibility of such a change is inherent in belief in good of every kind, and in the conception of a divinely governed world. To doubt this, to believe that this sort of thing is to go on indefinitely, and that we cannot change it, is to deny our God.

There was no discussion after this very impressive address, but a vote of thanks was moved by Dr. Mellor, and seconded by the Rev. J. L. Haigh, and the meeting was brought to a close by the singing of a hymn and the benediction.

THE MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the Union was held at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, on Monday, March 12. The President, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, was in the chair. The Report of the Committee showed that another year's successful work had been accomplished, in spite of the great difficulties occasioned by the war.

The President, in moving the adoption of the Report, said: "I may congratulate our churches on having come so successfully through a time of unparalleled difficulty. They have recognised their mission as Christian societies that are here not merely to be ministered unto but to minister, and they have taken a conspicuous share in bearing the burdens of this war, both in combatant and non-combatant spheres. This is no time for complacency, but I should be affecting a detachment and indifference which are not mine if I failed to say that we are proud of the example of self-sacrifice set by their members. We think with reverent and affectionate sympathy of those who have paid the extreme price of honour, and of those who now mourn their glorious memories. Their grief cannot be all sadness, for it has mingled with it a nobility and a humble pride that transcends and sanctifies personal suffering. Beyond these there is the circle of men now dedicated and prepared for the same sacrifice, and of all their relatives who are in anxiety for them. The thought of these is never far absent from our hearts; and we admire the calm fortitude with which they endure the peril, the hardship, and the suspense. Beyond these again are the men and women—women not less chivalrous and brave than the men—who have cheerfully abandoned their ordinary callings and sacrificed, in some cases, brilliant careers in the professions and businesses, and laid their fortunes on the altar of their country and of all that their country now represents."

At the close of his address Mr. Thomas spoke as follows on the claims of National Service: "In speaking of this subject I have the advantage of the advice of the Director-General, who has with the greatest kindness found time in the midst of his stupendous labours to write me a letter in which he explicitly permits me to quote the substance of his communication. He very properly desires that all that we can do should be done, and he knows that he can rely upon our doing it with ungrudging loyalty. He recognises that we have not the opportunities of a compact organisation like the Church of England, whose clergy can mobilise themselves and act with ease and precision through their bishops. He recognises, also, what every sensible layman recognises, that ministers are a class apart, and only in exceptional circumstances could they properly undertake to do National Service on the terms and conditions of the ordinary citizen. From his own personal knowledge of the Midland Christian Union he is well aware that the matter is more difficult for us than in the case of many other groups of churches, but he feels that the ministers might come to some arrangement among themselves, and could decide whether any of them could do other work than that connected with his own charge. Indeed, I shall be expressing his own mind if I say that the whole thing is really a matter for each man to decide for himself, subject to any advice which the elders of his Church may be able to give him. It is in order to get that advice from ministers and elders that I shall propose an ad hoc committee consisting of an equal number of ministers and laymen, together with the officers of the Union. And upon this committee our lay-preachers will be represented....In common with all the Christian Churches of this country we acknowledge with gratitude the great consideration, patience, tact, and perception which the Director-General has shown in dealing with the complexities of the problem as it affects ministers and their congregations, and we welcome his tribute to the service which churches as churches render to the nation in fulfilling their proper spiritual function, in maintaining the moral tone and ideals of their people, and in keeping at a true pitch their desire to be used and used up in the cause of the higher civilisation of mankind."

Subsequently the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas was re-elected President, Mr. Philip J. Worsley Hon. Treasurer, and Mr. E. Ellis Townley Hon. Secretary. The following were appointed on the Committee: The Revs. Lawrence Clare, J. E. Stronge, W. G. Topping, J. Wrigley, Miss Lee, Miss Nettlefold, Mr. W. Cheshire, and Mr. F. C. Coleman.

The members and delegates were entertained to luncheon by the congregation of the Church of the Messiah.

The President, replying to the toast of the Union, said he hoped no effort would be made in their union to push one particular phase of their constituent life as against another. He was proud of the principle of the Union, and he trusted they would bear in mind that it was a union of different churches, bearing different names, different in temperament and different in origin. He hoped they would not push against each other and say all their churches were this, that, or the other. They did not want to say that, or it would be a deadly dull thing.

The Rev. S. M. Berry (Carr's Lane), responding for the visitors, said he was glad to be present if only to protest against those narrow interpretations of Christian fellowship which had ruled in the past. Immediately they came into fellowship with people meeting on a denominational basis it was thought they were thereby revealing a weakness in their own particular convictions. It seemed to him that in their modern approach towards these questions they could have the strongest personal convictions and yet enjoy the broadest unity of fellowship with those who differed from them.

Prof. H. G. Wood said that, without being disloyal to the past and the opinions that had been entrusted to them, it was surely the case that each church had to expand until it realised that ideal of unity and liberty in which alone Christian fellowship could be perfect.

There was a Conference in the afternoon, when Mr. Arthur Chamberlain spoke on 'The Relations of Capital and Labour after the War.'

The Public Service in the evening was conducted by the Rev. A. E. O'Connor of Shrewsbury, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Joseph Wood.

THE MINISTERIAL FELLOWSHIP.

RESOLUTIONS ON NATIONAL SERVICE.

The following resolutions were passed at a meeting of the Ministerial Fellowship held in Manchester on March 14:—

1. That at this time of national stress it behoves every member of the community to give the best and utmost by way of service for the common good.

2. That the efficient ministry of religion is National Service of vital importance at all times, and never more so than now, when the absence of so many workers, and the sorrow of so many hearts, make the work of the ministry more needful and helpful than ever.

3. That the training which as a rule a minister has received makes the special National Service which he could render, if disposed and at liberty to do so, particularly valuable in certain directions.

4. That the question as to whether any particular minister can or should surrender part or all of his present work in order to offer himself for other forms of National Service is one for his own conscience and judgment, in consultation with the representatives of the Church or society which he serves.

5. That theological students who have received their final certificate as having completed the full course, or the special aptitude course, are deemed to have become ipso facto ministers, as their names are at once accepted by the Revising Committee for the list in the Year Book.

6. That while the salary of a minister who undertakes special National Service should be continued at the present rate, it is not primarily intended that either minister or congregation should financially benefit in consequence of any payment for services which the minister receives. This should be appropriated by arrangement between them, regard being had to the special expenses which may attach to such service and the increased cost of living which war conditions have involved.

7. That, in accordance with the Director-General's wish that ministers wishing to volunteer for special National Service should do so through their denomination, the Secretaries of the National Conference, British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and Ministerial Fellowship, in consultation with their Presidents, be invited to become an ad hoc Committee, to be the medium of communication and arrangement under the scheme.

FRENCH DOMESTIC LIFE.

LETTER FROM CAPT. DOWSON.

Capt. O. F. Dowson, son of the Rev. H. E. Dowson and Mrs. Dowson, is now Court Martial Officer at the 2nd Army Headquarters in France. He is an excellent French scholar, and has written home an extremely interesting letter, of which the following is an extract :—

"Where I am billeted here I see something of French domestic life. I used to be constantly buying from farmers and others, but that tended to bring their disagreeable side uppermost, and did not enable me to realise entirely the effect of the war on the domestic side of French life. In my present billet there are two good ladies, with one servant, who is a sort of adopted daughter. The elder lady is a widow of a professor of mathematics. Her husband died ten years ago. He left her a little money, and told her if ever there was a war with Germany she was to do all she could for the French soldiers. Since the beginning of the war she has devoted every minute of her time to this, and when the British Army took over this area she transferred her attention to looking after British soldiers. When I go to my billet there are always Tommies there, and every evening from about six to nine she has a number of them for music, as she has a grand piano. If any one of them is sick he comes at once to her and she prescribes for him. If he can get sick leave off duty she makes him stop all the day in her kitchen-dining-room. The other lady, her sister, is the wife of a professor of modern languages. He was taken prisoner at the beginning of the war. They used to live at a big town, which has been occupied by the Germans since September, 1914. She hears from him once a month, and occasionally has news of her home, which they had to leave at half-an-hour's notice. They know that all their household goods have been appropriated by the Germans, and German officers are billeted in their house.

"When I go to my billet in the evening I always have a good long talk with these people before I turn in. They give me a bowl of tea, and we often talk till midnight. They tell me many things which, when put together, give me a better understanding of French life and character than I ever had before. The French are intensely proud of their own characteristics. They say that their so-called impulsiveness is not due in the least to lack of thought, but to their own interest in being alive. They concentrate on the most interesting thing of the moment, and appreciate intensely the enjoyment of details that we pass by almost without noticing; they extract the last ounce of enjoyment out of their surroundings by entering dramatically into a series of sensations suggested by what happens from moment to moment. The sensation may pass quickly, but it has produced an agreeable and expressed emotion, and this, they say, not only makes life worth living, but is the only way of turning the ordinary events of daily life into moral hard cash. They point to the French behaviour in the war to show you how untrue it is to say that these characteristics produce superficiality and frivolity, and I think they are quite right. I don't think any nation could have a stronger sense of duty than they have, as soon as the event has occurred to make them realise the need for action.

"Madame told me a story last night of a soldier she knew at the beginning of the war. When he received his orders to join his regiment his wife was just about to have a baby. He had to go, leaving her alone in the house with only a neighbour to look after her. A fortnight or three weeks later the Germans had reached a place quite close to his home where she was. He was in the neighbourhood fighting. He heard she was ill, and one day he had to pass by his own house while carrying a very important message, which had to be delivered as soon as possible. He refused to go in and see her because it would delay the message. When he returned the next day she was dead. She had given birth to a child. The neighbour looked after it for two or three weeks; then the Germans began to advance again. He contrived to get sent on a mission of message-carrying near his home. He went there, wrapt the baby in a blanket, and carried it on the top of his haversack. The Germans came on, and there was a further retreat of the French. He lost his regiment, and marched for thirty-six hours with his baby. Somehow or other he managed to give it food. Then he left it at a friend's house. He rejoined his regiment, and the baby was moved again in a few days to a place where the Germans never reached. He now goes to see the baby when he gets permission. This is a typically French tale."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Chowbent.—£12 was raised for "Our Blinded Sailors and Soldiers Fund," including their training at St. Dunstan's and other places, by a Charity Social in the Chowbent schools on Wednesday evening, March 7.

Huddersfield.—Surgeon-General G. J. H. Evatt, C.B., in an address on 'The Army and the Nation,' delivered at the Town Hall under the auspices of the Fitzwilliam Street Social Union on Monday, March 5, spoke of his personal experiences of fifty-two years in the Army. The Army had gradually improved, he said, until we had in the field in this most sacred cause of human liberty the best equipped, the best trained, and the best officered army that ever existed. Among great reformers who had stood out prominently in the course of his career he mentioned Florence Nightingale, Lord Cardwell, and Lord Haldane. The former he described as "a woman of the century, a woman of the ages, the greatest expression of English womanhood"; she had succeeded in revolutionising the medical service, and to her fine work the fact that our Army was so well cared for in a medical sense was largely due. The condition of the Army was infinitely better to-day than it was fifty-two years ago; the influence passed into civil life, and benefit was going on everywhere. The Rev. R. A. Dickson, minister of Fitzwilliam Street Church, who presided, was supported by prominent public men and officers of the R.A.M.C.

London District Unitarian Society.—The president, Dr. C. Herbert Smith, and committee of the Society invited the ministers and members of the committees of the grant-aided churches to meet them on Saturday last at Essex Hall. The small hall was comfortably filled. The President called on the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson to introduce the subject of 'The Work of your Church.' It was pointed out that the committees were the backbone of the churches; that the men on the spot, knowing the needs and hopes of the churches, could indicate avenues of usefulness to the Society, which was always ready to help to the full extent of its power; that churches had been gathered in the spirit of faith and freedom; and that the work of the churches was never more needed than to-day. It appeared that many of those attending apprehended being advised to close their churches for one or other of the regular Sunday services, and, expecting this, a spirited protest was made against the idea. The meeting was all but unanimous on this matter. Among those who spoke were Messrs. Charlesworth, Winter, Gibberd, A. Wilson, Collecott, Kinsman, Pollard, Basil Martin, Sorensen, Laughland, T. P. Spedding, Blake, W. Blake Odgers, F. W. Dowson, Miss Montague, Miss Beacock, and Miss Knight. Several important suggestions were made, one of them being that quarterly meetings, similar to Saturday's, should be held. In summing up, the President said he believed that religion and the social fabric would be greatly changed. In London there would be a tremendous influx of new feeling when the war was over, but it was not impossible to reconcile the altered conditions with religious life. He had always thought that the next fifty years would see the religious world roughly divided between those who could accept "authority," and those who looked at religion for themselves, faced their religious problems and were religious without being conformists. To such as these Unitarianism would be a help, for it was a progressive faith.

London: Rhyl Street Mission.—On Sunday afternoon, March 11, a memorial tablet to the Rev. Joseph Pollard was unveiled at the Rhyl Street Domestic Mission. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. H. Rose, and Dr. Carpenter gave the address. He spoke very warmly of the work of Mr. Pollard in building up the Mission from the beginning, how he gained the love of the children in his large Sunday school, knowing each one by name, and the circumstances of every home. Several of the helpers who worked with Mr. Pollard when the Mission was started were present at the unveiling, including Miss A. Sharpe, Mrs. R. T. Herford, Mrs. W. H. Drummond, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Grundy, and Mr. C. Weiss. Dr. John Pollard was also present. The words on the tablet are: "In memory of the Rev. Joseph Pollard, who died November 9, 1916, in the 85th year of his age. From 1882 to 1900, as the first minister here, he was a warm friend to old and young. Many learned from him to find the love of God as light in their darkness. This tablet is placed here by friends who worked with him and friends for whom he worked. 'One that loved his fellowmen.'"

London Sunday School Society.—The annual meeting of this Society was held at Essex Hall on Wednesday, March 7. Tea was served at 7, and at 7.30 the Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A. (president) presided over a large meeting. The Secretarial and Financial reports were read and adopted on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. R. Asquith Wooding. The officers for the ensuing year were re-elected, except in the case of the president, Mr. Biggs being succeeded by Mr. Harold Titford. The election of officers was moved by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, seconded by the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson. In view of the calling up of Mr. Wooding for military service, Mr. Biggs undertook to carry out the duties of the treasurership pro tem. After the business meeting, the Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A., introduced for conference the subject of "Our Sunday Schools after the War." He dwelt upon certain points which would need emphasis and solution later. These were concerned with: (1) the retention of elder scholars; (2) the getting back of old scholars and teachers; (3) the turning to good account of the energies of soldiers and women workers; (4) how best to assist teachers with advice and books; (5) how to cultivate the spirit of service. The discussion was taken up by the Revs. John Toye, F. Summers, T. P. Spedding, J. A. Pearson, Mr. Harold Titford and Sister Knight. In view of the shortage of paper it is not proposed to print the reports this year, but the Balance Sheet and list of subscribers will be issued as usual.

Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church of Ireland.—At a meeting of the General Purposes Committee which was held in Belfast on Thursday, March 8, the following resolution relating to National Service was unanimously adopted: "That in view of the appeal made to the country at the present time for National Service, we commend the same to the Ministers and Congregations of the Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church of Ireland; and we instruct our Clerk to send copies of this resolution to the ministers and Church secretaries. We further request that this resolution shall be read to the congregations."

Oldham.—An entertainment was given in the Unitarian Chapel, Lord Street, on Tuesday, March 6, for the second time this winter, by the League of Unitarian Women, to a number of wounded soldiers from Woodfield and Abbey Hills hospitals. About seventy guests assembled in the afternoon, and were welcomed by the minister, the Rev. Douglas W. Robson. After tea a programme of music and dancing was carried out, solos and other items being contributed by Mrs. Warburton, Mr. R. Bentley, and two of the visitors, Sergeant Tunstall and Corporal Bennett. At the close of the proceedings Sergeant Tunstall briefly expressed the appreciation of the soldiers for the entertainment, which had been enjoyed by them all. An exchange of pulpits took place on Sunday evening last, March 11, as part of a general exchange amongst the Oldham Free Churches, between the Rev. A. T. Stevens, of Waterhead Congregational Church, and the Rev. Douglas W. Robson.

Plymouth.—During the winter the congregation of the Unitarian Chapel has given a series of teas to wounded and convalescent soldiers from the local military hospitals. The fifth in the series was held on Wednesday, March 7, when the programme of music was provided by the "Cheero" concert party under the leadership of Private A. C. Ricketts, R.A.M.C. Tea was served by the ladies of the congregation.

Pudsey.—A very successful three days' bazaar has recently been held at the Unitarian schoolroom for the purpose of wiping off the deficit on the year's accounts. The third day was the children's day, and the Sunday scholars chose their own representatives to sit on the platform, in addition to a chairman and opener. The Rev. R. Newell, the recently appointed minister, has had a great deal to do with the venture, and the result is very satisfactory, the amount raised being about £105, which meets all immediate requirements.

Wales: Allt-y-placa.—The annual tea-party in connection with the Unitarian Church was held on Wednesday, March 7, followed by a concert, at which the chair was taken by the minister, the Rev. Lewis Williams. The Rev. E. O. Jenkins, Llwynrhydowen, conducted, and the singing of the children was a tribute to the effective training of Mr. George Evans, Ffoshelig.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Welsh Hymn-Tunes.

The Prime Minister, in the midst of his manifold duties, found time a few weeks ago to make a selection of four of his favourite Welsh hymn-tunes, to be added to the list already chosen by the Festival Committee in connection with the National Eisteddfod at Birkenhead. Mr. Lloyd George was particularly anxious that, at this Festival, opportunity should be taken to acquaint a wide circle with the charm and inspiration of the old Welsh Congregational tunes. "Englishmen," he said, in a letter to Mr. Tecwyn Evans, Chairman of the Committee, "know their own tunes, and the world knows them, whereas the Congregational music of Wales is a revelation which has yet to be made." In accordance with the Premier's wishes three of the English tunes which had been chosen were discarded, and the following substituted: 'Dymuniad,' 'Bryn Hyfryd,' and 'Llangristioulus,' in addition to those already selected by him, namely, 'Dyfrdwy,' 'Hyder,' 'Dorcas,' and 'Jabez.'

An Invalid's Example.

It is a pleasure to hear of the excellent work which is being done by Mr. W. Stewart Royston, Sunnyside, Paddington, Warrington, in providing disabled soldiers with walking-sticks, especially as it is carried on by a man who has been bedridden for years, and is a great sufferer. Being precluded by physical disablement from taking any active part in national service, Mr. Royston hit upon the idea of organising a fund for the purpose we have mentioned, and thousands of broken soldiers have reason to be grateful to him for a little bit of practical help which, apparently, had occurred to nobody else. The Royston sticks have been sent all over the country, from Edinburgh down to Woolwich, and letters of thanks have come from many distant places. Mr. Royston's Fund needs to be constantly replenished, like all other funds for supplying our soldiers with comforts or necessities, and we may remind our readers that contributions will be gratefully received by him at the address given above. Every shilling received buys a stick, and nothing at all is charged for working expenses and distribution.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. Cumberland.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

HUCKABACK TOWELLING in bundles of Remnants. Sufficient to make six full-size Bedroom Towels, only 6*s.* 6*d.* (postage 6*d.*). Send postcard for this month's Bargain List, free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any kind. Up to 7*s.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 12*s.* on silver, 15*s.* on gold; 2*l.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 5*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 17, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

Library of the PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3899. NEW SERIES, No. 1002.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING of Subscribers and Friends will be held at Stamford Street Chapel, London, S.E., on MONDAY, April 2, 1917, at 7.45 P.M., when the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE will preside.

Tea, to which friends are cordially invited, will be provided at 7 p.m.

A. A. TAYLER, Hon. Sec.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

In accordance with the Rules, NOMINATIONS for the COUNCIL and the COMMITTEE, for the year ending Whitsuntide 1918, should reach THE SECRETARY at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2, not later than March 31.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

March.

25. Rev. JOSEPH WOOD.

April.

1. Lieut.-Col. Rev. C. S. BULLOCK.
(Subject of Sermon :—"What seek ye?")
8. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON.

SPECIAL NUMBER FOR SAILORS & SOLDIERS.

A Few Copies of "The Inquirer" for March 3, containing Special Articles and Illustrations, can still be obtained, price 1½d., by post 2d., from the Office,

13 BREAM'S BUILDINGS,
CHANCERY LANE, E.C.4.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE MARCH ISSUE INCLUDE

The Conflict of Ideals

Prospects in English Literature

The Nature of "Shell-Shock"

Short Story: 'The Mothers'

Industrial Reconstruction: An Employer's View

Reviews

Scholastic Appointments, etc.

Monthly, 1s.;
Annual Subscription, 14s. post free.

Published at "The Athenæum" Office,
11 Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead, London, N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, March 25.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. R. W. Sorensen; 6.30, Mr. J. P. Rosling.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. W. Copeland Bowie; 7, Rev. J. Vint Laughland.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W., 11, Mr. J. Begg; 6.30, Rev. E. Daplyn.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. Wm. Lee, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. J. H. Smith.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. Rosling; 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Joseph Wood.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellone.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Dr. Chas. Hargrove, M.A., D.Litt.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. W. H. Thomas; 6.30, Rev. T. Lloyd Jones.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. McLachlan, M.A., B.D.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. Jacks.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.; 6, Rev. T. Anderson.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

MARRIAGE.

Woodward—Nicholson.—On the 15th inst., at Hoveringham, by the Vicar, James Russell, son of T. B. Woodward of Waterloo, Liverpool, to Kathleen, youngest daughter of Arthur Nicholson of Hoveringham.

DEATHS.

Baily.—On the 21st inst., at 4 Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, N.W.3, Walter Bailey, M.A. late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, aged 80. Funeral Service at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, on Saturday, at 11.30, previous to cremation at Golder's Green. No flowers.

Orr.—March 17, Jane Ellen Orr, eldest daughter of the late Rev. James Orr, Airmount, Clonmel.

Simpson.—On March 8, at Brooklyn House, Thorneywood Lane, Nottingham, Clara Simpson, daughter of the late John Bishop of Dorchester, Dorset, aged 82 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, LADY NURSE.—Bright, well-educated young lady, 20-25 years; Norland or Princess Christian College training preferred, but experience not essential. For girl 4 years and boy 13 months. Small household in country near Buxton. Manchester within easy reach. Salary according to qualifications.—Mrs. S. P. Grundy, St. Catherine's Hotel, Fowey, Cornwall.

WANTED, DAILY GOVERNESS for two little girls. Board and lodging found.—Mrs. Fairfield, 202 Preston Road, Brighton.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 *Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.*4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 135
THE APOCALYPSE OF FREEDOM . . . 137
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 138
A DEAN AND A REVOLUTIONIST . . . 138
THE WEAKEST LINK 138
DEEP UNTO DEEP 139
CORRESPONDENCE :—
A Conscientious Objection 139
A Tribute to the late Miss Humphreys . 139
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
John Wesley in his Letters . . . 140
MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
Mr. Walter Baily 141
Mr. John MacGiffin 141
Miss J. E. Orr 141
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 142
Slavery in German East Africa . . 142
Winifred House Children's Holiday Home 143
Unitarian Home Missionary College . . 143
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 143

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE Revolution in Russia, the news of which arrived after we had gone to press last week, may be hailed as the first-fruits of the war. The old régime has gone, and there seems little chance that it will ever return on some backwash of reaction. It has been discredited by the miseries which it has inflicted upon the people, and even more by its base intrigues and lack of patriotism. Once more the political slimness of Prussia and the alliance of autocrats to crush popular liberties have miscarried. It is the worst reverse which the German government has sustained in the war, but we believe a blessing in disguise for the German people.

* * *

THE Revolution has not been bloodless, but nearly so. The description of soldiers and civilians routing out the police from their hiding places and placing them under arrest reads like a scene from a Gilbert and Sullivan opera. It is clear that an extensive plot against the people had been arranged almost to its last detail. The loyalty of the army to Russia and the cause of freedom saved the situation. As we have pointed out elsewhere we shall have to revise the popular estimate of a conscript army as the bulwark of kings.

* * *

THE programme of the new Government is magnificent, but the most remarkable thing about it is its moderation and good sense. Its leaders are men with too deep a reverence for ordered freedom to sanction rash courses of action or to give any rein to the wilder passions of the moment. Their appeal is to law and equal justice for all. It is clear that some of the extreme elements in the Labour and Socialist groups have threatened to show their teeth, and it has required great firmness, combined with a genius for wise compromise to keep them in check. It would be foolish not to reckon with the days of difficulty which may lie ahead, but at the moment it would appear that the worst danger is past and there is no taste for anarchy. Supplies of food are pouring into the starving towns and the people are determined to put new vigour into the war. They know that without a decisive victory for the Allies their Revolution cannot stand.

* * *

THE new Russian Cabinet has promised to base its policy upon the broadest principles of democratic freedom, including: (1) An immediate general amnesty for all political and religious offences, including terrorist acts, military revolts, and agrarian crimes. (2) Freedom of speech, of the press, of association and Labour organisations, and the freedom to strike, with an extension of those liberties to officials and troops in so far as military and technical conditions permit. (3) The abolition of all social, religious and national restrictions. (4) The summoning of a constituent assembly, which, with universal suffrage as a basis, shall establish the Governmental régime and the Constitution of the country.

* * *

BY none will this dawn of a new day be hailed with greater joy than by the band of Russian political exiles. "I think," Prince Kropotkin said the other day to a Special Correspondent of The Daily News, "that the defeat of autocracy this time is final. The struggle against it has lasted for fifty years, and it became especially bitter since the beginning of the war....As for the stability of the present Government, one thing is certain: autocracy will not be able to overthrow it. The most important point for Russia at the moment is to make every effort to free Russian territory from the German invader, and to establish a free, independent Poland—not to speak of the many internal reforms which require immediate attention. There is no doubt that the change of Government has immensely increased the fighting powers of the nation, and will be regarded by Germany as one of the most serious blows yet struck at her ambitions, as well as at the imperialist schemes of the Hohenzollerns."

* * *

BY a strange coincidence during these days of revolution in Russia Sir Stanley Maude was preparing a message of freedom for the Arabs. He has entered

Bagdad not as a conqueror but as a deliverer. His proclamation to the people has about it a touch of Oriental fantasy and of Biblical simplicity:—

"Since the days of Halaka your city and your lands have been subject to the tyranny of strangers, your palaces have fallen into ruins, your gardens have sunk in desolation, and your forefathers and yourselves have groaned in bondage. Your sons have been carried off to wars not of your seeking, your wealth has been stripped from you by unjust men and squandered in distant places.

"Since the days of Midhat the Turks have talked of reforms. Yet do not the ruins and wastes of to-day testify the vanity of those promises?

"It is the wish not only of my King and his peoples, but it is also the wish of the great nations with whom he is in alliance, that you should prosper even as in the past, when your lands were fertile, when your ancestors gave to the world literature, science, and art, and when Bagdad city was one of the wonders of the world."

The proclamation concludes with an appeal to the people through their nobles and elders and representatives to participate in the management of their civil affairs in collaboration with the political representatives of Great Britain who accompany the British army, so that they may be united with their kinsmen in north, south, east, and west in realising the aspirations of their race.

* * *

In spite of the infallible commentators at home, who distrust optimism and detect some secret danger lurking in every success, we regard this week's news from France as simply splendid. Of course the pessimist may say that the Germans have retreated in their own way without overwhelming loss, but it is we who have forced them to retreat, and that is what matters. But our chief thought is that it has been a week of deliverance for thousands of French people from an intolerable yoke. The whole countryside has been devastated, the fruit trees have been cut down, the ancient monuments destroyed, the contents of private houses carried off as booty, the Germans themselves boast that they have left a belt of dead land behind them; but the enemy has gone, and the feeble men and women, and the children who were too young to be of any value as chattels of war, have awakened from their nightmare of slavery and death. It is the first scene in the drama of liberation, and our boys have done their part for God and humanity.

On Tuesday Lord Milner made an interesting statement in Parliament on the question of the further restrictions which may be imposed upon the manufacture of intoxicants. He pointed out that no foodstuffs are now being wasted in making beer, as the malting of barley had been stopped; but there were sufficient stocks already in existence to produce beer at the rate of 10,000,000 barrels per annum up to November next, and they were useless for any other purpose. When these existing stocks had been exhausted they would have to consider what the next step should be. If it came to the point that there was no possibility of producing liquor without endangering the supply of the food necessary for the people, he had no doubt what the decision of the Government would be, or that the working classes would take a patriotic line and raise no difficulty. Lord Milner gave it as his own opinion that we were not likely to be reduced to such a pass, which does not leave us very hopeful that any policy of more stringent control will be adopted in the near future.

* * *

The decision of the Army Council that all theological students must come up for the revision of their exemption certificates makes them liable for military service like other men. There is no reason to suppose that the original order was meant to cover more than the men who were on the point of completing their course at the time when the Military Service Act was passed, and it is hardly surprising that an exemption, which many people always felt to be a little invidious, has now been withdrawn. The effect on the theological colleges, which have been continuing their work under rather unnatural conditions, will be to reduce their activities almost to vanishing point. To the students themselves, and especially to those who were hoping to enter the ministry next summer, the new regulations will no doubt bring much disappointment, but we hope that they will face the music without any plea for preferential treatment and remember that thousands of other men with business and family responsibilities, for whom the difficulties and the hardships will be very serious, have also been called up.

* * *

On this subject we publish to-day a vigorous letter from Principal Jacks. He points out that certain methods have been suggested by which students in their last year may contrive to evade the duty of military service by escaping into the regular ministry before the authorities can catch them. We share Dr. Jacks's surprise that any one can consider such tactics except to dismiss them with scorn, and we do not think that his indignant language of repudiation is at all too strong. No man must allow himself to traffic with honour, be the consequences to his own life and work what they may. We cannot see any other course open to these students but to go before their tribunals, and if they desire it plead for exemption on the ground that they have nearly completed their special training. If they obtain their exemption they can claim their full status as ministers in due time. No other plan of action seems to us to be clear and honest as the day. In any case it is not open to any of the damaging breath of criticism, while the alternative arouses feelings of intense repugnance in many minds. Can a man who desires to teach other men to be loyal to the inexorable claims of truthfulness doubt for a moment which course he ought to take?

* * *

We write this with reluctance but under a compelling sense of duty. Let no one however suppose that our aim is to stampede as many men as possible into the army. Our particular views about national affairs have nothing to do with the issue which we are considering. If we shared the views of people who are anxious that every man should get off as a conscientious objector we should feel just as keenly that it must be impossible for any one to accuse us of methods of evasion. To avoid misunderstanding may we also point out that we have not any feeling of ill-will towards theological students, who have preferred exemption to military service. We have never concealed our opinion that they have made a mistake, but we do not wish to press severely upon them on that account. On this occasion we are concerned not with the progress of our war of liberation but solely with the honour of the ministry, its private integrity and its public reputation. If there are any people who advocate the courses which Dr. Jacks condemns, we think that they would do well to explain why they do so and try to convince us that we are wrong in treating as ignoble what they regard as entirely praiseworthy. We are none of us infallible, to that we make no pretence, but we are genuinely perplexed and dismayed. Let none of us forget at this critical hour that it is better to suffer anything than run the risk of ministers of religion lowering the standard of a strict integrity for themselves or other men.

THE APOCALYPSE OF FREEDOM.

If the political upheaval in Russia fulfils its first promise it will be the biggest thing that has happened in the world since the French Revolution. Only men conscious of a mighty purpose and of power to achieve it could have acted with the vigour, the promptness and the success, which have marked the policy of the leaders of the Duma. To have overthrown autocracy while preserving respect for justice and moderation is the best evidence we can desire of their competence to deal with the dangers of popular excitement, the intrigues of the reactionaries, and the immense tasks of organisation which lie ahead. We hail the dawn of a great light, which bids fair to shine with increasing splendour to the perfect day.

It has often been pointed out that popular revolutions have but a small chance of success in a military state; and this argument has been used as an excuse for the political indolence and incapacity of the German people. But the power of armies may be a bulwark of popular liberties, when a corrupt government forgets that its soldiers are no longer mercenaries who do its bidding for hire, but men who fight for their own safety and honour. In Russia the mismanagement of the war, the paralysing influence of German intrigue in high places, and the reign of terrorism in the large cities, have destroyed the loyalty of the army to the old régime. The revolution has in it no comfort for Germany, arising from distracted counsels and a temporary weakening of military resistance. All the friends of Russian freedom agree that its immediate effect will be to give new vigour to the spring campaign. The movement is passionately anti-German. It is aimed directly at all the abuses which are the props of Prussian autocracy. Stepniak saw what was coming and apparently did not distrust the army. In a letter to The Manchester Guardian Mr. L. T. Hobhouse states that when he first met Stepniak in 1889 and asked him what real chance he saw of any revolution in Russia, he replied: "A great European war will be our chance. It will show the bureaucracy to be quite incapable of managing the affairs of the nation in a crisis." These are words which may come true in Germany as well as in Russia, though Germany has not yet added inefficiency and the deliberate starvation of her own people to her other crimes. But the Kaiser and the retinue of hard selfish men by whom he is surrounded are more stupid than we take them to be, if they do not read their own doom in this fiery apocalypse of Russian freedom.

For ourselves the news from Russia is full of hope and encouragement in two directions. It removes a dark fear which has been clutching at our hearts. We have long been conscious of a feeling of disappointment and disquiet, which we have been very reluctant to put into words. Our alliance with Russia had something strange in it, and though we have done our best to struggle against rash or ignorant judgments, and have opened our hearts wide to the fascination of forming new ties of sympathy with a national life very different from our own, we have had moments of deep uneasiness, lest we should even appear to condone the crimes of intolerance and cruelty, whose victims have often cried to us for help. Recently this feeling of bewilderment and distrust has grown stronger among quiet and thoughtful people, who have not lost their keen sense for moral values in the clamour of war. Pictures of internal misery due to a culpable lack of organisation and not to any shortage of food have appeared in the press; there have been rumours of dark forces at work in court circles; and the vast military resources of the country continued to be strangely ineffective on the field of battle. But there is no need to speak of these things at the moment when the people themselves have risen up against the men who weakened and misled them, in order that they may fight with new strength against the oppressor and help to rid the world of its chains. Rather would we cry with Wordsworth, as he listened to the trumpet call of the Revolution,

> My heart was all
> Given to the people, and my love was theirs.

But there is another consideration which also stirs us deeply. As we look beneath the surface of these startling events in Russia we see one of the movements of the human spirit, from which a new epoch of progress and happiness may be born, and it gives us a fresh vision of the principles of equal justice and liberty for which we are fighting in this war. This renewal of faith in our ideals has come just at the moment when many of us needed it. It is one of the penalties of a long struggle that the vision begins to fade, and some of the eagerness of a glad obedience goes out of our duty. We have known this danger, and we have tried, even at the risk of wearying some of our readers by our insistence, to keep the stern challenge sounding in their ears above all the clamours of the world and the claims of private duty. There is here something higher than patriotism, though unselfish patriotism is one of the most radiant virtues of which human life is capable. But in a conflict between freedom and justice and the forces which enslave and dishonour the spirit of man, it is the voice of God which summons us to take His side, and it is God Himself who is revealed in power through the long agony to those who give themselves completely to the cause of liberty. And to these as they pass through the fire, scorched by its heat yet ennobled by the cause for which they suffer, there shall come new meanings into the familiar language of sacrifice and a new vision of divine justice working at the heart of every struggle for freedom.

It is always so. The revelations of love and goodness, of judgment and power, which change the life of nations and transfigure the world are not whispered in the ear of the official custodians of religion, though these may afterwards help to interpret their meaning and transmit their grace. God is here, manifestly present in this vast upheaval of the world, in this crucifixion and deliverance of the peoples. He scourges us with His rebuke when we try to serve Him on our own easy terms. He burns up the chaff of our mean cares and paltry desires with unquenchable fire. But longing eyes greet the dayspring from afar, and the prisoners of hope know that their redemption draweth nigh.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

Hatred of absolute rule, where will of one
Is law for all, and of that barren pride
In them who, by immunities unjust,
Between the sovereign and the people stand,
His helper and not theirs, laid stronger hold
Daily upon me, mixed with pity too
And love; for where hope is, there love will be
For the abject multitude. And when we chanced
One day to meet a hunger-bitten girl,
Who crept along fitting her languid gait
Unto a heifer's motion, by a cord
Tied to her arm, and picking thus from the lane
Its sustenance, while the girl with pallid hands
Was busy knitting in a heartless mood
Of solitude, and at the sight my friend
In agitation said, "'Tis against that
That we are fighting," I with him believed
That a benignant spirit was abroad
Which might not be withstood, that poverty
Abject as this would in a little time
Be found no more, that we should see the earth
Unthwarted in her wish to recompense
The meek, the lowly, patient child of toil,
All institutes for ever blotted out
That legalised exclusion, empty pomp
Abolished, sensual state and cruel power,
Whether by edict of the one or few;
And finally, as sum and crown of all,
Should see the people having a strong hand
In framing their own laws; whence better days
To all mankind. But, these things set apart,
Was not this single confidence enough
To animate the mind that ever turned
A thought to human welfare,—that, henceforth
Captivity by mandate without law
Should cease; and open accusation lead
To sentence in the hearing of the world,
And open punishment, if not the air
Be free to breathe in, and the heart of man
Dread nothing?

'The Prelude,' Wordsworth.

We are born, not only to be happy, but to endure hardness, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. Our endurance saves and strengthens others of whom we know not, and knits our own character into the power and worth of a veteran of the Cross.

Stopford A. Brooke.

O GOD, who art the Father of all mankind, we beseech Thee to give us a fuller realisation of our human brotherhood in Thee, and to raise up among us a deeper sense of truth and equity in our dealings one with another.

Amen.

A DEAN AND A REVOLUTIONIST.

It was after dinner, when the most rigid among us expand. It was the most perfectly lovely summer evening when the most prosaic let themselves go a little As a matter of fact it was last August. A Summer Meeting was beginning in Cambridge. The subject was 'Russia.' I was there to lecture on Russian novelists. Dean Parry had welcomed me as his guest to Trinity College. It is impossible for me to write of Dean Parry with impartiality, because I fell in love with him at first sight. Such a welcome! such courtesy! such kindness! Whenever now I hear that prayer asking God's blessing on Bishops and Curates, I always find myself adding, "and especially on Dean Parry." The Dean had many guests on this occasion. Distinguished Russians had come to lecture to the Summer Meeting throng. And now, after dinner, we were gathered in an old garden. A fragrant garden, and the wall at one end boasted of being the most venerable piece of brick-work in England. And sitting on a garden-bench I found myself talking to M. Miliukov. M. Miliukov is now Foreign Minister of Russia, and has played a prominent part in the late Revolution. He is very upright in bearing, has a fresh colour, a gentle voice, and a charming manner. His dress suit is so faultless that, hardened as I am in the matter of old clothes, I felt some apologetic twinges. M. Miliukov does not talk to you, but with you. He is full of knowledge and delightfully human and easy.

The next day I went to hear him lecture on the Duma. It was an illuminating lecture. That night at dinner I was sitting beside him. I asked him to explain certain points in his lecture, which he did most clearly, and he added some information which was thrilling. I felt, as I had never felt before, certain phases in the history of our own parliamentary development. I asked him then to instruct me in the pronunciation of the Russian hard "L" with which I had been valiantly wrestling. He was graciously obliging again. Then he spoke on the situation in Russia. And the striking thing was the tone of conviction in his hope for the future. Did he foresee what was to come? It is impossible to say. A fair man, in faultless evening clothes, with a soft voice, humbly instructing me in some of the subtleties of Russian pronunciation, never asserting himself, with the most perfect manners and self-control—only an occasional flash from his eyes. Such he was last August. To-day a leader in an epoch-making revolution which has overthrown autocracy in Russia.

We speak with almost bated breath of Ivan the Terrible or Peter the Great. Their power was huge, crude, theatrical, grimacing. What of this new power, hiding itself in a dress-suit and a modest voice in an old College garden? Not as democracy, but as the new aristocracy, I like to think of it. The aristocracy of the people, foretelling the best in all.

Alas for the few brave days that fly so fast! My stay was short. I had to leave Cambridge. In the old garden we said "good-bye." M. Miliukov took my hand in both his hands. "And do you go?—I am sorry." The charming smile, the quiet affectionate voice. I see and hear him still. The dear Dean came with me to the College gate, and gave me his blessing. If I had had the courage I would have knelt down. How few are those who have a blessing to give. And yet the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ was the most distinctive thing about him, and his peace the last and most priceless of his gifts.

R. H. U. B.

THE WEAKEST LINK.

An Address given at Willaston School by the Headmaster, on March 18, 1917.

There was a chain, such as you have all seen, used to raise heavy weights by means of a crane. It was weak at one point—there was a defective link. And one day, as a great weight was being slung over a crowded street, the chain broke—at that link.

There was an engine, used to drive the screw of a merchant vessel. One of its parts was unsound, through careless workmanship. Under ordinary conditions this did not show. But one day the ship was pursued by an enemy submarine, and under the strain the engine broke down—through this defective part—and the ship was lost, and with it the crew and (what seemed to some more serious) the cargo also.

There was a Band of Musicians, a very good one; but one of the players was careless, and too confident of himself. One day the band was performing a piece of music in which the chief effect depended on a silent bar, after a very soft passage, followed by a crash of sound. The one player came in alone, very loud, in the silent bar; the piece was ruined.

There was a cricket team, again a good one. But one of the players was indifferent, and thought more of himself than the game. At a critical point in a critical game he dropped an easy catch; and the match was lost, and with it the reputation of the team.

There was an Infantry Company acting as rear-guard to the rest of its Battalion. In the course of the retreat it was most important that the enemy should not know that a certain position was being held; but as they came in view of the position, one man in the defensive line showed head and shoulders above the sky-line. As a result, not only was there no surprise, but the position was outflanked, and withdrawal took place only with the greatest difficulty.

There was another Company, taking part in a night attack. All went well, until the position of assault was almost reached. Then one man dropped his rifle on the stony ground. Immediately flares were up, machine-guns opened fire, and the attack was repulsed with heavy loss.

There was yet another Company, an outpost. In one sentry-group of one picket was a man who had before shown weakness in performing his duty. And now, when the supreme test came, he failed. When he was taking his turn as sentry, he kept such careless watch that the group was rushed, and the picket surprised and driven back on the supports; and the enemy, pressing on, broke through the whole line. And the main body in rear, that the outposts should have protected, had to fall back in confusion.

Lastly, there was a school.....The rest I leave you to fill in for yourselves.

DEEP UNTO DEEP.

Life is not all shallows; a good deal of it is very far from the shore, and the deeps are almost fathomless, if not quite. Our superficial ways of looking at things do not explain life. We begin to ask why, and why, and why, and no man can answer us, and then, and then only, are we on the borderlands of religion. It would not do for us if life were all plain-sailing, if there were no great deeps. We should never learn anything then, and we are here for learning. Those who have an easy time of it all their lives are often to be pitied because their souls have never had a chance. They never took any risks. They always looked after their own skins and thought of number one. And they never found their life because they never lost it. We ought really to rejoice, and not to lament and despair, when the great sorrows come, for these are our unique opportunity of getting to know God. Out of the depths we cry unto Him, and He hears us. There is much human love in the world, and that is a great comfort. And when some terrible blow has struck us down, it is beautiful that friends should rally round us. But, alas, in the greatest griefs, however the loved-ones may strive to help us, there is somehow always a void to fill, always a hungry heart. Human needs are at times so great, and the capacity for human help is often so small. It is when everything else fails us that we often find God, and, to that end, it is well that at times everything else should fail us, for then we are brought home to God. Only He can satisfy the deepest yearnings of the human heart; only He make up for all unrequited love; only He remembers when benefits have been forgot; only He can read into our inmost hearts when others so tragically misread them; only He will love us when all our friends have forsaken us. And we shall never find rest until we rest in Him.

H. H. Johnson.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

A CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—The phrase "conscientious objector" has been on our lips so frequently of late that some persons have fallen into a habit of taking "conscientiousness" and "objecting" to mean the same thing. The habit was not unknown even before present circumstances increased the temptation to fall into it; and during my thirty-five years of association with our churches I have frequently had to guard myself against it, not always, I confess, successfully. It is therefore somewhat against my will that I find myself at the moment forced into the position of a conscientious objector, not, indeed, against military service, but against something very different.

At Manchester College we have a crop of difficulties, into which I need not enter, caused by the recent decision of the authorities to revise or withdraw the exemption previously granted to theological students. These difficulties, sufficiently perplexing already, have been involved, for me, in something worse than perplexity by a suggestion which has reached me, by roundabout ways, through three different channels. The suggestion is that the College should be asked to grant to students who have not completed their course certificates to the effect that they have completed their course, thus enabling them to claim the full exemption from military service which is granted to accredited ministers.

The suggestion fills me with amazement so extreme that I cannot but think it has been perverted in passing through the roundabout channels which I have mentioned, and does not represent what any person connected with our churches seriously wishes or proposes. But, unquestionably, it is being talked of, and though it may be no more than a perversion of some other and less dishonourable idea it seems to me to require instant repudiation by every person who has the good name of our churches at heart. To give it countenance for a moment would be fatal, and there are none to whom it would be so immediately fatal as to the class of conscientious objectors themselves, whose principles I respect, while utterly disagreeing with their present application. Were these to ally themselves with the proposal I have indicated their position would be discredited and their principles, whether rightly applied or not, would forfeit every claim to our respect.

I wish also to raise my voice in earnest protest against the possibility that ministerial appointments may be hurried, or made in a form or at a time in which they would not otherwise be made, in order to render the appointees immune from the claims of the authorities. Such proceedings are plainly immoral. Needless to say it is not by means such as these that it becomes the servants of the truth to protect themselves from martyrdom. That any kind of moral or religious fruit should proceed from a ministry which has begun in this manner is impossible. And this protest I make with the greater emphasis because some time ago, when the recent revision was unheard of, I myself became a party to appointments of a quasi-ministerial nature in the case of some who had been, as I supposed, finally exempted on the ground that they were theological students.

In all these cases I presume that all the parties concerned, the students and the congregations as well as myself, acted in perfect good faith, being ignorant of the impending change in the law. But had I foreseen the possible use that can now be made of these appointments, as claims to exemption not otherwise allowed, most certainly I would not have been a party to them; nor will I, under any circumstances, be a party to others of a similar kind in the future.—Yours, &c.,

L. P. Jacks.

Manchester College, Oxford.
March 20, 1917.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE MISS HUMPHREYS.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—Yet another testimony to the loving kindness and benignant influence of that departed spirit, Miss Humphreys—this time from one of those "little children" to whom she devoted so much of her wonderful personality, and who is now engaged in the uncommon task of the day. Was I not one of those favoured infants of the old Portland British School, upon whom—I speak with a recollection of pride—the Grand Old Lady poured the blessing of her good nature, the sweetness of her attention? True! it all returns to me, its vividness undimmed by time—the scenes of childhood, even now, as I sit in my small tent in barrenness, two copies of The Inquirer by me, are reviewed, and contentedly! For all are pervaded with the happiness of atmosphere, never more pronounced than when I conjure visions of those long ago Tuesdays. I picture myself hoisted on to the governess's desk by the dear lady, there, before a riotously merry but well-disciplined school of youngsters, to demonstrate my capabilities as a cab-pony. I can see the utter joy in her eyes as she leads us, bedecked with gay paper caps and carrying flags of many hues, round he classroom in a merry march. All this in the innocent days of childhood,—but it is devotion like this which leaves behind it some unconscious source of virtuous resolve, hidden away deep in the recesses of memory, always latent, ready, at a time such as this, to push its way forward to guide the mind when troubled by such abnormal circumstances as to-day I find happening to such as myself.

Miss Humphreys played her part—I salute her!—Yours, &c.,

Will F. Sahnow,
Wireless Operator, R.F.C.

France.
March 18, 1917.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

JOHN WESLEY IN HIS LETTERS.

Letters of John Wesley: a Selection of Important and New Letters. With Introductions and Biographical Notes by George Eayrs, F.R.Hist.S. Hodder & Stoughton, 1915. 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

The editor of this substantial volume of Wesley letters is a minister in the United Methodist Church, and was associated with Dr. Townsend and H. B. Workman in the production of the 'New History of Methodism' (2 vols., 1909). His work upon these letters has been done with ample knowledge and enthusiasm; indeed, the complaint against the book would be, if anything, that it is over-edited in the elaborate introductions and biographical notes about all manner of people, with which the letters are furnished; yet the result on the whole is a volume of great interest, a welcome supplement to the vivid records of Wesley's 'Journal.' There are more than three hundred of the letters, selected out of thousands that Wesley wrote, and covering sixty-five years of his life of astonishing activity. The earliest is to his mother, dated from Oxford in 1725, the latest, a word of heartfelt encouragement to Wilberforce in his anti-slavery work, from the venerable leader, shortly before his death, in 1791. About half of the letters are taken from the standard edition of Wesley's 'Works,' and thirty-five from Tyerman's 'Life.' Others are from other printed sources, but sixty-nine are practically new. There is a chronological list of the letters, but they are arranged in successive chapters, not in the order of time, but under the personal headings of various groups of correspondents to whom they are addressed. Family letters come first, then several chapters are devoted to leading Methodist ministers, in this country and in America; one chapter contains letters to his wife and some lady friends, another letters to young friends and others, with some most wholesome and some rather quaint advice as to health and education and spiritual discipline. The final chapter contains letters on public matters and to public men. There are two chapters of special interest, which contain a good part of the new material, consisting of letters to Ebenezer Blackwell and Lady Maxwell respectively. Blackwell was a London business man, Wesley's most intimate lay-friend, who rendered him great service in various practical affairs, and also as a confidential adviser, with much good sense and sympathy, in the matter of his most unfortunate marriage. Lady Maxwell of Edinburgh was Wesley's most distinguished follower in Scotland, a devoted and generous supporter of his work. He was nearly forty years her senior, and the letters show with what earnest and intimate affection he could write to one who looked to him for spiritual guidance.

The letters altogether, like the 'Journal,' bring us very near to the man, with his masterful power, an energy that never tired, the single-hearted devotion, the splendid courage, the unresting diligence, which achieved such great things, in the kindling and the direction of the Methodist Revival of religion in this country. We see, indeed, the uncompromising autocrat marshalling his forces, a leader and organiser of commanding genius, with an astonishing frankness in reproof, but also a great patience and tenderness of affection for those who would accept his leadership and join with him in the work. While he lived, Methodism was the work of the Gospel as John Wesley understood and ordered it. Those who became restive under his rule simply had to go. But while we sometimes wonder at his assertion of personal authority, which must not be questioned, the sting is taken out of it by his abounding generosity and the utter self-forgetfulness of his devotion to the cause. The effectiveness of his rule cannot be denied, nor the greatness of the harvest that he reaped.

"You cannot cut him out of our national life. No single figure influenced so many minds, no single voice touched so many hearts. No other man did such a life's work for England." Such is Mr. Augustine Birrell's tribute, in his 'Appreciation' of Wesley's 'Journal,' published some years ago in his 'Miscellanies,' used also in part as an introduction to the one volume abridged edition of the 'Journal' (1902), and now incorporated as a separate chapter of the introduction to this volume of the letters. As a writer, Mr. Birrell adds, Wesley did not achieve distinction. "He was ever a preacher and organiser, a labourer in the service of humanity." And as such we are thankful to have the further opportunity afforded by this volume of coming into close touch with him.

There are many aspects of his life, as revealed in these letters, on which it would be pleasant to dwell, but we must be content here to make two points. And first as to the "flawless constitution" with which Mr. Birrell in his 'Appreciation' credits Wesley. (He also gives him "a saint for a father," but is that quite the impression left by the record of the Rev. Samuel Wesley of Epworth?) As regards physical constitution, it might be thought the conclusion is right, since Wesley lived to be nearly 90 and from the work he did would seem to have been made of iron. Yet he wrote at 80 to one of his young ministers: "When I was young I had weak eyes, trembling hands and abundance of infirmities, but by the blessing of God I have outlived them all....I am afraid you want the grand medicine I use—exercise and change of air"; and in 1770 he wrote to Whitefield: "I bless God my health is not barely as good, but abundantly better in several respects, than when I was five-and-twenty." Five years later, however, he was for days "more dead than alive" from fever, and at 51, Mr. Eayrs tells us, he was so near death by consumption that he wrote an epitaph for himself, "to avoid vile panegyric." His long life was a triumph of eager spirit and determined will over many disabilities. One great gift he had, as he records towards the close of his 'Journal,' "having sleep at command, so that whenever I feel myself worn out, I call it, and it comes, day as night," and with this, as subordinate means to good health, he notes, "my having constantly, for above sixty years, risen at four in the morning," and "my constant preaching at five in the morning, for above fifty years." A letter to Blackwell at a time when he was expecting trouble in Ireland touches further upon his secret: "I shall go as far as I can go, and no farther. But I take no thought for the morrow. To-day I am determined, by His grace, to do the work of Him that sent me"; and a little earlier: "By the grace of God I never fret; I repine at nothing, I am discontented with nothing."

The second point we note is quite in keeping with that happy disposition and singleness of purpose. Repeatedly in these letters Wesley urges his preachers to avoid embittering controversy. "I am sick of disputing," he wrote in 1764 to the Countess of Huntingdon, "I am weary to bear it. My whole soul cries out 'Peace! Peace!' at least with the children of God, that we may all unite our strength to carry on the war against the 'rulers of the darkness of this world.'" And to Lady Maxwell he wrote that from the first in coming to Scotland, "it was a sacred rule with me never to preach on any controverted point, at least not in a controversial way. Any one may see that this is only to put a sword into our enemies' hands. It is the direct way to increase all their prejudices, and to make all our labours fruitless." With his preachers in America he pleads to oppose a party spirit. "This has always, so far as it has prevailed, been the bane of all true religion." "I blame all even that speak the truth otherwise than in love." Of a Socinian neighbour his advice to a brother minister is: "Never speak severely, much less contemptuously, of him in any mixed company. You must use no weapons in opposing him, but only those of truth and love."

The volume is enriched by several facsimiles of letters admirably executed.

V. D. D.

The Cambridge University Press has nearly ready, and will publish immediately, a volume entitled 'Russian Realities and Problems.' This book is of special interest at the present time as it contains two lectures delivered at Cambridge last summer by M. Paul Milyoukov, who has just been appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs. The titles of his two lectures are 'The War and Balkan Politics' and 'The Representative System in Russia.'

Messrs. Constable will publish immediately a new volume by Prof. Ramsay Muir, whose 'Nationalism and Internationalism' has attracted so much attention, entitled 'The Expansion of Europe: the Culmination of Modern History.' The volume is an attempt to survey, without any multiplicity of detail, the sources and character of the great process by which, during the last four centuries, the whole world has been subjugated by the civilisation of Europe. The author's aim has been to analyse briefly the nature of the share in this work taken by the chief European peoples who have participated in it, though naturally the predominant place is given to the British Empire.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. WALTER BAILY.

The news of the death of Mr. Walter Baily, which took place on Wednesday morning at his home at Hampstead, at the age of 80, will be received with a sense of personal loss by a wide circle of friends. Mr. Baily, who was born in 1837, was the only son of the late John Baily, Q.C. He was educated at Harrow and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he had a brilliant academic career, being a foundation scholar, second wrangler, Smith's prizeman and Fellow. On leaving Cambridge he was called to the Bar, but subsequently for reasons of health accepted an appointment as one of H.M. inspectors of schools. His first district was in the West Riding of Yorkshire, and during this period he resided in Leeds, and he and his family were closely connected with Mill Hill Chapel. In 1876 he returned to London on his appointment to a metropolitan district and settled at Hampstead. Fortunately for himself he was able to break away from his exacting professional duties at a comparatively early age, and for twenty-five years he devoted his fine mental gifts with quiet and ungrudging generosity to the public service. His name will always be honourably associated with University College, on the governing body of which he sat for many years, with University College School and University College Hospital. He was intimately concerned with the removal of the School from Gower Street to the present buildings at Hampstead, and when it was established in its new home was elected Chairman of the School Management Committee. In connection with University College Hospital his services were no less conspicuous. He was chairman of the House and Finance Committee and vice-chairman of the Corporation of the Hospital during the anxious years when the new buildings were being erected and large new sources of income had to be found for their maintenance. Mr. and Mrs. Baily commemorated this long and close connection with University College and its allied institutions by a gift of £1,000 on the occasion of their golden wedding. He was also a Fellow of King's College, London, and a member of the Athenæum Club.

His public duties never dimmed Mr. Baily's interest in mathematical and scientific research. For many years he acted as secretary of the Physical Society. He was a familiar figure at the meetings of the British Association and the scientific lectures of the Royal Institution, and found endless delight in the hours which he spent with his microscope at his country house at Terrier's Green near High Wycombe. Shortly after his marriage he became a Unitarian, and for more than forty years he was a member of Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead. He was elected chairman and treasurer of the congregation in 1893, and served in both capacities for a long period until failing strength led to his retirement. He also served the Provincial Assembly of London and South-Eastern Counties as its treasurer, and was one of the oldest trustees of Dr. William's Trust and of the Hibbert Trust. In all these manifold activities his faithfulness to small details of duty, his quiet patience and his unfailing generosity of mind set a noble example to other men.

In 1861 Mr. Baily married Mary Ann, the only child of the late Thomas Field Gibson. Of that perfect marriage of equal minds it is not for us to speak. Its influence was reflected in the beauti ul hospitality of their home and has gone deep into the hearts of their children. Mr. Baily was a charming host, never so happy as in giving pleasure to his guests and in entertaining them with his rich stores of anecdote and reminiscence. The last years were the beautiful evening of a good man's life. He loved to gather his children and his grand-children round him in the open-air freedom of his country home, and with them he kept his youthfulness of mind and an unfailing interest in all their doings to the end. A friend once remarked to the present writer, "I wonder whether Mr. Baily ever said anything unkind of any one?" Those who knew him intimately were most conscious of the rare quality of his goodness. Mr. Baily has left a family of eight children. Of the sons, Prof. F. G. Baily is Professor of Electrical Engineering at the Heriot Watt College, Edinburgh; Mr. Harold Baily, who has devoted himself to social and political work, is at present serving with the Red Cross in Malta; and Capt. G. G. Baily, Assistant Clerk to the Derbyshire County Council, is with his regiment in France.

MR. JOHN MACGIFFIN.

It is with much regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. John MacGiffin, of 99 Eglantine Avenue, Belfast, who died on Wednesday, March 14, aged 78 years. At morning service at All Souls' Church, Belfast, on Sunday, March 18, the minister, the Rev. E. H. Pickering, made the following reference to the great loss that the congregation had sustained: "During this past week death has taken from our midst one of the most familiar faces in this church. John MacGiffin was our oldest member, but it is not so much the length of his association that endears him to us as the constancy of his unflagging devotion. Every Sunday and every service found him in his place. Every Sunday and every service found him performing his accustomed duty of taking up the collection. Equally unfailing was he in his attendance at other church functions, and a committee meeting without him was something unthinkable. These habits of regularity were a true reflex of his character. Constancy and loyalty were his attributes in all his associations. His family could always rely upon him to do his part as a devoted husband and father. In business, too, his punctuality, honesty, and reliability were proverbial. One of his intimate business associates informed me that he was the soul of honesty, and trusted implicitly by all who had dealings with him. Personally, I have always found his cheerful and regular presence a great support He was a man, however, whose tastes and ideas were by no means a matter of routine. He could appreciate entirely points of theology and religion, he enjoyed good books, and, above all, was positively an enthusiast for good music. Altogether he was a man whose connection with a church did it honour, and we shall be infinitely poorer now that he has entered on the grander and larger life. Our sympathy goes out to his bereaved family, especially to her who has been his life partner for so many years."

MISS J. E. ORR.

With deep regret we record the death of Miss Jane Ellen Orr at the Clonmel Nursing Home on Thursday, March 15. Miss Orr was the eldest daughter of the Rev. James Orr (minister at Clonmel, 1833-82), and was born on March 30, 1842. She was one of the first pupils at the Clonmel Model School (opened in 1847), and remained connected with this school until 1904, having been a teacher about forty-eight years. For many years she had been Secretary of the Clonmel congregation, and was one of the new trustees appointed about a year and a half ago. She was a most constant attendant and was present so recently as the last Sunday in February, when she played the harmonium as usual. The following is taken from the report in The Clonmel Chronicle: "More than ordinary sorrow was felt amongst all classes in our local community on Thursday, when the sad news became known that Miss Orr had passed away that morning. Miss Orr was for many years assistant teacher at the Clonmel Model School, and the good results of her training had a lasting effect on her pupils, all of whom preserved a warm love and high esteem for her up to the end. When she relinquished her official appointment she devoted her splendid energies in a whole-hearted and indefatigable manner to the service of the poor. She was identified with practically all the local philanthropic organisations, but most prominently with the Jubilee Nursing Association (of which she was Hon. Secretary) and the Women's National Health Association. In connection with the latter, she took an especial interest in the work of supplying cheap dinners at the Shamrock Rooms, where she was most regular in attendance every day throughout each successive winter. She was a woman of splendid character, sound in judgment, capable in administration, large-hearted, and keenly sympathetic. Her loss will be sorely felt, and it will be indeed hard to find one to at all adequately fill her place. The sympathy of the entire community is extended to her sisters and her nephew in their bereavement. All sections were represented at the funeral, and the attendance of the general public afforded a very striking proof of the affectionate regard in which the deceased lady was held, and the sincere regret felt at her demise. The mournful procession was accompanied by a vast throng of sympathisers, and altogether it was a fitting tribute to the memory of a lady who had performed such useful service in our midst, and left a record of which any one might feel justly proud."

The Revs. E. S. Hicks and A. Amey officiated at the funeral which took place in Rathronan Churchyard.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

114th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,453	11	7
All Saints' School, S. Islington, collected during Lent by the children	0	10	0
Miss Anne Garrett (seventh donation)	5	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Worsley (second donation)	20	0	0
Mr. and Miss Hirst (fifteenth donation)	2	2	0
Mr. Edward J. Blake (seventh donation)	10	0	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. Yates (twenty-second monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (twenty-seventh donation)	10	0	0
Mr. John Dendy (twelfth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. Thos. Chattaway (sixth donation)	0	5	0
	16,507	13	7

Parcels have been received from: Miss Leigh Browne; The Misses Grundy; Miss Passavant; The Wandsworth Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Ernest Jones); Mrs. Gladstone; Newland Working Party (per Mrs. Roscoe); Miss A. Garrett; Mrs. Crompton, Adelaide (a case of 180 children's garments); Miss Florence Blake; Anonymous (possibly Newcastle ?); Cairo Street Sewing Society, Warrington (per Miss Houghton); Mrs. Jolowicz; Mrs. Comyns Carr; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Mr. and Mrs. Fred F. Perris; The Ladies Sewing Circle, Free Christian Church, Horsham; High Pavement Working Society, Nottingham (per Miss Guilford); Mrs. and Miss Nanson; Miss Rawson; Mrs. Chitty; Essex Church Work Parties (per Mrs. Worthington); Mrs. and Miss Carter; Miss E. M. Greg; Bank Street War Workers' Circle, Bolton (per Mrs. Flower); Miss Alice Talbot; The Misses Thomas; Mrs. George Webb; Mrs. Notcutt; Miss C. H. Rawlins; West Grove Women's League, Cardiff (per Mrs. Fox); Miss Jolly; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society, Hampstead (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb); Finchley Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Blake Odgers); Mrs. Odgers; Plymouth Branch of the Women's League; Miss Boys; Mrs. Prewett; Mrs. Wilson; Mrs. Thoneley; Mrs. J. H. Green and family.

WEEKLY NOTES.

We have again received a large case from our friends in Adelaide, South Australia, sent by Mrs. Crompton. It is only a few weeks since we acknowledged the last case. We have received 330 garments for little children (in the two cases) and all of these clothes are now on their way to France. It is particularly pleasant to receive this evidence of the sympathy of our friends overseas.

Among the letters received this week, the following are specially interesting:—

1. From a doctor at the front: "I have the honour to inform you that I have received with great satisfaction the useful case of surgical instruments which you have been kind enough to send me, and I hasten to send you my warmest thanks. By this noble generosity you greatly assist the cause of the Allies; and as far as the combatants on the Yser are concerned I can speak with authority of the sentiments of profound gratitude which they entertain for the English. Many lives will be saved by these instruments, so judiciously chosen for their purpose."

2. "Your gift has surpassed my hopes. Eight hundred men are under my charge. Of these half are in the trenches, while the other half are in cantonments resting. I keep the games you sent for the men in the trenches, because being of better quality and stronger than those I had, they are better fitted for this purpose. I keep them in a conveniently central shelter where the men can easily come and borrow them. In this way my dear soldiers, even those who are in the trenches, will have something to amuse them during the long hours in the shelters. They will not fall so easy a prey then to their sad memories, which have a grievous effect on their morale. If only you knew, Madame, how welcome these games are, and the warm thanks I receive from the bottom of their hearts, you would feel a little rewarded. Their gratitude is simple and most sincere. It is expressed in the hearty handshakes I receive—it is such a pleasure to them to be assured that some one is thinking of them. And these thanks are all meant for you; for I always tell them who are their benefactors. With their thanks, I want also to join my own, for a true pastor's heart always beats in union with his flock. Their happiness and sorrow, their joys and griefs are also mine, and my greatest joy is to be able to mitigate a little their sufferings, to throw a ray of sunlight into their clouded days. And this joy you have given me."

3. From the Matron of a large hospital for 1,000 patients: "We had a most unfortunate fire here last week. It started on Monday afternoon in the hut where the washing is done....Unluckily some of the waterpipes were still frozen and there was no water very near, and the fire spread to the store room, where we keep all our clothing and comforts for the men. Some things were saved, but nearly all the shirts, socks, pyjamas, and other useful things we have to fall back on were burnt. The fire engines came just in time to save our quarters catching fire. The men rushed in and cleared it of all our belongings, most of them being thrown out of the windows. Luckily the fire spread no farther, but the two huts were completely destroyed and our quarters swamped with water and many windows smashed. The nurses worked hard with brooms and buckets, and we managed to camp in our rooms that night. Fortunately the fire was never anywhere near the wards, so there was no danger for the patients, but you can imagine how lost we feel without our stores. I am glad to say that on account of the great cold we had distributed nearly all the woollen comforts, and those good dressing gowns you sent us are in use in the wards. Besides the shirts, socks and pyjamas, I think we miss most the slippers, which we are always being asked for."

(We are sending six bales of clothing and one hundred pairs of felt slippers at once, but there are nearly 1,000 patients!) Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 8 by 12 in. up to 14 by 24 in., and all intermediate sizes, with a string run in the neck.
Pyjamas (urgent).
Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.
Pants, vests.
Towels of all sorts.

For the Maternity Home at Calais:—

Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).
Chemises for women.
Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

SLAVERY IN GERMAN EAST AFRICA.

The following Memorial has been sent to the Right Hon. Walter H. Long, M.P., His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, on behalf of the Committee of the Anti-Slavery Society:—

Sir,—We beg to appeal to His Majesty's Government to issue a proclamation declaring the freedom of the 185,000 slaves in the territory, which until recently was known as the German East African Protectorate, and is now under the administration of British officials. We make this appeal because we hold it to be intolerable that slave owning should survive under British rule.

The resolution submitted to the German Reichstag on March 19, 1914, asked that the complete emancipation of these slaves should take place by January 1, 1920. This resolution was resisted upon three main grounds: first, because the slaves were "domestic slaves"; secondly, because if a slave could establish ill-treatment he thereby secured his liberty; and finally, because of the cost of compensating the owners which would be involved by complete emancipation, namely, £400,000 in 1915, and £275,000 in 1920.*

We submit that "domestic" slavery is indefensible, either upon ethical or economic grounds, and no less an authority than the late Lord Cromer has declared (referring to slave traffic in the Soudan):—

"If the utility of the Soudan, considered on its own productive and economic merits, is not already proved to the satisfaction of the world—if it is not already clear that the re-occupation of the country has inflicted, more perhaps than any other event of modern times, a deadly blow to the abominable traffic in slaves and to the institution of domestic slavery, which is only one degree less hateful than that traffic—it may confidently be asserted that we are on the threshold of convincing proof."†

That the slaves in "German East Africa" have suffered under this system of bondage is demonstrated by the fact that no less than 2,221 purchased their liberty in 1913.* We submit that it would be a grave departure from modern British Colonial practice to maintain a system of slavery from which men and women could only escape by establishing physical ill-treatment or by making a monetary payment.

Our Committee holds to the view that it is impossible to maintain a system of slave owning without the inevitable concomitant of slave trading to keep up the supply. This fact, established by past experience, finds further support in the admission that so late as 1912 slaves were actually "smuggled into the Protectorate from the Belgian Congo and from the Western portion of Uganda."*

If it is maintained that abolition would place the old and helpless members of the former slave community in a position of dependence on charity, our Society would doubtless be prepared to consider proposals to assist in the establishment of an institution in which freed slaves could be received until able to earn their own living or be provided for in some other way.

His Majesty's Government is doubtless aware that the chiefs of "German East Africa" have been compelled to provide labour for the European plantations. It cannot be questioned that much of this labour supplied by the chiefs has been drawn from the enslaved community; neither can it be denied that the labourers on the plantations have been subjected to the greatest cruelty. The methods of obtaining labour are shortly described in evidence before the East Africa Labour Commission of 1912-13 by Dr. Lessi of Nakuru: "The chiefs were notified as to the amount of labour that was to be supplied"; while another witness, Masai Mchaga, of the Kilimanjaro District in German East Africa, said: "If the Government or other people required labour, the chief was told to supply it, and if a man refused to go the Government punished him."

The existence of this system of forced labour was admitted by Dr. Solf, whilst the treatment to which the forced labourers were then subjected on the plantations was disclosed in the German Reichstag on February 18, 1914. On this occasion a Centre Party Deputy declared that he would vote no more money for the Colonies unless energetic measures were taken to protect the natives from ill-treatment and forced labour. There had, he said, "been more loss of life on the plantations than in the slave hunts in former years."

The Committee of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society, convinced that national and international opinion would expect a declaration of freedom for these 185,000 slaves by the British Government in accordance with our traditions, for this reason and in the interest alike of sound policy, no less than for moral and economic reasons, urges His Majesty's Government to issue such proclamation of freedom without delay.

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient humble servants,

T. F. V. Buxton, President.
Travers Buxton, Secretary.
John H. Harris, Organising Secretary.

* Cd. 7620–51. † Italics ours.

WINIFRED HOUSE CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME.

Mrs. Munro, Secretary of the Invalid Children's Aid Association, presided at the Annual Meeting on Wednesday last. She spoke, she said, from intimate knowledge of the work of the Home, not simply from what might be learnt from statistics and reports. These, after all, could tell little of the real treatment and loving care of the children. Their Association had sent 21 patients out of the 35 received during the year, and they would have been very glad to have sent the whole 35.

Mr. Ion Pritchard presented the Committee's report and Mr. W. M. Blyths the financial statement.

The several medical reports, one and all, tell of the improved health of the patients and often of the complete recovery from very serious afflictions, although sometimes only after years of care and treatment. As regards the founder's wish for a home atmosphere, visitors have many times been impressed by the happiness of the children in spite of their ailments. Indeed at one of our annual meetings the late Mr. Wade, a good friend of ours, said that in respect to the children returning home after recovery, if he were a child at Winifred House he would steadily refuse to get well at all.

Attention is especially called to the length of stay reported, emphasising the object and importance of the Home, and that it must not be regarded as an ordinary convalescent home. Two patients have been with us four years, four nearly three years, and two for two years. The long treatment must be borne in mind when the number of patients received is compared with that of somewhat similar institutions. Several times during the year children have been taken by the nurses to the hospitals, Great Northern Central, Guy's, Bartholomew's, and Royal Free, to be seen by the surgeons whose patients they were before coming to Winifred House, and, if judged necessary, for operation.

As a whole the year has been an anxious and strenuous one for the medical officers, the Lady Superintendent, Miss Groser, and nurses, and to them all the heartiest thanks of the Committee and friends for their faithful, willing services are offered. There are many other friends, a list of whose names occupies a whole page of report, who by their labours and gifts have contributed to the success and happiness of our Children's Home and so helped to carry out the objects and wishes of its founder.

Mr. Pallister Young, in moving a vote of thanks to the medical officers and nursing staff, spoke of the real cause of the Home's success. Mention had been made of the year's milk bill of £91, but this did not include the milk of human kindness so liberally expended.

Miss Holland and other friends spoke, and a very pleasant meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

The following resolutions were passed at a meeting of the College Committee on Monday, March 19, 1917, the members rising in their places:—That the Committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College profoundly regret the loss they have sustained in the death of Mr. James Rait Beard, J.P., President during 1900-01, and also during 1904, when he took a prominent part in organising the removal to Summerville, and Treasurer from 1886 to 1914.

They desire to convey to the widow and family their sincere sympathy with them in their bereavement, and to express at the same time their hearty appreciation of the work he did for the College.

The worthy son of a worthy father, who was (with the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, M.A.) the founder of the College, he inherited and maintained a deep interest in the Institution, which he faithfully served with bright spirit and untiring energy.

That the Committee of the Unitarian Home Missionary College deeply regret the loss they have sustained in the death of Mr. Henry Marsden, J.P., a Vice-President of the College, and a member of the Committee since 1905.

They desire to convey to the members of his family their sincere sympathy with them in their bereavement, and to express to them their hearty appreciation of Mr. Marsden's services to the College, especially in connection with the House Committee.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Burnley.—Mr. Harry Taylor, at present in charge of the Burnley Church, has returned to the Chairman of the Northern Advisory Board the certificate as a Lay Worker which was issued to him last year. He states that he is about to take up work of national importance, and will leave our movement.

Blackpool: South Shore.—Mr. Peter Nicholas, a well-known resident of Blackpool, pas ed away, after a short illness, on March 16, at the age of 68, the funeral service at the Blackpool Cemetery being conducted by the Rev. B. C. Constable on Tuesday last. Mr. Nicholas had been connected with the South Shore Unitarian Free Church in former years, and became a member once again within the last eighteen months. He had long served the Unitarian churches in Lancashire and district as an acceptable lay preacher. He was a man of specially cheerful ways, good humour, and kindly disposition—an ardent reader of books, a student of Theosophy, a thinker of broad and open mind, a man of philosophic spirit, a friend to those in trouble, a dispeller of gloom and despondency, and a bringer of light and gladness. For many years he had been connected with the leather trade in Manchester, but retired some time ago, and went to live in Blackpool. He will be greatly missed by a large number of friends and acquaintances to whom his genial presence was always welcome, and by none more deeply than the members of Unitarian churches in Lancashire and district who knew him so well as the leader of their devotions. It was a great blow to him when he lost his wife three or four years ago. He has left three daughters and a son to mourn his loss.

Colne.—Two well attended "At Homes" were held in the schoolroom of the Unitarian Church on Thursday and Saturday, March 8 and 10. Extremely good concerts had been arranged, and the effort was very successful, about £16 having been added to the Church Funds as a result of it. On Sunday afternoon, March 11, the annual distribution of prizes took place. Mr. J. B. French handed prizes to the successful scholars, and gave a short address.

Coseley.—A most successful concert was given in the Old Meeting schoolroom on Saturday, March 17, by Mr. R. A. Clarke and party, of Birmingham, assisted by members of the Old Meeting Church Choir. The programme included two operettas entitled 'The Student and the King' and 'Lord Acrepole,' or 'A Legend of Christmas Eve,' both of which were written and composed by Mr. Clarke.

Framlingham.—The death has occurred at Bristol in his 80th year of Mr. William Barker, who lived for many years at Framlingham, where he was in business, until he removed to Brighton about ten years ago. Mr. Barker, who continued to be one of the trustees of the Framlingham Chapel, was endeared to many members of the Brighton congregation, with whom he enjoyed cordial friendship, by his genial kindness, and his death will be much regretted. Owing to the death of his wife and his own failure in health he had latterly stayed at a convalescent home at Bristol, where he had relations, and it was here that he died. His body was conveyed to Brighton, and the funeral took place on March 12, the service being conducted by the Rev. Priestley Prime.

Halstead.—The annual business meeting was held in the Free Christian Church on Sunday, the 11th inst., presided over by Mr. Waller (of Norwich) who had previously taken the service. It was reported that the average attendance was the same as last year, and the financial position, though not quite so good as last year, was considered satisfactory. Owing to the difficulty experienced in obtaining preachers from London who could be away over Sunday night, it was decided to have the service at 3 P.M., until the end of the war.

Leicester.—At the annual meeting held on Monday, the 5th inst., at the Free Christian Church, a silver rose-bowl and vases were presented to Mr. W. F. Price by the members of the congregation as a token of their esteem and grateful regard on his retirement from the position of Secretary of the Church, after twenty-five years of uninterrupted service, to take up the office of President.

Manchester: Failsworth.—On Saturday last about 130 wounded soldiers from local hospitals were entertained to tea at the Dob Lane Schools, under the auspices of the War Comforts Committee connected with the Chapel and Sunday school. Before tea an admirable concert was given, and afterwards singing was interspersed with dancing. Artistes, and musicians in the Band willingly gave their services for the occasion. The appreciation of the soldiers was very evident. This is the third entertainment given to wounded soldiers in these schools.

Tunbridge Wells.—The Unitarian movement at Tunbridge Wells has lost an enthusiastic friend and supporter in Mr. Threadgold, of Calverley Road, whose death took place last week. Mr. Threadgold, who was 50 years of age, originally came from Lincolnshire, and was engaged in the ironmongery business. He took a keen interest in many public movements connected with the town, including the Charity Organisation Society, and, in addition to this, devoted much of his time to farming and was a great lover of horses. The funeral took place on Monday, March 19.

Tavistock.—The funeral of the late Major-General Jacob, whose death was referred to in The Inquirer last week, took place on Wednesday at the Plymouth Road Cemetery, the procession being headed by the band of the Dorset Regiment and a firing party from the same regiment with arms reversed. The coffin, which was covered with the Union Jack, was drawn on a gun-carriage. The mourners included: Major-General Jacob's brother and son—Col. Sir Swinton Jacob, K.C.I.E., and Lieut.-General Sir Claude Jacob, K.C.B.; his wife, Lady Jacob, (daughter-in-law), and the Rev. H. G. Le Neven, Vicar of Tavistock. The Rev. A. Lancaster, minister of the Abbey Chapel, conducted the service in the little church at the cemetery and also at the graveside. Three volleys were fired over the grave, and the 'Last Post' sounded. Large crowds of people lined the streets, and the funeral was numerously attended.

A New Source of Food.

The Master of Christ's College, Cambridge, wrote a week or two ago to The Times pointing out that we have an enormous, almost an unlimited supply of starch, of which there is a shortage, in the underground stems or rhizomes of the common bracken-fern (Pteris aquilina). Starch from these roots, he explained, is used for food in many parts of the world, and it is a well-known fact that the Maoris of New Zealand—a very fine race—nourish themselves on starch from a similar source. Since this letter was written Mr. J. E. Purvis, University Lecturer in Chemistry, has made some experiments on a small scale with a view to discovering how much starch is really to be found in the underground stem of the bracken-fern. From one method of treating the crude rhizomes he obtained 1.7 per cent, from another 2.02, and from a third sample 2.33. The percentage of starch does not compare with that of the potato, which varies from 9.8 to 18.7 per cent, according to the season of the year, neither is the starch of first-class quality; still, it is there, and if it can be shown that the amount to be obtained justifies the employment of labour to dig it up, it might be put to various uses instead of being wasted, as at present. The advantages are that it costs nothing to produce, as bracken is self-sown and requires no manuring or tending of any kind, while its eradication would be welcomed by the agriculturist. It is suggested that, prepared in different ways, it might be used in the soft food of fowls and pigs.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

IRISH LINEN ROLLER TOWELS. Extra strong and durable quality. 2½ yards long by 17 inches, 1*s.* 5*d.* each, or three for 4*s.* 2d. (postage 5*d.*). Bargain List free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any kind. Up to 7*s.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 12*s.* on silver, 15*s.* on gold; 2*l.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any?

I will pay 5*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. What is the use of artificial teeth that you do not wear lying in a drawer? But don't be misled by higher advertised prices. Far better write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any make of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Bankers: London City and Midland Bank, Ltd. When sending kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO., 29 London St., SOUTHPORT, Lancs.

ESTABLISHED 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 24, 1917.
 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3900.
NEW SERIES, No. 1003.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

2s. 6d. net (postage 4d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—APRIL.

SCIENCE IS ONE OF THE HUMANITIES By Prof J. B. Baillie
PUNISHMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION By L. P. Jacks
AFTER TWENTY-FIVE YEARS By Sir Oliver Lodge
AMERICA'S SELF-REVELATION By Prof. Hartley B. Alexander
NATIONAL HATE By A. D. McLaren
DRUDGERY AND EDUCATION By Edmond Holmes
THE RELIGIOUS PHILOSOPHY OF VLADIMIR SOLOVYOV By Mrs. J. N. Duddington
FIVE NEW RELIGIOUS CULTS IN BRITISH NEW GUINEA By E. W. P. Chinnery and A. C. Hadden
FORCE AND THE CONQUEST OF EVIL IN CHRISTIAN ETHICS By G. F. Barbour
THE LOVE WHICH IS NOT THE FULFILLING OF THE LAW By Constance L. Maynard
NATIONAL TRAINING By Reginald F. Rynd
DISCUSSIONS, SURVEY, and SIGNED REVIEWS

SUBSCRIPTIONS:
10s. per Annum, post free.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.2.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARECASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawible in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April.

1. Rev. Lieut.-Col C. S. BULLOCK, of Ottawa, Canada. (Subject of Sermon: "What seek ye?")
8. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.
15. Rev. WILLIAM JELLIE, B.A., of Southport.
22. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
29. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING of Subscribers and Friends will be held at Stamford Street Chapel, London, S.E., on MONDAY, April 2, 1917, at 7.45 P.M., when the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE will preside.

Tea, to which friends are cordially invited, will be provided at 7 p.m.

A. A. TAYLER, Hon. Sec.

THEISTIC CHURCH.

The PULPIT of this CHURCH is VACANT, and applications are invited for the post of MINISTER, to commence in SEPTEMBER next. Salary proposed at rate of £400 per annum. Applications should be sent to me, giving age, degrees, and full particulars of present and past career and appointments.

G. W. JOHNSON.

14 South Square, Gray's Inn,
London, W.C.1.

Crown 8vo 216 pp 2s. 6d. net.

ETHICAL & RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS OF THE WAR.

Addresses by Prof. GILBERT MURRAY, Sir HENRY JONES, Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, Prof. J. H. MUIRHEAD, Dr. P. H. WICKSTEED, Principal L. P. JACKS, and others.

Edited by Dr. J. E. CARPENTER.

"The general value of this little book, beyond the particular merit of its constituent parts, is that it comes from the Extreme Left in English Thought, both in politics and religion."—The Spectator.

LINDSEY PRESS, 5 Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A. Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4 000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
REV. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 30 Frognal Lane, Hampstead London, N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Wednesday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Wednesday midday.

SUNDAY, April 1.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Mr. V. A. DEMANT.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. JOHN BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 7, Rev. BERTRAM LISTER, M.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON; 6.30, Rev. Dr. F. W. G. FOAT.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. F. G. FINCHAM.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. J. P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Lieut.-Col. C. S. BULLOCK.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE; 6.30, Rev. G. TOPPING.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIETON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. DR. HARGROVE, M.A.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. C. M. WRIGHT, M.A.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, Miss HELEN BROOKE HERFORD; 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. H. TAYLOR.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. MCLACHLAN, M.A., B.D.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. ROPER, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

GOOD FRIDAY.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 11, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE, M.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.

DEATHS.

CUNLIFFE.—On the 21st inst., at Rhos-on-Sea, Agnes, widow of the late George Cunliffe, of Bolton, in her 79th year.

SIMPSON.—On March 8, at Brooklyn House, Thorneywood Lane, Nottingham, Clara Simpson, daughter of the late John Bishop of Dorchester, Dorset, aged 82 years.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, LADY NURSE.—Bright, well-educated young lady, 20-25 years; Norland or Princess Christian College training preferred, but experience not essential. For girl 4 years and boy 13 months. Small household in country near Buxton. Manchester within easy reach. Salary according to qualifications.—MRS. S. P. GRUNDY, St. Catherine's Hotel, Fowey, Cornwall.

WANTED, DAILY GOVERNESS for two little girls. Board and lodging found.—MRS. FAIRFIELD, 202 Preston Road, Brighton.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 *Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.*4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N. W.*3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 147
THE PROSPECTS OF REUNION . . . 149
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 150
TO THE YOUNG RECRUIT 150
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Call to National Service . . . 151
The Moral Tone in Munition Factories . 151
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
Clips from a Poet's Workshop . . . 151
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 152
MEMORIAL NOTICES :—
The Late Mr. Walter Baily. . . . 152
The Late Prof. A. Mason Worthington . 153
Second Lieutenant David Jacob Lewis . 153
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 153
The Manchester District Association . 154
Ministers of Religion and National Service 155
America and the War 155
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 155
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 156

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

WE are sure that Mrs. Allen's notes on the work of the Belgian Hospital Fund, which we publish to-day, will give great pleasure to our readers. Fifty parcels in one week, after the Fund has been going on continuously for more than two years without any slackening of effort, is a good record. Naturally the work is not as exciting as it was in the early stages, and it has lost the appeal of novelty, but it is going on quietly and strongly in numerous centres, and we are proud of the reliance which is placed upon our ability and willingness to help. The new motor ambulance which has just gone out to Calais will be a great boon, and will make the name of our Fund still more familiar in the streets of that busy town. Mrs. Allen was due to leave London on Thursday for a tour of inspection among the hospitals, and we all wish her a safe return. Travelling in these days has its discomforts and its perils, but no one thinks of these things now when they lie in the path of duty.

* * *

PERHAPS we may take this opportunity of pointing out once again how close all this work for the sick and wounded of our Belgian allies is to our hearts. We have had to throw our strength into many other things connected with the war, and above all into the effort to put our faith in God and the spiritual force of the soul into the stern duties of the hour. We have fought hard against weariness of spirit and the temptation to withdraw our eyes from our own part in this mighty struggle for freedom, which never relaxes night or day. While the battle rages furiously around us and the issue is still undecided there is no other way of loyalty to the deepest instincts of religion and duty. But all the time our joy has gone into the work of charity and helpfulness, which the miseries of the war have created, and we have tried always to combine the stern summons to terrible duties with the inexhaustible claims of Christian pity and loving-kindness. In any case our readers may rejoice that they have helped to bear some heavy burdens and to bind up that which was broken. For ourselves we have been unable to discover any better or more practical way of helping to recreate a desolated world.

* * *

THE news from Russia continues to be exciting, and all lovers of freedom are on the tiptoe of expectation. At present public opinion seems to be setting steadily in the direction of a republic. Tsardom has gone, we hope beyond recall, and a constitutional monarchy is the growth of generations, and cannot be planted suddenly in an alien soil. The action of the Grand Dukes in surrendering their estates voluntarily, before there has been any public demand for confiscation, is very significant. It shows the strength of the new feeling of equality in Russia, that even in the case of men of royal blood citizenship counts for more than ancestral dignity.

* * *

No body of men seems likely to benefit more from the Revolution than the Russian Jews, and incidentally a thorny domestic question may be settled for ourselves. Many Russian Jews in this country are undoubtedly political refugees, while others have probably come here for purposes of trade, and with the trader's instinct are glad to avail themselves of an excuse for holding aloof from military service. The whole problem will be simplified now that the dark cloud of oppression has gone, and we hope that the refugees themselves will be eager to return to take their part in the war. At a meeting of Russian Jews held in Whitechapel last Sunday, Lord Sheffield spoke some wise and timely words to those who were anxious to return to Russia. He advised them not to be in a hurry to apply self-government in ways familiar to themselves before self-government had been fully attained. "Secure freedom of the press," he said, "freedom of speech, of combination, of religious belief, of national aspirations, and when by a victorious war you have helped us to secure freedom for Europe and the suppression of Prussian militarism, then welcome all honest men, and by earnest thought and full discipline help to build up a stable political organisation."

* * *

IT will be a matter of deep interest during the next few months to watch, so far as we are able to do so, the reactions of Russian freedom upon political life and social unrest in Germany. Already there are signs that conservative opinion is alarmed, while Vorwaerts regards the overthrow of Tsarism as a gigantic moral loss for Germany's war policy. In these times, it says, Germany must not in the eyes of the world remain the State which in the development of its political system has remained behind all the others.

* * *

IN an able article in The Manchester Guardian, bearing the familiar initials

L. T. H., it is anticipated that the Russian Revolution will do a great deal to weaken the enthusiasm of the German socialists for the war. Prof. Hobhouse suggests that an appeal should be made to them, "by those indirect means which even a state of war does not wholly annihilate," to partake in the work of general liberation.

> The German autocracy [he writes] now stands out as the one great centre of military despotism, the fountain of the trouble which is deluging Europe with blood. Can it so stand alone and unsupported? If the German people in their turn were assured of internal freedom and unobstructed commerce, would they continue to pour out their blood for those who use them, in their own phrase, as cannon fodder? If the Prussians would still do so, would the Saxons, the Bavarians, the Rhinelanders, and the Austrians? In a word might there not be a German debacle, more complete and far-reaching than any military defeat, a total break-up of the German State principle which has thwarted and marred the whole development of Europe for half a century, a victory of the Allies beyond the wildest dreams of 1914? If so, the resettlement of Europe would be achieved, not by the mechanical device of superimposing a League of Peace upon rival groups dominated by military ambitions and nationalist hatreds, but by a principle of mutual respect for internal liberty and freedom of commercial and intellectual intercourse, out of which the League itself would arise spontaneously as the natural expression of a new and more harmonious order.

* * *

Among the numerous resolutions of greeting to the new Russian Government, which have been passed in this country, we are glad to notice one from the annual meeting of the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches. The resolution, which was moved by the Rev. C. Peach, and seconded by the Rev. N. Anderton, is in the following terms:—"This meeting hails with profound satisfaction the establishment of Constitutional Government in Russia. It records its grateful appreciation of the inestimable contributions which the great Russian people have made to art, science, literature, and music, as well as to religion, and it offers its respectful greetings on their entrance into the fraternity of free peoples."

* * *

As we anticipated, it has been found impossible to continue the American Relief Work in Belgium. Once again we must express our deep gratitude and admiration for the splendid service to humanity which has been rendered by this noble band of American citizens under circumstances of exceptional difficulty. In an official statement, which has been issued, it is pointed out that for over two years it has been the single-minded purpose of the American Government and the Commission to see these ten million civilians in Belgium and France fed, and with this end in view the Americans concerned have submitted to the restrictions imposed upon them by the German authorities, which, under ordinary circumstances would never have been tolerated. Now, however, all special facilities have been withdrawn, and several of the Commission's relief ships have been attacked without warning by German submarines, while a protest addressed to Berlin has not been answered. "It is felt," the statement continues, "that the American staff of the Commission can no longer serve with advantage in Belgium. Although a verbal promise has been made that members of the Commission will be permitted to leave, if they so desire, the German Government's observance of its other undertakings has not been such that the Department feels warranted in accepting responsibility for leaving these American citizens in German-occupied territory. This Government has approved the proposal of the Netherlands Government to send into Belgium a certain number of Netherlands subjects to carry on the work of the American staff."

* * *

No words are needed to condemn the latest German outrage in sinking the hospital ship "Asturias." People who wage war against the Red Cross have broken the most sacred covenants of humanity and religion. Every true man must hold the perpetrators of such deeds in deep abhorrence. We are disturbed, however, to find that there is some revival of the talk about reprisals. Of course we are bound to do everything possible to protect the lives of our wounded men, and we should be quite justified in placing a certain number of German officers upon hospital ships, if it would be likely to act as a deterrent. But we doubt whether it would have any effect except to increase the severity of the treatment of our own men who are prisoners in Germany. There is no good beginning a game of reprisals, unless we are prepared to throw all scruples to the winds, and that we cannot and must not do. It is one of the cases where the instincts of goodness and the dictates of prudence seem to us to be in strict accord. It is only what is worst in ourselves which finds any satisfaction in answering shamefulness with shamefulness, when proper methods of punishment and prevention are, for the moment, beyond our reach.

The chief event in our home affairs this week has undoubtedly been the vote on Mr. Asquith's franchise resolution in the House of Commons on Wednesday, carrying with it the practical certainty of a moderate instalment of Women's Suffrage at an early date. Mr. Asquith confessed frankly that he had changed his mind on the subject. Possibly some ardent advocates will be annoyed with him for treating the whole subject as one of political expediency. But after all most of our changes in methods of government are of that order. Extensions of the franchise, except at times of Revolution when the whole of an ancient constitution may be consigned to the flames, usually come about because public opinion is convinced that they will promote the welfare of the community. We do not see that anything that has happened in the war has altered the claims of Women's Suffrage from the point of view of abstract argument. On that side of the question there is nothing new to be said, and it is not on these lines that the two sides are likely to come closer together. But undoubtedly the war has convinced many people that the future happiness of the country depends upon the close association of men and women in public work, and so they support the change on the excellent ground of its expediency. Let it be remembered that expediency is an honourable word and sometimes carries us further than ardent appeals to abstract principle.

* * *

The letter, which Mr. A. G. Tarrant sends us on the subject of moral tone in munition factories, gives us a more cheerful view than is prevalent in some quarters; and we are very glad that this side of the case should be presented in such a persuasive fashion. We wish, however, that our correspondent had been content simply to tell us what he has met with in his own experience without using the word "protest." We shall only arrive at the truth of a complicated problem and be able to adopt the wise policy which is based upon knowledge, when we look steadily at all the facts. It is easy to distinguish between unworthy rumour and the grave words of men of knowledge and experience. The latter do not invite us to protest but to consideration. While we honour Mr. Tarrant's warm-hearted championship, and rejoice to believe that in many places the moral tone is as good as he describes, we are not prepared to neglect the warning of Sir Thomas Barlow that the evils to which young girls are exposed at the present time are very serious.

THE PROSPECTS OF REUNION.

We fear that the freedom from interference which marked Dean Henson's appearance at the City Temple last Sunday can hardly be taken as a precedent. Whatever remonstrance may have been addressed to him in private, no inhibition from the Bishop of London stood in his way. But would a similar freedom of action be conceded to the parochial clergy, if they began to preach the Gospel in unconsecrated buildings and to fraternise openly in solemn acts of worship with their Nonconformist brethren? We wish that more of them would make the attempt at a time when public opinion is setting strongly against bigotry, and even the official mind is rather timid about interference with unconventional acts of fellowship. It would require a certain amount of courage, and there would be none of the compensations of popular applause. But these are days when quiet bravery is demanded of every man, and without it it is hard to see how official religion is to be stripped of its formalities and become a quickening spirit in the life of the nation.

But acts of fellowship are of little use unless they spring out of a deep conviction of union in the things which matter most for the life of the soul. Between men who believe that the meaning of Christianity is summed up in their own dogma and ritual, and those who follow the New Testament in treating these things as quite secondary compared with purity of heart and the life of love and obedience there can be little agreement, and practical co-operation must be strictly limited. If the prospects of reunion are brighter than they have been in the past it is because, struggling up through all our doctrines and consecrated habits of worship, there is a growing conviction that it is not the technical thought and language of religion, but the imitation of Christ and loyalty to his spirit of love and sacrifice which unite men to God and knit them in happy and fruitful fellowship with one another. It is to little purpose that we dwell so much upon the weakness and disgrace of our unhappy divisions, unless we proclaim with kindling conviction that here are the love and goodness, the very life of God in the soul of man, which can destroy every trace of bitterness and save us from sterile isolation from our fellow-men.

We do not know how far these sentiments would commend themselves to Dean Henson. Possibly his incisive mind would regard them as vague and lacking in theological precision. It is true that in his sermon last Sunday he pointed out that a rift had appeared between the best conscience and intelligence of the modern world and the Churches which claim to represent on earth the religion of Christ. That rift was widening daily, so that there arose the awful possibility of a total dissidence. Could it, he asked, be filled up? Could the Christian society regain the moral supremacy which was essential to its life? Or was it destined to shrivel and to pass, while the march of humanity proceeded, independent alike of its pretentions to lead and of its ability to follow? The challenge could hardly be put in a stronger or more telling way, but then, if we may trust the report we have seen, Dr. Henson threw himself back upon the heritage of the Reformation as the ground which he and the evangelical Nonconformist possess in common. But what does this mean? Is it a method of retaining a residuum of traditional dogma, while matters of Church order are treated as indifferent? Or is it a real attempt to break clean away from the false experiments of the past and to find the only possible basis of union in spiritual freedom and the deep experiences of the Christian soul? The Churches of the Reformation no less than those of the Catholic order need to throw off their fetters and enter upon newness of life.

No true ideal of Christian union will ever be hostile to differences of taste in worship or to sharp distinctions of thought. We do not want intellectual uniformity in any domain of human activity, and perhaps least of all in religion. A man who has not the courage to differ from his neighbour soon ceases to think at all.

> In death the many becomes one; in life the one becomes many.
>
> Religion will be one when God is dead.

These words, taken from the new volume by Sir Rabindranath Tagore which we notice elsewhere, contain a wholesome warning of the mischief that is done to our higher life by the apostles of uniformity. But after all the liberty to differ is inherent in most of the activities of the human mind, and religion, after long generations of embittered controversy and sharp division, can only find the better way when it surrenders every attempt at intellectual and ecclesiastical domination, and gives its chief energy to the strengthening of the things which appeal to our deepest instincts of reverence and adoration. We all acknowledge the supremacy of these things when we stand in the presence of Jesus Christ. We all feel their power when God revives us in the midst of trouble and arms us with new strength in our souls. In our deepest loyalties and our holiest affections we are already far closer to one another than we know.

We cannot close this brief reference to a topic which is of absorbing interest and urgency to all for whom religion is a matter not of the letter but of the spirit, without some mention of a recent book in which the view that union is only possible on the basis of Christian righteousness receives strong and persuasive support. We refer to 'Church Divisions and Christianity' by Canon W. L. Grane.* Amid the various topics that come up for discussion, some of them possibly of greater interest to Anglican than to Nonconformist readers, this first principle of fellowship is brought again and again to the test of human experience and primitive Christian teaching. After pointing out that what keeps men still in touch with organised Christianity is mainly their true instinct "that the primary work of Churches is to nourish religious life, and not merely to perpetuate a certain brand of theological opinion," Canon Grane continues:—

> "Only as the Church of Christ more and more justifies that view by the balance and proportion of her teaching will it ever approach the peculiar power of Jesus to make doctrine effective in human hearts and lives. Another consequence of a wholesome change in this direction would be a wonderful and immediate approximation of all separated Christian bodies to one another. For nothing would more help the general discovery that Religious Fellowship ought not to be determined by identity of Church polity, or by uniformity of intellectual opinion, but can only finally be based on the one really crucial unity which dwells deep down in the underlying life of the spirit....It was no doubt because uniformity of opinion, even had it been attainable, would always be valueless as a religious test, that our Lord equipped His Church with a very different kind of test, namely 'Ye shall know them by their fruits.'"

* London: Macmillan & Co., 5s. net.

The same point of view finds clear expression in many other passages. It is indeed the cardinal principle which determines Canon Grane's method of approach to the whole problem of unity, and it fills his pages with the life-giving breath of wisdom and charity.

"The religious estrangements which have destroyed the Church's witness to Unity from the beginning until now, derive their meaning and sustenance, and usually their origin, not from those inward and spiritual verities on which Christ insisted as the source and fundament of true religion, but from the doubtful domain of institutional and hierarchical theory or the misty realms of speculative dogma."—"From a low intellectual standpoint differences of rite and ceremonial are regarded as matters on which salvation turns; thus peaceful inquiry and discussion are ruled out and men rush at once to arms."—"Christianity is not a philosophy; it is the revelation of a spirit capable of creating a certain sort of mind and life. Jesus neither solved the mystery of evil nor the problem of pain; but when he called God—'Father,'—from the torturing Cross, He did more to help men to obey His saving word—'Have faith in God'—than if He had endowed us with a knowledge of all mysteries."

Could we have a better and at bottom a more hopeful message of peace than this? It is a plea for "putting first things first." As we listen to it, it excites us with the promise of a larger fellowship than we have ever known. It has in it the potency of life which is renewed continually in joy and power, while dogmas and rites change and pass away. Compared with this bold and uncompromising return to the imperishable things of Christian love and goodness, Dean Henson's historical appeal to the first principles of the Reformation leaves us a little cold.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief:
Lord, I repent, help mine impenitence:
Hide not Thy face from me, nor spurn me hence,
Nor utterly despise me in my grief;
Nor say me nay, who worship with the thief
Bemoaning my so long-lost innocence.
Ah me! my penitence a fresh offence,
Too tardy and too tepid and too brief.
Lord, must I perish, I who look to Thee?
Look Thou upon me, bid me live, not die;
Say "Come," say not "Depart," tho' Thou art just:
Yea, Lord, be mindful how out of the dust
I look to Thee while Thou dost look on me,
Thou face to face with me and eye to eye

Christina Rossetti.

We are, and must be, one and all, burdened with faults in this world: but the time will come soon when, I trust, we shall put them off in putting off our corruptible bodies; when debasement and sin will fall from us with this cumbrous frame of flesh, and only the spark of the spirit will remain—the impalpable principle of life and thought, pure as when it left the Creator to inspire the creature; whence it came it will return; perhaps again to be communicated to some being higher than man—perhaps to pass through gradations of glory from the pale human soul to brighten to the seraph! Surely it will never, on the contrary, be suffered to degenerate from man to fiend? No; I cannot believe that; I hold another creed; which no one ever taught me, and which I seldom mention; but in which I delight, and to which I cling: for it extends hope to all: it makes Eternity a rest—a mighty home, not a terror and an abyss. Besides, with this creed, I can so clearly distinguish between the criminal and his crime; I can so sincerely forgive the first while I abhor the last: with this creed revenge never worries my heart, degradation never too deeply disgusts me, injustice never crushes me too low: I live in calm, looking to the end.

Charlotte Bronte ('Jane Eyre').

O God, our gracious Father, we thank Thee for Thy protecting care of us during the past night. At the beginning of this another day we seek Thy guidance and Thy grace. In every difficulty, trial, and temptation make us mindful that Thou art near, and keep us lest we fall. May we be diligent, faithful, and pure in all things. Deliver us from all selfishness. Help us to care for the needs of others; and may we ever follow in the steps of him who loved us and gave himself for us. Amen.

TO THE YOUNG RECRUIT.

The Rev. Tyssul Davis, B.A., of St. Saviourgate Chapel, York, has delivered the following address "to the youths of 18 to whom the call has come to join the Colours and train for military service":—

While yet so young, the imperative needs of your country have called you to a life which none of you would, under ordinary circumstances, have chosen. And those who love you have let you go with much sadness and not without anxious solicitude and misgiving. With your going goes a portion of their heart, of their life. They are lending their dearest to help bear the burden of a nation engaged in a terrific struggle. But not of our pang of separation, but of your welfare we are now thinking. Life in camp, training for military service, you will find very different from life in school, or college, or bank, or in some industrial service. The institution has a host of recognised imperfections which bear hardly upon the young, and especially upon those reared in refined homes. (1) There will be deprivations that have not annoyed you before. (2) There will be trials of your temper through the dominance of aggressive natures, through fetters upon your customary activities, and numerous difficulties you have not encountered before. (3) There will be fresh perils and temptations that have not faced you before. And they will be both harder to endure and easier to endure for the same reason, that a host of others share them; where many do things it is easier to do and harder to resist. A high ideal is easier where many struggle to follow it, and vice is easier where many practise it. You never have had such a testing of your moral courage as now awaits you, of your independence of mind and will, and your personal honour. And this is what I urge upon you, that you will seize these new assaults as opportunities for putting forth your native strength, your invincible resolution that nothing shall make you swerve from the straight road upon which your feet are set. What matters it that others succumb, you must not ; face ridicule, face opprobrium rather than let go your code, your conviction of what is due to yourself, what is expected of you as a gentleman, and what those believe of you to whom you are as the apple of their eye. They have watched over you for the long years ; have carried you upon their hearts ; have worked for you ; hoped for you, prayed for you. Do not disappoint them. In your relations with women, remember your mother and your sisters. Remember that a model said of Burne Jones and his brother artists, "I was a holy thing to them." Honour all women (even those who ask you to dishonour) for your mother's sake, and bear with patience the new cross to be laid upon you. The cause is sacred, but the means of carrying it on is abominable. War is the nation's responsibility, not yours. Do your duty, not now asking the reason why. And remember you are not your own, but redeemers of your people, and soldiers of Christ.

As Gareth pleading with his mother, who would keep him safe at home, protested :—

Man am I grown, a man's work must I do.
Follow the deer ? follow the Christ, the King.
Live pure, speak true, right wrong, follow the King—
Else wherefore born ?

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

'THE CALL TO NATIONAL SERVICE.'

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Your issue of March 10 reached me only yesterday, which must be my excuse for this belated letter. In the matter of combatant service, I have never urged that more than a small number of ministers of religion should enlist, and then only as a sort of representation or sample of the remainder. Nor do I support the curtailment of our already too few services, because we are in a different position from the numerically greater communions, who can afford to suspend services without seriously reducing their means of worship. We could maintain our churches as they are, while releasing a fair number of ministers, by giving our lay preachers "a chance to be heard," and also by recruiting from the retired ranks.

As to the kind of National Service a ministe can render, I think a right instinct points our men towards intellectual rather than manual labour, because the latter is apt to dull the sharp edge of the mind. And there is another consideration which cal s for the utmost delicacy. Where a minister is of military age, to displace a man for military service has the appearance of inverting the basic principle of Christianity, viz., sacrificing fellowship. How poignant it would be to ardently enl st as a National volunteer and then be charged with having sent another to the war, while remaining oneself in safety at home ! What could be more subversive of religion ? A way out of the difficulty would be for ministers to volunteer for work with the Y.M.C.A. in the forward areas, where they could get into touch with soldiers on their way to and from the trenches. Serving tables did not appeal to the Apostles, but Hut-work at the "back of the Front" is truly apostolic. A Nonconformist chaplain who has been out here more than twelve months admitted to me the other day that in assisting a Congregational minister from the Midlands to work a hut, he had done his best work among the troops. The minister told me that men were badly wanted, and until the Chaplain came to his aid he had been overworked. Chaplains as such do not appear to succeed. On March 10 I attended for a Nonconformist service in an area that contained quite three thousand troops, and I was the only person present ! This evening I had the refreshment of an Anglican Service, but we were only eleven, including two chaplains. But go to the "Y.M." late at night—the "Tea-shop" as some affectionately name it, and you will find queues of weary mud-stained men waiting for hot tea and a cheery word. I shall not soon forget the warm welcome that awaited me there after the hardships of the Front Line. There is a cry from the war zone—"Come over and help us !"

May I say in conclusion what pleasure it gave me to receive the special number of THE INQUIRER ?—Yours, &c.,

WALTER SHORT, 2nd Lieut.
B. E. F., March 18, 1917.

THE MORAL TONE IN MUNITION FACTORIES.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Your issue of March 17, which has just reached me, contains two references to certain aspects of our national life which call for some expression of dissent, and, I think, of justifiable protest. For you publish, in your editorial notes, a reference by Sir James Barlow to the "very low tone of quite young girls" in our munition factories, and also a letter from Dr. Lionel Tayler in which he speaks of the coarsening influences of munition work. Both these opinions bear at once the weight and the bias of all utterances of medical men—a considerable weight, as of those whose business it is to deal with the facts of life unflinchingly, but also a considerable bias, inevitable in the utterances of those whose work deals almost exclusively with the morbid. Their reception serves to show that there exists among our most thoughtful men and women a somewhat anxious feeling concerning the young workers in munition areas. As it has been my lot to have been for some years involved in industrial life in several places before the war, and now to be intimately associated with the life of our munition factories, may I be allowed the publicity of your columns to utter a word of comfort to those who are so distressed, and of protest on behalf of my fellow-workers ? Probably the cause of the disquieting rumours is to be found in the sudden introduction of many unhealthily sheltered young women into the hurly-burly of factory life. The slight shock occasioned by their sudden immersion into the frank and self-reliant life of the workshops has been naturally but reprehensibly exaggerated till it becomes, in the ears of their friends, a grave scandal. It is interesting, in this connection, to recall the similar effect produced by the sudden entrance into the army of many young men from sheltered homes, for we can all remember the "War Babies" outcry two years ago, which caused such needless alarm to so many, and such justifiable indignation in the ranks.

As a matter of fact, in both of the two munition factories in which I have worked the general moral tone has been certainly no lower than in any factory known to me before the war, and very much higher than in one typical pre-war factory it was my misfortune at one time to be connected with. It may seem rash to generalise from only two particular instances, but one of the two is the particular one concerning which scandal is most rife, and the other is in a town where public morality is certainly not exceptionally high. So that my experience has been certainly not in unfairly favourable specimens of munition works. I have, therefore, no hesitation in assuring those who are so fearful for our national future that our young munition girls are not a class to be deplored. On the contrary, they are a most exceptionally healthy, frank, self-reliant class, very conscious of their responsibility to the nation, and very proud of that responsibity. It has been for me personally a genuine pleasure to see such willing service ; I never wish for better co-workers or more self-sacrificing employées, and I should be guilty of grave dereliction of duty if I allowed the statements referred to to pass unchallenged, and without making an emphatic protest on behalf of those to whom all of us owe so much.—Yours, &c.,

A. GEORGE TARRANT.
South View, Little Sutton, Cheshire.
March 27, 1917.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

CHIPS FROM A POET'S WORKSHOP.

STRAY BIRDS. By Sir Rabindranath Tagore. London : Macmillan & Co. 4*s.* 6*d.* net.

FAST in the wake of 'Fruit-Gathering,' which we noticed recently with much delight, there comes another volume from the same pen ; but it has upon it none of the marks of hurried work. Like its predecessor it is a rich and a seasonable gift, and it is all the more welcome because it is different at least in its literary form from anything which Sir Rabindranath Tagore has given us hitherto. He calls it 'Stray Birds,' and many of these short sentences, with their rhythmical cadence, are best described as "short swallow-flights of song." Others are crisp aphorisms containing some jewelled thought or a shrewd reflection upon human conduct and the meaning of life. Here is the stuff of which poetry and proverbial wisdom are made, only the wisdom has in it no trace of pungency or satire. It is a confession of experience rather than a criticism of the follies and delusions of other men. But a book like this gives few openings to the commentator, and we turn instinctive y to the method of quotation. A few sentences culled almost at random will be the best enticement to our readers to embark on a voyage of discovery for themselves. Here, for instance, is a group of sayings, which reveal the keen observer of human life who at the same time never forgets the poet's vision:—

"The mystery of creation is like the darkness of night—it is great. Delusions of knowledge are like the fog of the morning."

"Rest belongs to the work as the eyelids to the eyes."

"The mind, sharp but not broad, sticks at every point but does not move."

"Your idol is shattered in the dust to prove that God's dust is greater than your idol."

"We read the world wrong and say that it deceives us."

"He who is too busy doing good finds no time to be good."

"Power takes as ingratitude the writhings of its victims."

"He has made his weapons his gods.

"When his weapons win he is defeated himself."

"Wrong cannot afford defeat, but Right can."

From these we may turn to some of the brief glimpses into the world of divine life and power, where love and beauty go hand in hand:—

"His own mornings are new surprises to God."

"God finds himself by creating."

"The Perfect decks itself in beauty for the love of the imperfect."

"God grows weary of great kingdoms but never of little flowers."

"God is ashamed when the prosperous boast of His special favour."

"I have scaled the peak and found no shelter in fame's bleak and barren height. Lead me, my Guide, before the light fades, into the valley of quiet where life's harvest mellows into golden wisdom."

These are only fragments, and they can only give a faint idea of the wealth of beauty and wise reflection which gladdens the reader on every page. Some of the sayings have a whimsical touch, for example, "Toes are the fingers that have forgotten their past." Others are brimful of imagination, as when the hills are compared to the "shouts of children, who raise their arms trying to catch the stars." There are also many signs that the author, while moving among the unchanging things of human life, has not been unmindful of the special needs of the moment. Had he some soldier of freedom in mind when he wrote "When I stand before thee at the day's end thou shalt see my scars and know that I had my wounds and also my healing"? Or again is it accidental that the last page of his book contains this confession, "I have suffered and despaired and known death, and I am glad that I am in this great world"?

We have received a copy of the Third Impression of 'Charles Lister: Letters and Recollections, with a Memoir by his Father, Lord Ribblesdale.' We rejoice exceedingly that this record of one of the brightest spirits, who died that England may live, has been read so widely. It is fresh and exhilarating in no common degree, full of the joy of youth, with its love of adventure and its ardent friendships, and yet mellow with a charity and a gentleness of feeling which for most men come only with the discipline of years. Those who read Charles Lister's descriptions of his friends, and especially his noble tribute to the memory of Julian Grenfel, will feel that all unconsciously he was describing himself. "Julian from the time I knew him had flung away his idols and had met God. His intense moral courage distinguished him even more than his physical bravery from the run of common men—and his physical bravery was remarkable enough, whether he was hunting, boxing, or whatever he was at....He was rather Franciscan in his love of all things that are, and in his absence of fear of all God's creatures—death included." He wrote these words in June, 1915, and in August he too had gone. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 12*s*. 6*d*. net.)

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Messrs. Allen & Unwin, Ltd.—Professionalism and Originality: F. H. Hayward, D.Litt, B.Sc. 6*s*. net.

Cambridge University Press.—Finch and Baines. A Seventeenth Century Friendship: Archibald Malloch. 10*s*. 6*d*. net.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—Human Ideals: Frederick A. M. Spencer, M.A. 6*s*. net.

League to Enforce Peace, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York.—Enforced Peace.

Messrs. Watts & Co.—British Education after the War: Frederick J. Gould. 1*s*. 6*d*. net.

Miscellaneous.

Cornhill Magazine.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE LATE MR. WALTER BAILY.

The funeral of the late Mr. Walter Baily took place at Hampstead on Saturday, the 24th inst. A service was held at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, followed by cremation at Golder's Green. In addition to a large family party and many private friends, deputations were present from University College and Hospital, University College School, the Metropolitan Association for improving the Dwellings of the Working Classes, Berman Trust, the Hibbert Trust, Dr. Williams's Trust, and other public bodies. The first part of the service was conducted by the Rev. W. H. Drummond (Mr. Baily's son-in-law), and the Rev. H. Gow delivered the following address:—

We gather here in the presence of death to thank God for the life which He gave and which He has now taken from us and to say for a little time farewell. As we remember our friend and what he did and what he was, the joy is deeper than the sorrow, the gratitude for what was given is greater than the sense of loss. We feel the beauty of life and the beauty of death as we think of him to-day.

The great mystery of death has come close to us again, making us all feel the shortness and frailty of our lives and bringing sorrow and loss to those who loved and were loved by the friend who is gone. But it is with no fear and no bitterness of soul that we would think of death to-day. We would rejoice in the supremacy and eternity of love and the mystery of God's goodness working always, though in unknown ways. "It is higher than Heaven, what can we say? Deeper than the grave, what can we know?" We live and die amid infinite mystery.

We know well the piercing pain of sorrow and loneliness when the beloved face and form are taken from us. We know the pain of parting, the sense of something gone which never can return to us on earth. We know how sacred tender memories throng upon us and fill our eyes with tears. But it is not mere misery, not unmeaning waste and loneliness and despair. We feel there is some great wonderful meaning within and above it all. We who have loved and lost feel the benediction of our loved ones not only in their life but in their death. We feel the greatness and the wonder and the triumph of love through death.

We look out into the darkness and we do not understand, we cannot realise the strange new life with God which is now hidden from our eyes. "We know not what we shall be." But we feel there is something infinitely great behind the veil. God will do more and better for us than we can ask or think. "We shall be satisfied with the goodness of His House." His Love surrounds us in life and death. The love which He has given us for one another, the longing for an even closer fellowship of which this life is only the promise and preparation, are not lost and shattered when death comes. It is but a dim foreshadowing of a deeper, higher love behind the veil. We look out into the future with a strong and reverent trust. We shall meet again and know each other when we meet in that higher, purer life which awaits us all beyond the grave. "A little while and ye behold me no more, and again a little while and ye shall see me."

To believe in God is to be confident that all is well, to know in the midst of our sorrow that there is no final loss, no hopeless sorrow. It is to rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him, and to believe that He will give to us our heart's desire. It is to feel that "sorrow endureth for the night but joy cometh in the morning."

We often care much for things that do not matter and little for the things which belong unto our peace, but in the presence of death, when our hearts are full of love and sorrow and tender memories, we know well what are the real things. We recognise courage and kindness and love as the qualities which live, which produce a lasting influence, and which belong to the reality of existence. It is these things which are eternal. Neither life nor death nor things present nor things to come can take them from us. We rejoice and thank God for the greatness and divineness of the soul.

"We bring to-day the tribute of respect, of friendship and affection as we think of him whose body lies here in this church, where he worshipped for so many years, and of which he was the honoured counsellor and guide. We thank God for the great gift of a strong, noble, and honourable life. He was so simple and so true and kind. He was respected and trusted by all who knew him. No one could doubt his absolute integrity and faithfulness. We felt a childlike sincerity and purity of purpose in all his words and deeds. He was so free from all ambition and from love of self. He tried only to do the work which was given him to do with all his might. There was a calm strength about him which half concealed the endless effort and the constant toils of his life. He sought no praise. He was always courteous and gentle and kind. We cannot imagine him saying harsh words or nourishing ill-will. He made for peace, the peace of mutual understanding, and of forbearing one another in love, wherever he might be. He had a clear, strong mind and much knowledge of affairs. Men turned to him for guidance and looked up to him as a leader and a friend. He did not seek for leadership or power; it came to him unsought. He was very reticent and modest, and he loved a life of quiet thought and home affections and the pursuit of truth for its own sake. His intellect was continually engaged with deep research and thought, of which the world knew little.

We remember to-day how much great institutions, such as University College Hospital and School, owe to his wisdom and his energy. We remember his generosity and his magnanimity in all the relationships of life. We remember his serenity of soul and his strong firm faith in good. We felt that he well represented the best traditions of this church in his love of freedom and of truth, in his broad tolerance and sympathies, and in his simple trust in God.

But most of all we remember the nobility and beauty of his life. Children and children's children rise up and call him blessed. They thank God for the memories of his goodness, which will never die. The long years so full of gracious, beautiful remembrances come back to them. They see him always kind and just, always thoughtful for them, making for their happiness and happy in their happiness, always the same strong, true, loving husband and father and friend.

It is with a sense of deep thankfulness and joy and peace that we say farewell to-day. We remember how patiently and bravely he bore his weakness and his pain, how grateful he was for little kindnesses, how his love and thought for others remained with him always to the end. We think of him now as in peace with God. He has passed beyond our knowledge and our care, but not beyond our love, into that fuller life of which we can only dimly dream. He is with our God and his God, our Father and his Father; he will not return to you but you shall go to him. We thank God for his life, his work, his influence, his goodness, and as we think of him to-day, we remember the words of our great Teacher, and seem to hear our Father saying: "Well done, good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

THE LATE PROF. A. MASON WORTHINGTON.

The Rev. H. S. Solly writes: By the recent death of Arthur Mason Worthington, C.B., F.R.S. we lose a distinguished member of our household of faith and of a family whose graves are at our old chapel of Hale. He was born in 1852. He was at Rugby during the headmastership of Dr. Temple, and studied Physics under Dr. Wilson. Then he went to Trinity College, Oxford, to Owens College, Manchester, and to Berlin, where he met his future wife, a daughter of Prof. Thomas Solly. His first appointment was to the charge of the school established by Sir Titus Salt at Shipley, but he was soon called by Dr. Wilson to teach Physics at Clifton. In 1885, finding his knowledge of mathematics not as thorough as he required, he went to Cambridge and worked under Prof. J. J. Thompson. In 1887 he was appointed Headmaster of H.M. Dockyard School, established for the training of Naval engineers. From 1909 to 1911 he was Professor of Physics at Greenwich; and then, his health failing, he had to retire. How fine was the work he did for the men under his charge may be judged from an extract from a letter lately written by one of our admirals who says, "The splendid efficiency of the Engineer Officers of the Navy during the whole course of the war will always be a lasting monument to his memory." The results of an inquiry which he made specially his own were given to the world in a book called 'A Study of Splashes' (Longmans). His interest in falling drops began when he was a boy at Rugby, and down to 1908 he continued planning and employing the exquisite machinery which he devised for observing and recording the changes, following one another at incredibly short intervals, when drops fall and make splashes. It was this work which won him his F.R.S. After his retirement and the partial recovery of his health, he was able occasionally to lecture on this and other subjects, and gave very generous assistance to institutions which he regarded as worthy of help. It would take too long to tell of his many friends and their appreciation of him, but there is a special interest in these words by Bishop Robertson which appeared in The Times: "To his inherited Unitarianism he adhered to the end, but with the Christian religion in all its forms he showed keen and interested sympathy. Bishops as well as judges were among his closest friends. All who knew him at all well felt not only the note of distinction, but the attraction of an extraordinarily sympathetic keenness always joined to tender personal affection. In him science has lost an ardent and penetrating mind, but England has lost a typically English character, a great, a gentle, and a chivalrous soul."

SECOND LIEUTENANT DAVID JACOB LEWIS.

We deeply regret to record the death of Second Lieut. David Jacob Lewis, 2nd Royal Fusiliers, who was killed in action in France on February 28. He was the son of Mr. David Lewis, Bronheulog, Llandyssul, and a very faithful member of the Graig Unitarian Chapel. He was born at Talgarreg, August 13, 1894. After a successful course at the Llandyssul Intermediate School, he entered the University College of Wales at Aberystwyth. Whilst there he joined the Officers' Training Corps, and obtained a commission in 1915, subsequently being gazetted to the Royal Fusiliers, and proceeded to France last July. He was a most promising young man, thought highly of by all his friends and greatly respected in the army. His Commanding Officer, writing to his father, said: "Your son was an excellent officer. He was always hardworking, always cheerful, and always there when conditions were most trying. In addition, he held the respect and the confidence of his men. He has given his life willingly, but what makes it all the sadder is that he was killed at a time when his battalion was having a great success. Unfortunately, he did not live to see it."

On Sunday, March 18, Memorial Services were held at Capelyfadfa and Llandyssul. At the latter place all the Nonconformist places of worship closed as a tribute of respect to his memory and joined in the service in the Unitarian Chapel. Unfortunately the chapel was far too small, and crowds were turned away. The services were conducted by the Rev. T. Arthur Thomas, who was assisted at Llandyssul by the Rev. Ben Davies, Congregational minister.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

115th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,507	13	7
Women's Alliance of All Souls' Church, Winnipeg, per Mrs. Frances E. Howorth ..	9	9	3
Mrs. William Kenrick (tenth donation)	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. John T. Osler (fourth donation)	25	0	0

R. L. (thirteenth donation) ..	0	10	0
L. O. M. (fifteenth donation)	1	0	0
Highgate Unitarian Church (sixteenth monthly donation)	9	12	9
An Officer in India	6	15	2
	£16,570	0	9

Parcels have been received from : Ladies' Sewing Circle, Free Christian Church, Hastings ; Miss Burgon ; Girls of Rochester Grammar School ; Miss J. F. Swann ; Mrs. William Tangye ; West Grove Women's League, Cardiff (per Mrs. Fox) ; Mrs. James Harwood ; Miss Warren ; Miss Leigh ; Miss Nettlefold ; High School for Girls, Wolverhampton ; Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee ; Miss Minna Tayler ; Mrs. George Webb ; Mrs. Hanna ; Miss Lee ; Miss Hervey ; Miss A. J. Partridge ; Mrs. J. M. Bass ; Monton Women's Congregational Union (per Miss E. Leigh) ; Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Miss E. M. Buckley) ; Mrs. Wheatcroft ; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society, Hampstead (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb) ; Miss Short ; Miss Minns ; Miss E. A. Evelegh ; Miss Talbot ; Miss E. Thirkell Cox ; Mrs. Shearman ; Mrs. Robins ; Mrs. Helsby ; Graham Street Girls' Provident Society, Birmingham (per Miss Lily Gittens) ; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas) ; Mrs. T. F. Ward ; Shrewsbury Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Griffiths).

WEEKLY NOTES.

It has been a busy week. Fifty parcels, some very large ones, have been received. Twenty-one large bales and cases and forty-three parcels have been dispatched. We have sent a motor ambulance ("La Buire") to Calais to help in carrying the Belgian wounded. The convoy was greatly in need of another good car to do its work efficiently, so we were glad to send it. It will, like all the cars on this work in Calais for the Belgians, be driven by an English girl chauffeur. We have also sent out a motor-car ("De Dion") for Binson, which hospital is in the depths of the country, and greatly in need of a good car to take the doctor about and to fetch and carry generally. These two cars, with a third belonging to the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry, went down to Folkestone on Friday last. We went down with them to see them safely off, and were very pleased with the way they ran.

We have just received the quarterly report from the "Rose Allen" hospital for children near Le Havre. The doctor reports that the children are well cared for and devotedly tended by the sisters. He visits the hospital three times a week, except when there is a serious case, when he goes every day. At the present moment there are four children suffering from diphtheria ; nine suffering from general debility, skin troubles, or hip disease ; and two little ones under 3 years old, who are very feeble.

Some examples of the cases admitted are given : In February there was an alarm of diphtheria in one of the schools—all suspected cases were at once isolated in the hospital and kept there. One child died, but the rest are going on well. Another family of six children was brought in. The mother is left behind in invaded Belgium ; the father is a drunkard. The children were in a deplorable state ; quite unfit, physically and morally, to be put among other children. They are being kept in quarantine in the hospital until fit to join the other children. There are also two children suffering from hip disease, who enjoy the spinal carriage we sent out.

I am going to Calais this week, and then on to a number of other places in France. I shall be away three or four weeks

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 8 by 12 in. up to 14 by 24 in., and all intermediate sizes, with a string run in the neck.
Pyjamas (urgent).
Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.
Pants, vests.
Towels of all sorts.

For the Maternity Home at Calais :—

Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).
Chemises for women.
Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N W. 3.

THE MANCHESTER DISTRICT ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meetings of the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches were held on Saturday, March 24. The Annual Sermon was preached in the afternoon at Cross Street Chapel by the Rev. Edgar I. Fripp, who was warmly welcomed upon his removal to Manchester. The sermon was a powerful setting forth, on the basis of the conversation on the road to Emmaus, of the way in which a lower ideal may hinder the growth of a higher and "Christ be opposed to Christ." The musical part of the service was ably sustained by the Gorton Choir.

The evening meeting, at which about eighty persons were present, was held in the Memorial Hall, the chair being taken by the President, Mr. Hugh J. Broadbent. Before entering upon the business of the meeting a resolution of respect and affection for the memory of the late Mr. J. R. Beard was moved by the President and seconded by Mr. G. H. Leigh, both of whom expressed the feeling of the meeting by dwelling on the great services rendered to all public causes, and particularly to the cause of free and earnest religion, by Mr. Beard, and those present rose and stood in silence to mark their deep sense of regret and sympathy.

The Chairman, in his presidential address, congratulated the Association upon the attendance at the meeting, which he said was about the same as in other years when they met under less trying circumstances. He spoke of the value and helpfulness of religious services during the critical time through which we were passing. Never had serious men so much realised the truth and worth of the high ideals for which the Churches stood, now that every noble aim and principle had been so wantonly attacked. He believed that our country had entered the war for the maintenance of such high principles—for justice and equity and righteousness. The dominant consideration must now be that there should be no lowering of these high standards by the nation until the victory was won for which they started out.

The President then moved the adoption of the Report and the Financial Statement. This was seconded by the Rev. W. Whitaker, and carried.

At the instance of the Chairman, the meeting sent a hearty greeting and a message of congratulation to the Rev. H. Enfield and Mrs. Dowson on the attainment of their golden wedding and on the approaching celebration of the jubilee of Mr. Dowson's ministry at Gee Cross.

The next business of the meeting, the presentation to the Rev. Dendy Agate, was one in which all took part with deeply stirred feelings. Mr. Agate has served the Association and the Churches of the district over the long period of thirty-four years, and it was universally felt that something should be done to mark his retirement from the district. A fine photograph of Mr. Agate has therefore been obtained, which will hang on the wall of the Memorial Hall, among those of other prominent leaders, and the two handsome volumes of the recent work 'Shakespeare's England' were given to Mr. Agate, containing an address, testifying to the appreciation of Manchester friends of the great value and effectiveness of his labours. The Rev. Charles Peach, who was appointed to make the presentation and especially to speak on behalf of his brother ministers, spoke of Mr. Agate's noble action in giving up the most beautiful church in Manchester to enter upon missionary and pioneer work. His oversight and care of the missions, especially of Bradford, long after he had ceased to have any professional connection with them, was a proof of the depth and earnestness of his enthusiasm for the work. His peculiar gifts of persuasive speech, his courage in defending unpopular causes (as in his recent plea for fair treatment of conscientious objectors), and his unceasing care for the interests of the younger ministers, had endeared him to all. Mr. Agate's reply was characteristically full of reminiscence and kindly wisdom, and testified once more to his abounding and cheerful faith in our presentation of the Gospel.

The Rev. C. Peach also moved a resolution congratulating the Russian people on the establishment of a free constitution, and on its entrance into the brotherhood of free peoples. This was seconded by the Rev. N. Anderton, and it was decided to send it to the Russian Ambassador.

The Rev. J. H. Ewbank, B.D., the newly appointed minister at Swinton, then delivered a forcible and thoughtful address on the need that would arise after the war of a higher view of life and of duty, so that there might come into existence what William James called the moral equivalent of war.

The Rev. G. J. Heale, the new minister of Bradford, spoke earnestly of the raison d'être of the Church and Church fellowship. We believe, he said, in the possibility of the spiritual guidance of the individual, and a spiritual religion is the need of our time.

Mr. L. G. Rylands, Joint Secretary of the Association, moved that the best thanks be given to the preachers and speakers and all who had contributed to the meetings, and this was heartily carried.

MINISTERS OF RELIGION AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

We learn that a considerable number of offers have been made by our ministers for whole-time or part-time National Service. The ministers have volunteered for a great variety of occupations. Several have applied for employment as Welfare workers in factories, others as workers in Huts in Munitions areas, or in connection with the Y.M.C.A.; some have applied for teaching; while agriculture, munitions, secretarial work have been specified. A few have offered to do anything that is really found to be necessary and useful. The Forms, as they are received, are dealt with in accordance with the instructions of the Secretary of the National Service Department.

Upwards of twenty ministers have reported that they had already obtained National Service work in their own localities. Employment on the land, gardening, delivery and collection of letters, motor transport, work for public authorities, librarians, teachers in grammar and other schools, chartered accountant's office, secretary of War pensions committee, assistant to an agricultural society, and in labour exchanges—these are a few of the occupations which ministers have discovered for themselves. In most cases ministers volunteering for National Service propose preaching at least once every Sunday. Members of the congregation and ministers in the neighbourhood are looking after the pastoral and week-day work.

AMERICA AND THE WAR.

A HARVARD MEMORIAL.

The following memorandum was signed by over two hundred officers and professors of Harvard University, and fifteen professors in affiliated institutions, and sent to President Wilson. It endorses the position taken by Bishop Lawrence in his recent utterances, and supports the President's words on behalf of humanity, and his pledge to maintain national principles and international rights:—

"Our President has spoken strong words in behalf of humanity, of the rights of nations, and of this nation: rights to life, to trade, to succour others; the right as a nation to be. To these he has pledged for us our lives and fortunes. We believe he will stand to this pledge.

"We citizens of the commonwealth now demand that he stand to it; and we call upon him at this juncture to use to the full powers with which the Constitution invests him to protect the citizens of this country on sea and land, to prepare the nation to meet every emergency which may endanger its liberties, and to lead the people to defend at all costs the integrity of the nation.

"The people of this country are not wedded to ease and wealth. We are not lovers of safety, nor of peace at any price. We love peace and we do not want war. When, however, the country is in danger, when liberty, justice, and the rights of humanity are at stake, the lives and wealth of the citizens of this commonwealth are at the national service."

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Clonmel.—At a meeting of the Nursing Association on Thursday, March 22, the Rev. Canon Leslie (rector) proposed a resolution expressing their great sense of the loss sustained by the death of Miss Orr, and tendering their sincere condolence to her relatives. Their late hon. secretary—said the Canon—was almost indispensable to the working of the Association, and it was largely owing to her efforts that the sick poor were attended to, and cared for, in their time of need. Zeal, energy and enthusiasm were brought to her work, and, like her blessed Master, she "went about doing good," and left an example of self-sacrifice and work faithfully done. In supporting the resolution, the Rev. W. H. Smyth (rector of Killalone) said none could estimate the influence exerted by Miss Orr during her long connection with the Model School, and she still lives in the hearts of her former pupils. When she retired from the scholastic profession, she might well have enjoyed a well-earned leisure, but her kind heart and boundless energy precluded her living a life of ease. If those who worked with her felt the loss so much, how great must be the grief of those who knew and loved her best. The sympathy of all present went out to her relatives, and their prayer was that the God of all comfort would comfort their hearts. The Committee of the Women's National Health Association, in recording their deep regret at Miss Orr's death, said she organised and worked the Shamrock Dining Rooms, superintending them daily, and was never stopped by the worst weather, till ordered to rest by her doctor a fortnight before her death. Her system was so good that the work can be carried on almost automatically.

Colne.—Mr. J. Pipkin of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, has accepted a very cordial invitation to the pastorate of the Stanley Street Church, and has commenced his ministry there.

Diss.—The Diss congregation which has been bravely struggling to carry on the Unitarian cause in Diss in spite of financial difficulties, following on the recent death of Mr. Francis Taylor, was much encouraged by a visit last week-end from Miss Tagart and Miss Hill of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and of the Central Postal Mission. At the close of the Morning Service Miss Tagart addressed the congregation, expressing her pleasure in the efforts that were being made to keep the Unitarian faith alive in the district, and conveyed to the congregation the assurance of the deep interest and sympathy felt by the two societies in London in the continuance of the work of the Diss Chapel, which had included among its past members names so well known and so much respected by all. Mr. John Birks, after thanking Miss Tagart, proposed that she should carry back with her to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and to the Central Postal Mission the best thanks of the Diss congregation for their good wishes and earnest support, and also inform them that the members were determined to do their best to carry on the work. Before leaving the town Miss Hill and Miss Tagart made calls on several members of the congregation.

Leeds: Holbeck.—The recent Annual Reports show that the efforts made to arrest the decline of previous years in Church and Sunday school have produced satisfactory results. With the settlement of the Rev. A. Cobden Smith last year as minister, difficulties have been faced and personal endeavours put forth which have not only justified expectations, but from both the financial and numerical standpoint have established a more hopeful outlook. Apart from generous grants received from Mill Hill Chapel, and the Sustentation Fund, the income of Holbeck Church for 1916 was £281 14*s.* 2*d.* (last year £197 17*s.* 3½*d.*); the expenditure being £227 8*s.* (last year £175 2*s.* 10*d.*); balance carried forward £54 6*s.* 2*d.* (last year £22 14*s.* 5½*d*). The attendances at the Services have also increased, the average Sunday evening congregations numbering over 60, as against 25 last year. In the Sunday school there are now 164 scholars (last year 112), with a much larger average attendance. Amongst the institutions the Ladies' Sewing Society again rendered excellent service, a Brotherly Fund has been instituted, parcels and letters sent to absent soldiers and sailors, and a Parents' Party held in addition to the usual Annual gatherings. The event of the year was the generosity of Mr. J. T. Kitchen in defraying the cost of the cleaning and redecoration of the Church. With large premises and ample accommodation in both Church and Sunday school, the financial responsibilities involved in the upkeep and repair of the fabric, in addition to carrying forward the influence of Public Worship and other religious activities, call for continued and persistent effort. Situated in the midst of a crowded population the Domestic Street Church, Holbeck, is seeking to become a more flourishing centre of increasing social and religious work. The earnest devotion of the Rev. A. Cobden Smith has already inspired confidence, and while official reports express their appreciation of his services, the Church Committee at a recent meeting resolved further to add an increase to his salary.

Liverpool: Ancient Chapel.—The Rev. F. K. Freeston has accepted the unanimous and pressing invitation of the congregation to occupy the pulpit, for a term of three months. "National Service Sunday" was observed at the Ancient Chapel, Mr. Freeston emphasising at both services the right of the nation to the loyal work of all its sons and daughters.

Liverpool: Ullet Road Church.—On Sunday, March 25, the Rev. J. C. Odgers preached a vigorous and eloquent sermon on 'Is our Cause Just?" which also took the form of a valedictory address to more young men of the Church who are on the eve of departure for military training. A beautiful service was held in the afternoon, when the Rimmer Memorial Tablet, set up in honour of two brothers who have fallen for the cause, was unveiled in the cloisters before a large congregation composed of the Sunday school and many members of the Church. In the evening, in direct response to the appeal sent by the Director-General of National Service to all clergy and ministers, Mr. Odgers urged the need for sacrifice and service from all those who are being protected in safety by the heroic sacrifice of the soldiers and sailors, their sons and brothers.

Sheffield.—Following on last Sunday's services in connection with the coming departure of the Rev. A. H. Dolphin from Unity Church, Crookesmoor Road, Sheffield, a meeting of the congregation was held in the Schoolroom. Mr. W. R. Stevenson presided, and in his address commented on the fact that their minister had been at Unity Church 14½ years, a longer service than any one since it was founded in 1859. He spoke of the affection in which he was held amongst the congregation. The Rev. C. J. Street, in a speech full of reminiscences, referred to the fact that he came to Sheffield a year after Mr. Dolphin's ministry at Unity Church began. There had been the closest co-operation between the two churches, and it was with deep regret, but with a very warm affection, that he contemplated the coming severance. Other speeches were delivered by Mr. W. H. Wall, who has been connected with the church for 57 years; Mr. Horace Smith, on behalf of the Sunday school; Mr. W. Laycock, as representing Upper Chapel, and Mr. Frank Blackwell for the lay preachers. The Rev. H. H. Oakley, of Broompark Congregational Church, in a speech said Mr. Dolphin had that kindly, cheerful appearance which was such an asset to a Christian minister—it was good for a minister not to be of the lean and hungry kind. He had known Mr. Dolphin very well in connection with the Theological Circle in Sheffield, a small society which he regarded as the best in Sheffield. The Rev. Dr. J. S. Clemens, Principal of Ranmoor College, also paid tribute to Mr. Dolphin's character and the excellence of his work, whilst Mrs. W. R. Stevenson, in mentioning that a presentation by the ladies had been made that afternoon to Mrs. Dolphin, spoke very warmly of that lady's faithful work. A cheque was handed to the retiring pastor by Mr. Guest, and Mr. Dolphin responded in a speech full of feeling and gratitude to his congregation for their many kindnesses.

St. Helens.—The fourth of the series of Religious Conferences arranged for by the Liverpool District Missionary Association, was held at St. Helens on Saturday, March 17, and again there was a very satisfactory gathering, notwithstanding the fact that fewer friends from other Liverpool District churches were able to attend owing to the difficulties of communication. The devotional service was conducted by the Rev. J. E. Jenkins. During the interval for tea, there was ample opportunity for the social intercourse which is so helpful a feature of these gatherings. The evening meeting was presided over by the Rev. J. Horace Short, the subject for discussion being 'The Social Demands and Adventure of Religion,' and the principal speakers were Dr. S A. Mellor, Mrs. John Edwards and Mr. Frank Johnson. The next Conference on these lines will not be held until the autumn; but on April 18, at the invitation of the Association, the National Conference Union for Social Service will hold its Annual Meeting in Liverpool, and in the evening of that day there will be a Public Meeting in Hope Street Church Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Richard D. Holt, M.P., at which it is hoped that Dr. P. H. Wicksteed and Dr. S. H. Mellone will speak on 'The Churches and Social Problems.'

Tunbridge Wells.—The funeral of Mr. A. H. Threadgold, whose loss we had recently to deplore, was on March 19. The service was conducted by the Revs. G. B. Stallworthy and S. Burrows. The former gave a sympathetic address as a friend for several years, and spoke of the earnestness and geniality of Mr. Threadgold and his faithfulness to his convictions. On Sunday, March 25, Memorial Services were held, morning and evening, at the Free Christian Church, Dudley Road. The Rev. S. Burrows preached on "Abiding Places in our Father's House," and "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Canon Rawnsley's Work for England.

Writing to The Manchester Guardian on the subject of the National Trust and the debt which it owes to Canon Rawnsley, Mr. Percy Withers has commented on the fact that the latter is soon leaving Crosthwaite. "It is," he says, "an event of more than local or personal interest, for in our day few men, or none, have so triumphantly passed beyond the narrow limits of their parish to do a signal and enduring service for their country." The tribute is well deserved, and it is fitting that people should be reminded of the splendid zeal with which Canon Rawnsley, one of the three founders of the Trust, has fought against indifference, stupidity, or active hostility for twenty-two years in order to save some of the fairest spots in England for the use and delight of English people. The Trust has recently acquired, as we know, a five hundred years' lease of a beautiful portion of Exmoor, comprising 7,000 or 8,000 acres, and it is a remarkable testimony to the single-mindedness and devotion of those who have worked most unremittingly on behalf of the movement that between sixty and seventy properties of "historic interest" or "natural beauty" have now been preserved by their efforts for the benefit of the nation.

The Habit of Eating Potatoes.

A correspondent in The Times has reminded us that the potato, which we miss so much when it does not appear on the dinner-table, became a common article of food in England little more than a hundred years ago. The time is still within memory when, in the simpler households, green vegetables and turnips were preferred, or at any rate were more often eaten than potatoes. The potato achieved general popularity much more slowly than the banana. It is said to have been introduced into England from Ireland after the middle of the seventeenth century, and was regarded as a luxury, rare even on the tables of the well-to-do, till comparatively late in the eighteenth century. In many parts of the civilised world frequented by Englishmen it was unknown, though the sweet potato, an entirely different thing, was quite common.

Dull Homes and the Cinema.

Mr. Cecil Leeson, Secretary of the Howard Association, who has been giving evidence before the Cinema Commission, is of opinion that a good deal of the blame which is visited upon the picture palace proprietors ought to fall elsewhere. The fascination of the cinema, he says, is an indictment of the child's dull home conditions. The only interesting things in a boy's little world, after school and tea, with neither father nor mother at home, are the picture palace and the street it stands in. It is a wonder that children thus left to themselves should stick at anything to get away from the dulness. The pictures are, in fact, the only bright spot in their drab lives, and probably the fact that some of them—surprisingly few—are tempted to steal would also be found on investigation to be, in the majority of cases, the result of a want of satisfying interests. All this goes to show, not that the picture palace should be done away with, which is not regarded as a practical solution of the problem by anybody, but that it should be developed and improved in such a way that the child who goes to it for enjoyment shall not be ruined by wrong suggestions, which take root only too readily, and lead to wrong-doing. Three schoolgirls, who also gave evidence before the Commission, from the child's point of view, said that they liked cowboy and Indian pictures and comic films best, and disliked travel and topical scenes.

The Salvation Army.

The Salvation Army is now represented in over 60 different countries and colonies. About 24,000 officers and others are entirely engaged in the direction of its affairs, and the work is conducted in from about 10,000 to 11,000 centres in 37 different languages. In the Punjab Province of India the responsibility for the social welfare of the criminal tribes, numbering 60,000 people, will shortly be handed over to them. In the West Indies they are undertaking the entire work of looking after the leper colonies.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. Cumberland.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

GENT'S HANDKERCHIEF BARGAINS. Slightly imperfect. Hemstitched Irish Linen. Size 18 or 19 inches. Bundle of six, 3s. 5d. (postage 3d.). Write for this month's Bargain List, free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any condition. 6d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 2s. on silver; 3s. on gold; 8s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6d. per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2s. each on silver, 3s. each on gold, 9s. each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 6d. for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2s. each on silver, 3s. each on gold, 8s. each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 31, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCH
FOR THE MINISTRY
Berkeley, California

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3901.
NEW SERIES, No. 1004.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

2s. 6d. net (postage 4d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—APRIL.

SCIENCE IS ONE OF THE HUMANITIES By Prof. J. B. Baillie
PUNISHMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION By L. P. Jacks
AFTER TWENTY-FIVE YEARS By Sir Oliver Lodge
AMERICA'S SELF-REVELATION By Prof. Hartley B. Alexander
NATIONAL HATE By A. D. McLaren
DRUDGERY AND EDUCATION By Edmond Holmes
THE RELIGIOUS PHILOSOPHY OF VLADIMIR SOLOVYOV By Mrs. J. N. Duddington
FIVE NEW RELIGIOUS CULTS IN BRITISH NEW GUINEA By E. W. P. Chinnery and A. C. Haddon
FORCE AND THE CONQUEST OF EVIL IN CHRISTIAN ETHICS By G. F. Barbour
THE LOVE WHICH IS NOT THE FULFILLING OF THE LAW By Constance L. Maynard
NATIONAL TRAINING By Reginald F. Rynd
DISCUSSIONS, SURVEY, and SIGNED REVIEWS

SUBSCRIPTIONS:
10s. per Annum, post free.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.2.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April.

8. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.
15. Rev. WILLIAM JELLIE, B.A., of Southport.
22. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
29. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held on SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1917, in the MEMORIAL HALL, ALBERT SQUARE, MANCHESTER. Annual Business at 5.30; Public Meeting at 6.30. Speakers: The President (Mr. Albert Slater); Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A. (Todmorden); Rev. John Ellis (Stalybridge); Miss E. Johnstone (Bury).

H. BODELL SMITH, Hon. Secretary.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE APRIL ISSUE INCLUDE

The Scope of Reconstruction
The New Russia
The Nation's Youth
The Claim of Adult Education
The World of Industry
Reviews
Scholastic Appointments, etc.

Monthly, 1s.;
Annual Subscription, 14s. post free.

Published at "The Athenæum" Office,
11 Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:

H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed ..	£19,500,000

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, April 8.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. David Davis

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. H. Smith; 6.30, Mr. F. G. Fincham.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7, Rev. J. Vint Laughland.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 11.15, Mr. Stephen Noel.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Mr. Wm. Lee.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. H. Smith.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. F. G. Fincham; 6.30, Mr. J. P. Rosling.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Lt. Colonel C. S. Bullock.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 3.0, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Hargrove, M.A.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Mr. E. A. Smith.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Wm. Stephens.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. H. Taylor; 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Douglas Walmsley, B.A.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. Jacks.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 11 and 3.15, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATH.

Chaplin.—On March 27, at Sunnybrae, Balcombe, Isabella, widow of the late Robert Allwork Chaplin, in her 80th year.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, LADY NURSE.—Bright, well-educated young lady, 20-25 years; Norland or Princess Christian College training preferred, but experience not essential. For girl 4 years and boy 13 months. Small household in country near Buxton. Manchester within easy reach. Salary according to qualifications.—Mrs. S. P. Grundy, St. Catherine's Hotel, Fowey, Cornwall.

WANTED, DAILY GOVERNESS for two little girls. Board and lodging found.—Mrs. Fairfield, 202 Preston Road, Brighton.

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
Rev. Stopford A. Brooke.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. Chadwick.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead, London, N.W.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 159
THE TRIUMPH OF LIFE 161
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . . 161
VERSE 162
RELIGION AND PATRIOTISM 162
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Moral Tone in Munition Factories . 163
Ministers and National Service . . 164
War Saving Associations and Ministers of Religion 164
Dean Henson and Reunion 164
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 164
North End Domestic Mission, Liverpool 165
East Cheshire Christian Union . . 166
Blackfriars Mission 166
Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission . . 167
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 167
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 168

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

FOR America the hour has struck. The speech which President Wilson made to Congress on Monday marks a point from which there can be no turning back. Neutrality has become impossible for any man who loves freedom and honours righteousness. The President has summoned his fellow-citizens to put all their strength into this struggle, upon the issue of which the future of the world depends. The insults and outrages which have become intolerable to national self-respect have touched the nerve of patriotism to the quick. "We will not choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our nation and our people to be ignored and violated. The wrongs against which we now array ourselves are not common wrongs; they cut to the very root of human life."

* * *

BUT the lofty appeals of patriotism are merged, as they are in our own case, in an ennobling sense of a duty to humanity. This war is one "to vindicate the principles of peace and justice in the life of the world, as against selfish autocratic power," and America enters it as one of the champions of the rights of mankind, and will only be satisfied when those rights are as secure as fact and the freedom of nations can make them. It is this conviction which inspires the President's noble appeal to chivalry and self-control. "Just because we fight, without rancour and without selfish objects, seeking nothing for ourselves but what we wish to share with all free peoples, we shall, I feel confident, conduct our operations as belligerents without passion and ourselves observe with proud punctilio the principle of right and fair play we profess to be fighting for."

* * *

CERTAIN passages in the address are an indictment of the methods of the German Government, as remorseless in their moral candour as anything that has been spoken or written since the beginning of the war. There is to be no excuse for saying that America has drifted into hostilities through the blundering of politicians or the mistakes of her diplomatists. The crimes of autocracy are hideous and glaring, and among the most corrupting of them are its intrigues against the safety and welfare of other states. "A steadfast partnership for peace can never be maintained except by the partnership of democratic nations. No autocratic Government could be trusted to keep faith within it or observe its covenants....Only free peoples can hold their purpose and their honour steady to the common end and prefer the interests of mankind to any narrow interest of their own."

* * *

IT is with unfeigned delight that we have no longer to speak of America as the greatest of the neutrals. We value greatly the material help which she will bring to the cause of the Allies at the most critical period of the war. We hope also for far-reaching results in Germany. Disillusion has already entered the hearts of her people; American hostility may turn disillusion into despair; and then the day of deliverance will be at hand. But at the present moment, and in this place, we are thinking chiefly of the reinforcement of the deep conviction of conscience and the religious ardour, as of the servants of the living God, which have driven the noblest and most Christian men of our own nation as crusaders into this struggle. There is no word of moral appeal in President Wilson's address and no gladdening vision of freedom, which has not been to us a source of strength during nearly three years of terrible effort. But this primal faith needs constant renewal, and once again it shines with untarnished splendour before our eyes.

* * *

WE cannot bring these short comments to a close without sending a most cordial message of greeting to the men and women who are bound to us by special ties of sympathy in the Unitarian Churches of America. Their ministers and people have given us freely of their sympathy and friendship in our time of trial, but neutrality has created some barriers of reserve, not indeed in private letters, but so far as public speech and action were concerned. Now these barriers are thrown down. We stand upon common ground. We are comrades in arms; and the flame of righteousness will burn more brightly in our hearts because we clasp hands in a common vow of dedication with the men and women who inherit the wisdom of Emerson, and the Christian idealism of Channing, and the devotion of Theodore Parker to the cause of human freedom.

* * *

WE take off our hats to Col. John Ward, M.P., the hero of the Tyndareus. The behaviour on board was splendid, and none of us can think without emotion of those thousand men standing in perfect order and singing the "Long, long trail" as the ship settled down. But at the critical moment it is leadership that counts. A private in the Middlesex Regiment writes:—"No doubt it was the splendid discipline and courage of us all which was the means of saving us. We even rescued the five pet dogs of the regiment. Our colonel, John Ward, Labour Member of Parliament, was great, and acted as a man in charge of men should act." Nowhere will the story of his heroism be received with keener pleasure and admiration than among his friends in the Rev. W. G. Tarrant's congregation at Wandsworth, of which he has been a member for many years.

* * *

The story of Col. John Ward's life reads like a romance. He began work at 7 years old. He tried to run away to sea, an escapade which ended in the workhouse. Later he worked as a navvy on the construction of the Manchester Ship Canal, saw active service as a common soldier in the Sudan, and on his return to England, founded the Navvies Union and became its general secretary. But the big heart and the strong common sense of the man triumphed over every change of fortune, and he is now the popular Labour M.P. for Stoke-on-Trent and a trusted leader of men.

* * *

Lord Bryce made an important speech at the National Liberal Club last week, in which he laid stress upon three non-party questions with which British statesmanship has to deal. They stand in the forefront of any scheme of social reconstruction.

> One of them [he said] is the land question. Wherever I have travelled I have found that nothing makes so much for the general welfare of a nation, and for its political stability, as the division of the land among a large number of small owners cultivating their own farms. This is the strongest point of the United States and of Canada. The want of it is the weakest point in Spanish America. It is a source of strength in Switzerland and in most parts of France. It is one of the objects which Australia and New Zealand are making efforts to secure. We must, after the war is over, resume our efforts to establish it here.
>
> Another question is liquor. Nowhere, I fear, does intemperance work so much evil in any civilised and progressive people as here in our own islands. It is our greatest national source of waste, and of disease, of crime, of poverty, and of wretchedness.
>
> A third group of questions are those connected with the conflict of Labour and Capital. This conflict is all over the world, and everywhere experiments are being tried for the purpose of mitigating it. Some of these experiments have proved valuable and deserve our study. In every country one finds that what wise and impartial men desire is a spirit of mutual consideration and comprehension of one another's sentiments, which shall exclude violence on the one side and oppression on the other. In the competition of production and commerce which will come after the war, that nation will fare best which is pervaded by such a spirit, which seeks equity and social justice, and unites its efforts for the common good instead of wasting them in the strife of class.

* * *

Turning to what he called the Spirit of Liberalism which ought to inspire and guide us to-day Lord Bryce uttered an impressive warning against reliance upon State action, which would cripple independent personality and individual initiative.

> Seventy years ago [he said] the toast at Liberal gatherings used to be, "Civil and religious liberty, the cause for which Hampden died on the field and Sidney on the scaffold." Civil and religious liberty in the old sense of the term has been completely achieved. But liberty in another sense is menaced by a new attack. We hear demands made that the State shall step in to take charge of and direct branches of industry and commerce which have hitherto thriven without that direction, establishing banks, financing enterprises, organising companies to exploit the resources of tropical countries, perhaps secretly inspiring those methods of peaceful penetration by which Germany was trying to reduce her neighbours to financial vassalage. These are Prussian methods, for in Prussia the State is all in all, and the individual is bidden to serve it and be absorbed in it....In Germany State action has secured wonderful military efficiency, has pushed businesses and helped many men to make great fortunes. But what is the price the people have paid for these things? They have been disciplined and drilled and trained to passive obedience, and obliged to take even their morality, if morality it can be called, from their omnipotent State which knows no ethical rule but its own interests.... If we have to choose between such wealth as State control has given to the great business firms of Germany and Freedom, let us have less wealth and more freedom.

* * *

Very little notice has been taken in the press of an important event which took place on March 31. On that day the time-limit of ten years for the suppression of the Opium Traffic between India and China expired. After long agitation against powerful financial interests a complete victory has been won. In the attack on the traffic and the constant harassing of the Government of the day which have led to this happy result, many readers of The Inquirer have played a conspicuous part. It is with an immense sense of relief that we realise that delays are at an end, and in the matter of opium our relations with China are now entirely honourable and clean. China is happier and more friendly in consequence, and a heavy load of discredit has been removed from our own shoulders. In a free country, where there is the possibility of an instructed public opinion, abuses, which are morally scandalous and not merely incidents of policy, always yield in time to strong and persistent attack. Reformers may well keep March 31, 1917, as a day of great encouragement.

* * *

Perhaps it is hardly fair to indulge in any comments upon the scheme for a federation of the Evangelical Free Churches until it is placed before the public in a full and coherent form. But paragraphs, which are evidently inspired by the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare and his friends, appear from time to time, and enable us to perceive the general lines of agreement which are to be accepted as a common basis. We have always feared that a movement, which has very little fresh religious inspiration behind it, would be marked by intellectual timidity and represent the dull middle-courses of the official mind. There is apparently to be no place in this new type of Nonconformity for the original and eager minds which are facing spiritual problems in a new way, unless they will first of all declare their "adherence to the Jesus of history and the Christ of faith, as set forth in the Œcumenical creeds of the early and undivided Church." Phrases like this, which are pompous and commonplace, and quite futile for any purpose of vital reconstruction, will not stir a ripple of interest among people who have drifted away from the churches because religion speaks to them in a dead language.

* * *

We have received the following resolution for publication, and commend it to the enthusiastic support of our readers:—"That the Executive Committee of the National Unitarian Temperance Association very strongly appeals to His Majesty's Government to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drink in order that (1) foodstuffs so greatly needed by the people may not be destroyed to make harmful drinks, (2) the nation may put forth its fullest strength and reach its greatest efficiency at this critical time, and (3) when the war ends and our soldiers and sailors return they may be protected from the temptations to drink which will be, otherwise, pressed upon them and to which, at such a time of jubilation, they will be so likely to succumb, with dire consequences to themselves and others."

THE TRIUMPH OF LIFE.

While we dispute about the manner of the Resurrection, the triumphant fact which inspires the souls of men may elude our grasp. We are too prone to refuse the glorious gifts of God unless we can explain their meaning or trace the precise method of their coming. When the critic has examined the Gospel narratives and pruned away every detail which may be due to the growth of tradition, the power of the Risen Life, dwelling in the hearts of men and illumining the hereafter with its love and trust, remains as the most wonderful thing in our experience. For ourselves we are content to regard all the language of picture and symbol and doctrinal explanation, which men have woven around it, as their tribute to the grandeur and sweep of this conviction of the triumph of life and love, which filled their hearts with immortal gladness. Probably it is well that our own words about it should be simple and few, and we know of none more satisfying than those of a primitive Christian writer. Speaking of death in its relation to Jesus Christ the author of the Book of Acts says, "It was not possible that he should be holden of it." In saying this he came as close to the heart of the matter as anyone has succeeded in doing. The Christian disciple can never think of the Master whom he loves as held fast in the dominion of death.

Though we read the story of Christ's burial, it is not there in the world of graves that we find any symbol of his memory or abiding presence. We turn from all the feeble pomp of death to things that glow with the promise of life. We rejoice that for us our Easter Festival comes in the spring of the year. We find the poetry of the resurrection in the renewal of life, when flowers cover the dark earth and birds greet the rising sun and our own hearts recover their confidence and joy in presence of this miracle of loveliness.

But there are other things which speak to us even more clearly of the triumph of life. In the day of battle and war, when death is reaping a rich harvest, we turn for help and inspiration to the souls of men. If we have ever wondered whether human virtue is the plaything of death, we know now that it is impossible that it should be holden of it. Duty calls, danger is at hand, and at once thousands of young men, the pride of their race, sacrifice every dream of earthly happiness in order to obey. They lie wounded and suffering in the hospital, many of them with the knowledge that they will never recover health and strength. We receive short pencil notes from them radiant with cheerfulness, telling us that they are all right and that we must not worry. Others of them will never come back; they have won the honour of a soldier's grave; and we treasure as their best memorial the few words of grateful affection which they wrote and carried about with them as their last message home, in case they should be killed. There is an almost unearthly grandeur of soul about it all. The fire has burned up the petty dross of their lives; they stand revealed in their essential manhood. As for death, it is impossible that they should be holden of it. They belong to the race of the immortals.

Nor can we fail at this hour to include in our thought of the Resurrection the uprising of the soul of a nation against the things which weaken and enslave it. Only the power of an endless life, aflame with the love of justice and human right, can break the rod of the oppressor or cut the silken fetters of habit which hold men back from the supreme decisions of duty. In Russia men have come up out of their graves, and the spirit of freedom has triumphed over death. In the United States the decision has been taken to dare all and to risk all for the sake of righteousness, and this decision has been announced to the world in words which are a confession not of political prudence but of the soul's victory. "Civilisation itself seems to be in the balance, but right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest to our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own government, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for the universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as will bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free." These words are a call to men to share, not in the harvesting of death, but in the triumph of life.

In the form of an address to his own soul Shakespeare has set before us the paths of life or death, of inward decay or of immortal power which are open to the choice of men and of nations :—

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Foiled by these rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?

The answer which the great humanist gives to his own question is the same as that which countless men and women have learned in the lowly ways of suffering and martyrdom and Christian service, as slowly they have won their way to the power of an endless life :—

Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:
So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
And death once dead, there's no more dying then.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

New doth the sun appear,
The mountains' snows decay,
Crowned with frail flowers comes forth the baby year.
My soul, yet in that frost
Which flower and fruit hath lost,
As if all here immortal were, doth stay:
For shame! thy powers awake,
Look to that heaven which never night makes black,
And there, at that immortal sun's bright rays,
Deck thee with flowers which fear not rage of days.

William Drummond of Hawthornden.

Christ lives ideally in every disciple's soul. His image in our hearts is the centre of light which draws into it and around it whatever we feel to be holiest and best. In our thought he stands for the highest that has opened to our conceptions; for the life and mind which attracts our noblest aspiration, and looks down upon us with the most august authority. To emerge, like him, from the desert of our temptations, faint perhaps with the conflict, but serene in victory; to take freely home to us the very soul of self-renunciation, and ask nothing but scope to find the true, to love the good, and bear the chastisement of others' peace; to be inspired with courage to rebuke without passion, and with clear affection to pity without weakness; to look always through the clear eye that no disguise can dazzle, and no latent beauty escape; to keep a wakeful mind, patient of the constancy of duty and the vigils of prayer; so to dwell in God, that no path of space or time can be a way of exile, and the heavy cross and bleeding feet may be simply grievous to the body and not hurtful to the soul:—this is our last ambition, when lower clouds are swept from off our sight; this, our quenchable thirst, when once the spring of life has touched and cooled our lips. This image of perfectness—this Christ within the mind—holds us captive by its native authority, and wins us by its grace and truth, when only God is there to ask account of what we think. James Martineau.

Protect, O Lord, Thy suppliants, support their weakness, and wash away their earthly stains; and while they walk amid the darkness of this mortal life, do Thou ever quicken them by Thy light; deliver them in Thy mercy from all evils, and grant them to attain the height of good. Give them strength to suffer with Christ and through their faithfulness make them partakers of the gladness of his victory.

Amen.

VERSE.

SORROW TRIUMPHANT.

Let me not by excess of sorrow grieve
Thy gracious spirit. Pain must surely be
In Heaven itself when Love looks forth to see
Its loved ones crushed by sorrow. I believe
That in thy new home thou may'st still receive
News of the old, rejoicing in its joy
And through its sadness suffering some alloy
Of that great peace which souls like thine achieve.
Therefore I summon all my strength to be Glad in thy gladness, and that not through me
Comes any loss to thy felicity:
For well I know that wheresoe'er thou art,
If in that new life memory play a part,
I have a place still in thy loving heart.

Anon.

RELIGION AND PATRIOTISM.

By the Rev. Paul Revere Frothingham of Boston, Mass.

Reprinted from The Christian Register of March 1.

All of us believe in peace. We pray to have it come; and, coming, we hope to have it permanent! But peace, after all, beautiful as it is, and blessed as it is, constitutes a condition, not a high incentive. It is a fruit, and not a force. Peace at nearly all times is a heavenly privilege; but I should be very slow myself in seeking to deny that resistance to evil may not sometimes come to be a duty that is holy and unselfish. There come times when it is a country's perdition, just as it is a man's perdition, to consider only, or principally, what is safe. Hence it is that I seem to see just now two great and important regions of thought, and possibly of endeavour, opening out before us as a country. In both of them our patriotism will be called upon to have a close association with religious impulses and hopes. There are, you know, two things which more than any others appear to characterise religious efforts and ideals. The first is religious unity. The second is practical and helpful missionary activity. Let us look at both of them as they seem to find their counterparts in demands that are made upon our patriotism.

1. The dream of religious unity is one that need not be enlarged upon. In a material world that emphasises unity we weary of spiritual differences. Partition walls are coming down. Harmony is coming in, and bickerings are going out. Churches work together, and in worship feel themselves as one. They recognise a common aim and object. The truly religious person nowadays is not interested solely, or even supremely, in his own particular sect: he is interested in the great Church Universal, and in religion as a power to strengthen men and save them. He is interested in religion irrespective of the special roof that serves for shelter.

And so, I am convinced, it must be with our patriotism. It should not be a question of America first, or France first, or England first. It should be a question of civilisation first, and a great world-order that must somehow be secured. There can be no narrow, purely national, or sectarian patriotism after this. All true patriotism, like all truly spiritual religion, must have a larger unity in view. There is a sense, to be sure, in which this war is being fought out to secure the rights of small nations. Those rights must be established, and become inviolate. In securing them, however, we are destined to secure as well a larger, closer form of international comity and unity:—

I looked;—aside the dust-cloud rolled,
The Waster seemed the Builder, too;
Upspringing from the ruined Old,
I saw the New.

That New, as far as we can see at present, is destined to become a closer phase of co-operative action between nations which believe in liberty and are willing to abide by law. It took the loosing of forces to engage in war to bring about the conception of a League of Nations to enforce a state of peace. Like-minded nations henceforth must do everything they can to get together, and to stand together! Nothing seems to me much more important than that America should recognise a world-responsibility and should be willing to take her share in the bearing of a common burden. We can no longer revel in the sense of isolation, nor in the safety that it once insured. For good or ill, we find ourselves linked up henceforth with all the world. This being so, it should be our duty to have our larger obligations count for good. National isolation no longer being actual, or even possible, international unselfishness should take its place. As hitherto we have upheld high ideals alone, so now we should prepare ourselves to co-operate with others for their maintenance and safety. "The curse of civilisation," says Mr. Beck in his little book on 'The War and Humanity,' "the curse of civilisation, and one of the most fruitful causes of war, is the selfish spirit of nationalism which declines to accept a share in the common burdens of civilisation. Such a spirit is perhaps natural; but the weakness of this spirit of detachment is that many quarrels that arise between two nations, however superficially they may seem to be peculiar to them, often raise moral questions which vitally concern civilisation." In them all nations have a stake, and all must be willing to assume responsibility if peace and justice are to be secured. If a family of nations is to be realised, the ties of family must first of all be recognised.

Hence it is that all of us could so heartily rejoice in the decided action that was taken by our Government two weeks and more ago. It put us where we properly belong. It linked us up with the nations that are serving and suffering for things we hold in common. Whether any further or more forcible action may be necessary, none of us, perhaps, are quite prepared to say. Time alone can show. Events, as they develop, must decide. Others have suffered, and are suffering still. It may be destined that we enter into that suffering, and take some part in it as a nation. But in any event we ought to feel the stirrings of a larger patriotism. We should recognise the presence of a common load of sorrow. We should do more than as yet we have done to help assuage and lighten it. Do you remember the stirring and dramatic words of Alan Seeger? A young American, he felt he had "a rendezvous with death." In company with others he laid his life down on the fields of France. He wrote:—

Under the little crosses where they rise
The soldier rests; now round him undismayed
The cannon thunder, and at night he lies
At peace beneath the eternal fusillade,

That other generations might possess
From shame and menace free in years to come
A richer heritage of happiness,
He marched to that heroic martyrdom.

If we be not destined, as most of us must hope we may not, to enter any further into that great martyrdom, at least let us recognise the ties that bind us to the nations that have borne it. Let us recognise and make them more enduring.

2. If, in the course of events that cannot be controlled, we should be drawn at last, after all our long forbearance, to take an active share in that great martyrdom, will you let me say one thing in closing? That thing is this—that still another element of religion should control our patriotism. It is the element of a truly missionary impulse, or endeavour. In all true and deep religion the guiding and controlling motive is to give, not get; to serve some other, not to save one's self. "You cannot," it has been well said, "you cannot save your own soul alone; you save it only by making it of use. The only safe goodness is a serviceable goodness." And so it should be with our patriotism. If, finally, we are goaded and coerced into using force, it should be a serviceable and unselfish use of force that we should be big enough and strong enough to use. Not that I am preaching war. I am not. I am preaching firmness, strength, and resolution, which are things I have believed in using from the first, although, when it comes to that, there are some things that are almost worse than war, and among them is the selfish fear of it.

No! I am not preaching war: I am only preaching, should it come, an unselfish war—a war that neither begins nor ends with thoughts of national safety and self-protection, but has the thought of service clearly and consistently in view! Our "dignity"—it is not that! The "safety of our citizens"—it is not that! No, there are larger things at stake, there are deeper things in danger! There are things we share in common with those other nations in this world that were conceived in liberty, and pay respect to law. It is of these things we must think. And should there be no way of going forward save by using force, it is toward such ends as these that force should be employed. Not of cities only, and the protection of our cities, should we think. Not for our country merely, and her safety against foreign intrigues and attack, should we make our preparations. Like the ancient Maccabean, we should rather have in mind the preservation of the laws, and the coming of a commonwealth of nations. It should be, in other words, a missionary effort that we make, with high and firm intent to serve the whole, and merge our interests with those of others. Not necessarily with force of arms should we contend, but putting forth our great financial forces, and exercising economic power.

People sometimes may be heard to say: If we are drawn at last, and against our will, into this great conflict, let us go in for ourselves alone. Why should we consider others, or become allied with them? Let us not involve ourselves with foreign governments, nor come to be entangled in the efforts European nations make. So some who think themselves American suggest. But nothing could evince a more narrow, false, and selfish kind of patriotism than sentiments like those. America stands for brotherhood, for co-operation, for service done to the oppressed! America believes in the dawning of a new and brighter day! America believes, and has ever taught, by word as well as deed, that nations ought to live and work together peaceably, not seeking to advance their rule by conquest or oppression.

If peace can therefore be preserved with honour, and a due sense of a world-responsibility, it should be preserved. This is not the time for angry, selfish, or vindictive thoughts. Attempts should not be made to sweep us off our feet. It is a time for sorrow, not excitement; for calm resolve, not passionate appeal. But if sad events should happen, and decide things for us, then we should pledge ourselves to serve the whole cause of humanity, keeping civilised existence upon earth in view! Not self-defence alone must we consider, but the great defence of human rights, and human liberties and laws!

In these troubled days of great perplexity, a new and deeper consecration, therefore, at our country's altar is demanded of us. Our country has an obligation to the world; and for ourselves, we need a broader, holier, more religious trust in what her duty is to be. Whatever comes, or is avoided, not backward but forward must we go, not to lesser but to larger forms of service and of sacrifice. And what the children need to guide them is the spirit that possessed the fathers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE MORAL TONE IN MUNITION FACTORIES.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I thought I had worded my letter so moderately that no one would take exception to it, and at this time I have no intention of entering into the moral problems of factory life both before and during the war. I will answer Mr. George Tarrant with actual facts and data when the war is over. I may be permitted, however, to point out that medical men's work is not in "almost exclusively" morbid fields; that even if it were so there is no necessary connection, say, between Bright's disease and morbidity of mind, nor between a bad cold or sore throat, or hundreds of slighter bodily ailments, and ill states of the mind. There are few falser statements, in its hidden assumption of a causal connection between a state of the body and a state of the mind, than the adage "a healthy mind in a healthy body." That there is some intimate connection no competent student would deny, but I have known painful attacks of acute rheumatism do more to save young girls' minds from idle, foolish fancies of illness, and bring out in both men and women the unselfish side of life in a way that no health of body would have done, and my experience is not unusual among those medical men who take the trouble to observe more than immediate medical aspects of their problems. The "War Babies" cry was a piece of journalism, and on a par with modern journalism for both its misrepresentation of facts and its unwholesome sensationalism, miscalled frankness. But it is well that all serious minded people should realise the truth about this sensation; the inquiry was made into the danger of illegitimacy, and it was this inquiry that yielded, happily, nearly negative results; but no real study of evidence that I am aware of was anywhere made into immoral conduct, which can only too readily avoid parental consequences. On these problems a medical man is entitled to speak with some weight. The last word has not yet been said on the sheltering of young life from evil influences; it is not quite such antiquated nonsense as it is the modern fashion to assert. But I have nowhere said one word to disparage munition workers, men or women, boys or girls; I have more than once spoken very definitely on the great and willing readiness of most young and old people to give their bodily energies and mental concentrative powers to the war and the Empire. But I only ask that the spiritual side of manhood and womanhood, of motherhood and fatherhood be not forgotten. And I do suggest, and suggest with nearly twenty years of active medical and lecturing experience behind me, that the best way to keep the spiritual forces of life living amongst our young and old folks is not by talking unnecessarily about all the unclean aspects of drunkenness, evil diseases, and the bodily side of parentage, but by showing scientifically the nobleness of healthy life and its wonderful possibilities, and the great spiritual sanctities which arise out of these. I want ministers to do their very best, but I still hope they will not forget that their best ought to have two aspects—to help the material needs of the hour, but not less certainly to recognise that pain, suffering, trial, and adversity, as well as temptation, are only noble when they leave us stronger of will but not less refined in our thoughts and feelings, and holding bravely to the great human ideals of life.

It is often said to-day that the clergy and dissenting ministers have failed the nation; it may be so; if they have failed it is because they have drifted with the unscientific, economic materialism of the past forty years. But whether it be true or not, now is our time to rebuild on spiritual realities, and with the public house, the cinema, the music hall revue, and other counter influences of great power, to deny that there is much increased temptation both to the soldier and the munitioneer in the altered social conditions that they find themselves in is futile; and here, if anywhere, the clergyman and minister have a part to play which is not second in importance even to other work which I hope they will do in other directions.

Apologising for trespassing so lengthily on your space, but feeling the very urgent importance of the subject.—Yours, &c.,

J. Lionel Tayler.

March 31, 1917.

MINISTERS AND NATIONAL SERVICE.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—I would like to suggest as one possible form of National Service for ministers that they should visit camps and soldiers' clubs and give the men short talks on temperance. I was talking to a soldier at a large recreation club and he told me, as is well known, that soldiers in camp do not have supper. The men, he told me, do not have enough money to buy both food and drink for their supper, so some prefer the drink, doing without any food. Could not these men be made to realise facts as they are as to the waste of food materials and the infinite gain that we as a nation and Empire should derive if we became temperate, instead of spending such enormous sums of money on a poison? If they cannot appreciate these facts, surely they can realise that they have a far better chance of making a good recovery from a wound if they are teetotallers, and so by making a sacrifice now they are helping themselves for the future.

As regards the subject of Dr. Lionel Tayler's letter one is glad to know from Mr. Tarrant's letter that the evil is not so bad as one is sometimes led to believe, but still one knows it exists, and it is not only the innocent girls that suffer. Our soldiers and Colonials are led astray, and if the men could be told a few facts from their aspect much might be done to mitigate an evil to which one ought not to shut one's eyes. Surely ministers could not perform higher National Service than help to reform these two evils.—Yours, &c., L. C. Jevons.

April 3, 1917.

DEAN HENSON AND REUNION.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—I venture to suggest that only a person of a very chilly temperament could have felt "cold" after having heard the whole of Dean Henson's sermon at the City Temple, to which you refer in this week's issue. There is no doubt that the Dean's views on Christian unity appear to have some decided limitations; but I think the following extracts from his sermon show fairly clearly the spirit in which he made his "historical appeal":—"Our efforts to unite the churches are only legitimate, reasonable, and promising if we continue and develop the tradition of the Reformers. And that tradition is not properly to be sought in their doctrinal confessions, which had reference to issues many of which are no longer vital, and to circumstances which have passed away, still less in their ecclesiastical systems....but in their courageous faith, and in their precedent of large innovation in the light of new knowledge. In their day they approved themselves to be 'not of them that shrink back into perdition, but of them that have faith unto the saving of a soul.' If we also would be worthy of that description, we must in our turn exhibit the same temper." Again: "The principle of our religion is not retrogression to that which once was, and is no more, but progress to that which never yet has been, and yet shall be. We are not a garrison set to guard a beleaguered city, but the army of the Lord, following Him to the conquest of the world. Nothing less is the dénouement of human history to which we look forward."—Yours, &c.,

M. R. Jones.

April 1, 1917.

WAR SAVING ASSOCIATIONS AND MINISTERS OF RELIGION.

A correspondent writes:—

"In a description of National Service occupations engaged in by ministers reported in your last issue, no mention is made of War-Saving Association work. May I plead for more attention to this most important form of national service? Ministers of religion could do much more for it than they are doing. In this district, thanks chiefly to a most energetic secretary, our Committee has formed more than sixty Associations in the last six months, but I regret to say that only two of these have been started by churches. The apathy of ministers causes surprise and disappointment. It is work that cannot wait, and is of pressing urgency, even more urgent now than ever as the Government is making use of our organisation for the promotion of food economy. May I urge ministers to start War Saving Associations in their congregations and Sunday schools, and so encourage habits of thrift which will not only immediately help the country, but which may avert social disaster after the war."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

116th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,570	0	9
The Dennett Hall Girls' Club, Croydon, per Miss M. L. Green (second donation) ..	0	10	0
The Staff of the Haverstock Hill Central Girls' School, per Mrs. Westaway (twenty-first donation)	0	16	0
Miss E. J. Ellis, New Zealand	0	5	0
The West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (twentieth donation)..	0	14	0
Mr. Geo. H. Cox (third donation)	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Green (eleventh donation) ..	1	0	0
Edinburgh Provincial Training Centre Educational and Administrative Staffs (twelfth donation).. ..	2	0	0
Miss Jessie Meade King (second donation)	3	0	0
Mrs. William Tangye (nineteenth monthly donation)	5	0	0
Liverpudlian (ninth donation)	50	0	0
Mr. Alfred Frost	2	2	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (twelfth donation)	1	12	10
Miss F. A. Short (sixteenth donation)	5	0	0
Miss Sophia S. Partridge (fourth donation)	1	0	0
M. and G. P. (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. C. Reynolds (twelfth donation)	0	10	0
Mr. G. W. Hyslop, Australia (second donation)	0	5	0
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (seventeenth monthly donation)	1	0	0
Z. A. (eighteenth monthly donation)	10	0	0
Miss Mary T. Worsley (sixth donation)	3	3	0
Mrs. Winser (twenty-seventh monthly donation) ..	1	0	0
Mrs. W. Hutcheon (second donation)	0	10	0
	£16,670	8	7

Parcels have been received from: Mrs. Gotch; Mrs. Frank Hopps; Miss L. Jones; The Women's Club, Effra Road Unitarian Church, Brixton (per Mrs. Stevens); Mrs. Kenrick Champion; Miss Lucy Coe; Miss H. M. Hutton; Mrs. Fellows Pearson; Unitarian Church, Swansea (per Mrs. Simon Jones); Miss Swaine; Mill Hill Chapel Sewing League, Leeds (per Miss E. M. Buckley); The Misses L. and A. Hall; Miss E. C. Harvey; Mrs. Brunner; Hope Street Women's Adult School (per Mrs. Roberts); High School for Girls, Wolverhampton; Miss Blake; Women's League, Stockport (per Miss New); Essex Church Work Parties; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. V. D. Davis); Miss J. Suttill; Miss D. Roscoe; Miss Ashton; "J. S."; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Miss B. Harvey; The Girls' County School, Penzance; Monton Church Women's Union; Mrs. Nanson.

WEEKLY NOTES.

On visiting the Hut at Calais this morning I was astonished at the sight that met my eyes. It is temporarily converted into an examination hall, and some hundreds of young soldiers were undergoing an examination to qualify for commissions in the Belgian artillery. It is a three days' examination, and this is the third day. They were having a paper on trigonometry this morning, and judging by their appearance many of the men found it pretty hard. I saw a good deal of anxious gazing for inspiration at the roof and walls of the hall, and heard a good deal of restless shuffling of soldierly-looking feet! All these young men are down from the front, where many of them have been serving since 1914. The examination was supposed to stop at 11.15, when the dinners begin in the Hut, but for some reason they were allowed another half hour. Outside the door was a mob of men waiting to come in. At last the signal to stop was given. Like magic the papers and inkpots were gathered up, and almost before the men had left their seats, our serving-men were spreading cloths, laying plates and knives and forks. The examinees were still passing out of one door as the first diners rushed in at the other. After a turn in the open air most of them would return to dine a little later.

Since my last visit the Belgian Army has erected six large huts to afford sleeping accommodation for soldiers, on the land allotted originally to the Hut. This reduces the space for open air recreation, but still leaves space for football and other ball games. A nice drive is being made up to the door of the Hut, which is to be bordered with grass, and in the summer a number of tables and chairs will be set out here for out-of-door refreshment. The whole installation is becoming very complete.

As much ground as can be spared is converted into a vegetable garden, and the ground is very carefully prepared and should help to supply the kitchen later. Now that the Army has supplied plenty of sleeping accommodation free and the men have our Hut for meals and for recreation, and now that concerts, cinema and dramatic entertainments take place most days, there is not much excuse for them to do anything but behave well, and I think as a whole they live up to their privileges.

This evening I saw a class of 55 men learning English. The teacher was teaching according to the latest methods, and the men seemed very keen. Already, after only eight lessons, only English was spoken by the teacher, and the directions he gave seemed to be understood. This was the beginners' class, and there are two others—for medium and advanced pupils—as 160 men are now learning.

Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 8 by 12 in. up to 14 by 24 in., and all intermediate sizes, with a string run in the neck.

Pyjamas (urgent).

Shi ts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.

Pants, vests.

Towels of all sorts.

For the Maternity Home at Calais :—

Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).

Chemises for women.

Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N W. 3.

NORTH END DOMESTIC MISSION, LIVERPOOL.

From a Liverpool Correspondent.

Another war-time year's work has been completed at the Hamilton Road Mission, and another Report issued—fortunately, not curtailed, notwithstanding the cutting down of expenses loyally practised by most of us. Unregenerate human nature is apt to be bored by the numerous reports, all stressing their own particular processes, with which it is confronted at about this time of the year. There is, it is to be feared, nothing quite so easy as to omit to read them. Yet one reads this report carefully and completely; not for any fine writing, God forbid! nor for any assumptions of exceptional fitness for teaching; but for its air of large sincerity, simplicity, reality, which is refreshing and invigorating. One feels better for this contact with a bit of reality; and—perhaps an even healthier sign—one is secretly made uncomfortable by the suspicion that to be "above the battle" is not, after all, the superior position. It is holier to be in the thick of it with Mr. and Mrs. Haigh. There are many critical observers now of current "religious" professionalism. Mr. H. G. Wells, for example, whose influence on the general mentality is undeniable, has shrewd things to say about it in his recent book 'War and the Future.' It is a pity that Mr. Wells and other people who matter cannot or do not see from within the working of such a place as this Mission before making those generalisations which sting, because we know secretly that they are largely true. That will not happen, because it is characteristic of humble men of heart to shrink from the limelight, and their work is not egocentric at all. Even the Annual Meeting, which was held on March 27, is a shy and modest affair. It is not, as the President and Chairman, Mr. C. Sydney Jones, pointed out, advertised or reported in the local press, nor is an audience attracted by invited speakers or even the offer of refreshments. Those who come to it come because they appreciate and sympathise with the work and the workers, and are aware of their quite extraordinary importance in the scheme of things. Needless to say they do not arrive in embarrassing multitudes. Yet such is the oddity and perversity of the Missionary, that this intimate understanding with a few minds which realise is more heartening to him than any quantity of observation; and he always expresses what seems a disproportionate sense of gratitude to the handful of people who allow him once a year to tell them about his methods, his enthusiasms, and his ideals. This year he missed sadly, as he said, from the familiar group three friends: Mr. Hawkes, for so long the universal friend, now lying seriously ill; Mr. Craddock, whose wisdom and gentle humour had always been a feature at this meeting; and the man whose understanding helpfulness was never forgotten by Hamilton Road, Mr. Roberts.

This year the proceedings were even more informal than ever. The Chairman recalled a passage in Prof. Ramsay Muir's 'History of Liverpool,' showing how during the great Civil War thoughtful people used to gather in that same ancient chapel while the conflict raged outside. In the same way they themselves came for a moment apart from the noise of the greater conflict of to-day to try to get at the heart of things with Mr. Haigh. Not that he was aloof from the struggle; seventy or eighty of his young men had gone out to their great ordeal, taking with them the spiritual influences of Hamilton Road. When the days of peace came again at last, those influences would, he believed, be more stirring and more visible than ever. Mr. F. Robinson seconded the resolution of thanks with profound recognition, he said, that such work as this demanded every deep human quality, and that it was instrumental in effecting a vast amount of personal and social good.

"Now, Mr. Haigh, talk to us," said the Chairman. So Mr. Haigh talked—of the privilege it was to gather round them the young, the four or five hundred young people who were of the future, and the joy it was to keep hold of even some of these; of his own boys who had gone forth in the greatest of all causes; of their letters to him, so vivid and apt because of the great experience into which they had been caught, but gay and joyful still; of the grand question: What are we going to do for these boys when they return grown up in their unique knowledge? Of the privilege of being called to be a master-workman with God in touching, sometimes, a human spirit, so that, like the great artist he could say: there I was with God, and masterly through God; of his constant endeavour to build round a religious centre reverence, awe, service, plus delight and youthful happiness; of the riper knowledge that the years bring, drawing from pessimism into the larger outlook and faith in life, so that Hamlet's lament is changed into "O happy state, that I am called to work with God!"; of faith in God, not in theoretical terms, but as one who feels the contact of a deep-hearted loving Spirit, in sympathy, giving inspiration—yes, even at times giving ecstasy, like a sudden spring in the soul.

The Rev. J. C. Odgers moved that the Report and Accounts should be adopted, and touched appreciatively on certain passages in the Report. Mrs. H. D. Roberts, in seconding, affirmed her intense belief in the reality and efficacy of the religious movement at Hamilton Road, in which the only propaganda was that of the Kingdom of Heaven, and apart from personal ends. Mr. Lawrence Holt proposed the officers and committee for the ensuing year, and spoke of the support that must be afforded to Mr. and Mrs. Haigh by the knowledge that the committee was so solidly and sympathetically behind them. The resolution was seconded by Mrs. Topham Steele.

Mr. Haigh, in thanking Mr. C. Sydney Jones for presiding, emphasised his unfailing support of the Mission, and the benefits of his influence and kindness.

The Mission has lost a generous friend by the death of Sir William B. Bowring, who left to it a legacy of £1,000, which is invested in the New War Loan. The late Miss Gaskell left the Mission the sum of £50, also invested. The Roll of Honour is printed at the end of the Report. Serjeant Charles Batson, K.L.R., and Private Harry Rimmer, London Yeomanry, have been killed in action.

EAST CHESHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the Union was held at Richmond Hill Church, Ashton-under-Lyne, on Saturday, March 24. A service, which was very well attended, was held in the afternoon, and was conducted by the Rev. H. E. Perry, who preached from the text (Ezek. i. 21), "For the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels." The whole chapter was a magnificent piece of imagery. The preacher took "the spirit of the living creature" as symbolic of the spirit of man, or the spirit of life, that wondrous mystic spirit so closely allied to the Great Spirit of the universe which pervades all nature, moving (greatest marvel of all) in the heart of man—God within us—life within life, the divine within the human. The wheels may be taken as symbolic of the machinery of life, and all is dead metal unless it is vitalised by the spirit of the living creature. All machinery, and especially religious machinery, is dead metal unless it is vitalised by the spirit of Life. We want, not more machinery, but more life within the wheels. The business meeting followed, the Vice-President, Mr. J. Hall Brooks, in the chair. The Executive Committee's Annual Report, Treasurer's Accounts and Reports from the churches were adopted. The accounts showed an adverse balance of £29 17*s.* 1*d.*, a decrease of indebtedness of £9 7*s.* 3*d.* compared with the previous year. The Executive Report showed that Marple had passed through a time of difficulty and trial, being again without a minister. The congregation was marking time until the war was over, the services being conducted monthly or fortnightly, and the Sunday school meeting regularly every Sunday. Congleton was bravely struggling on. Mottram was still without a settled minister. Ashton was congratulated on its greatly improved prospects, and with the advent of the newly appointed minister increasing prosperity was looked for. The election of officers followed, after which it was moved by Mr. R. T. Heys seconded by the Rev. George Street, and resolved, "That the action of the Executive Committee in preparing a Presentation Album and portrait in celebration of the President's Jubilee connection with this Union be confirmed. That should the health of the Rev. H. E. Dowson permit it the presentation be made at the quarterly meeting on April 26 (or failing that at the President's house). That the next senior minister in the Union, the Rev. G. A. Payne, make the presentation and that the Secretary or one of the Trustees of the Memorial Hall be invited to attend to receive the portrait on behalf of that Institution. Both album and portrait were on view at the meeting and were greatly admired. The latter is a sepia carbon enlargement in solid oak frame.

At the Public Meeting in the evening, Col. Pollitt, V.D., J.P., in the chair, addresses were given by Mr. George G. Armstrong, Councillor Margaret Ashton, and Dr. Estlin Carpenter.

Mr. Armstrong spoke of the difficulty of bringing our old traditions of love to God and love to man into harmony with this present world war. We must constantly watch our aims and see that they were true, all punishment we inflict must be to prevent wrong in the future, not to indulge our own vengeful feelings; we must purge our aims of all national self-seeking. Mere exercise of physical force can only bring us the opportunity of helping the human race; it cannot establish the right, it can only establish the opportunity for doing so. The unchartered freedom to act without regard to the rights and feelings of their neighbours all nations must surrender, or war after war will desolate the earth. There will have to be a limitation to the irresponsibility of nations and the establishment of an all-embracing authority which shall act as arbiter between them. We need faith to envisage such a change.

Miss Ashton alluded to the hymn just sung in which the phrase occurred "sons of one family," but it was so difficult to keep our hearts free from hate. We should never forget how we prayed to be forgiven our trespasses, "as we forgive those who trespass against us."

Dr. Carpenter spoke of our responsibility for the work which would become necessary after the war. The grounds of our faith remained entirely unaffected and the duties arising from that faith were only intensified. The wonders and marvels of nature, the eternal stars in their form and order, the sense of duty, the ideals of good—these things were the inspirers of our youth, they were there still; he was not conscious of any need to reconstruct his theology. Donald Hankey, in his 'Student in Arms,' had said that it was deplorable to see that men who were daily acting as good soldiers of Christ were yet indifferent to the religion he cherished—plenty of men who were alienated from Christianity were really manifesting Christianity in their lives. It was our work to show them that Christianity was not a scheme of theology, but a temper of soul, a sense of goodwill. Day by day as the war progressed we were made to realise how much more sin there is in the world than we had thought, but the quantity of evil does not make evil worse—a single sin is in itself as wicked as the infatuation of a whole nation. The revolution in Russia was the commencement of a great epoch, it was a stroke on the side of Democracy which had far-reaching potentialities in it, and it was a great encouragement to all lovers of progress. There was real hope of international progress; we had entered on a new period, though we were writing the new chapter in blood and tears; and we could all do something for these ideal causes, and so lift up the atmosphere of those around us.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the subscribers and friends of Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel was held on Tuesday, April 3. The very inclement weather prevented many friends from a distance from being present, but the meeting, if small, was hearty and enthusiastic. The chair was taken by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, who has always taken a close personal interest in the affairs of the Mission since he ceased to be minister of Stamford Street Chapel twenty-seven years ago.

The Committee's Report, which was presented by Mr. A. A. Tayler, the hon. secretary, stated that the conditions under which the work of the Mission had been carried on during the past year had been those of ever-increasing difficulty and ever-deepening need. The war had now removed almost all their young men. The Boys' Brigade and the Men's Club in particular had suffered greatly, and a heavy burden had been cast on the Minister and the remaining workers. The treasurer, Mr. W. S. Tayler, called attention to the serious deficit in the accounts. This year it had been necessary to use a legacy as current income, and even so there was a deficiency of £100 on the year's working. He made an earnest appeal for increased financial support which was absolutely necessary if the activities of the Mission were not to be seriously curtailed.

The Report of the minister, the Rev. W. J. Piggott, recorded that 141 men connected with the Mission were serving with His Majesty's Forces, but in spite of this serious loss, which affected the attendance at all the meetings of their societies, the work had been carried on with earnestness and vigour. New names had been added to the Church membership during the year, while the monthly Teachers' Conferences, the Mothers' Meeting, the Monday evening concerts, the Boys' Own Brigade, the Provident Bank and other activities had all had a successful year.

In moving the adoption of the Reports the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie spoke of the work as worthy of their appreciation and sympathy. The world, he said, would have been a very different place had it not been for its quiet and nameless workers like the men and women to be found at that Mission. In spite of everything, he felt that there was much to encourage them with hope when they compared the social conditions of our large cities with those which were prevalent formerly, and remembered the ravages of disease which had been checked by medical skill and various forms of human service. In spite of our present difficulties, and our ignorance of what is going to be, it was their duty to face the future bravely and with the sunshine of hope. He closed with a message of warm sympathy and cordial appreciation of their services to all the men of the Mission who were serving with the Forces in various parts of the world.

In seconding the resolution the Rev. A. Golland spoke as one who could appreciate from personal experience the special difficulties of the work at the present time and the large measure of success which had been achieved.

After the appointment of the officers and committee a hearty vote of thanks was passed to the Rev. W. J. Piggott and to all who have assisted in the work of the Mission during the past year. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the Chairman for presiding. In his reply Mr. Bowie spoke of his personal debt to the ten years which he spent in Blackfriars for the training it gave him in public work, and still more for its close ties of sympathy and friendship with the life of the people.

LEWIN'S MEAD DOMESTIC MISSION.

The annual meeting of the subscribers and friends of this mission was held on Tuesday evening at the mission buildings, Mr. F. G. Long being in the chair.

The chairman referred to the great loss the mission had sustained by the death of the president, Mr. Philip J. Worsley.

A resolution was carried by all standing in solemn silence, placing upon record the services rendered by the late president, his great interest in the cause of the poor, and his generous support of the mission, and expressing the sympathy of the meeting with the members of his family.

Mr. E. Sibree (hon. secretary) presented the committee's report, and Mr. J. Kenrick Champion (hon. treasurer) read the statement of accounts, which showed an excess of expenditure over income of £18. He appealed for further financial support, so that the deficit might be wiped out.

Mr. Thomas Gaylard (missionary) presented his annual report on the work of the mission during the past year. While by the exigencies of the war some of the mission's activities had to be curtailed, fresh work had been taken up which was proving no less useful, and even more necessary than that which had been discontinued. In visiting among the poor in the neighbourhood, it was impossible to get away from the war and its widespread effects, and the report detailed the measures taken to meet the circumstances of the times. Among the new institutions started during the year are a School for Mothers, conducted on the lines laid down by the Board of Education, and a War Savings Association, which are both flourishing and doing national work of a most useful kind. The deposits in the penny bank were the highest on record. All the institutions for the young were in a healthy state, and the Sunday school and chapel were also favourably reported on.

The reports and accounts were adopted, on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. A. Thorburn.

The Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones also addressed the meeting.

Votes of thanks were passed to the voluntary helpers; to the auditors, Messrs. J. T. Dannell and F. E. Gillard; to Dr. W. Tudor Jones and Mr. T. Gaylard for preaching the Mission sermons; and to the chairman for presiding.

Lieut.-Col. C. S. Bullock frequently receives invitations to preach from ministers and secretaries of congregations; and he desires it to be made known that for several months to come he will be unable to undertake any additional Sunday engagements beyond those for which he is already booked.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Accrington.—A most successful Sale of Work was held in connection with the Unitarian Church on Saturday, March 24. Mr. Alderman Wadsworth, of Todmorden, performed the opening ceremony, Mr. Alfred Webster presiding, and in an earnest address the former spoke of the good work done by the Sunday schools in the past and the yet more glorious opportunities which lie before them in the future. The object of the effort was to clear off a church debt, and pay for very necessary improvements in the Sunday school, and the sum realised was £130, which more than meets the need.

Exeter.—At a meeting of the congregation of George's Meeting held on March 19, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That this meeting of the congregation of George's Chapel hears with deep regret of the resignation of the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, and wishes to express its very high appreciation of the valuable services he has rendered during the past nine years, and hopes he will have greater opportunities of continuing his able advocacy of the great principles of religious liberty."

Liverpool.—A circular letter was issued to the members of the congregation of Hope Street Church in February stating that certain very desirable alterations and improvements to the organ were going to be undertaken at an estimated cost of £1,200, and asking for subscriptions to this end. It has now been announced that the Church Committee at their last meeting passed the following resolution: "That the reconstruction of the church organ be taken as constituting a congregational tribute of affection and respect to the late Sir William B. Bowring, Bart., the donor of the organ originally, and that a brass plate recording this fact be placed on the reconstructed organ as well as the plate commemorating its gift by Sir William." Contributions from friends of the church, in addition to those already received, will be welcomed, and should be addressed to Mr. F. Robinson, 165, Canning Street, Liverpool.

Liverpool: The Women's League.—A successful and helpful meeting of the Liverpool and District Branch of the Women's League specially called to meet the members of the London Executive was held in the Ullet Road Church Hall on Saturday, March 31, Mrs. Mullineux in the chair. Mrs. Blake Odgers, the president of the Women's League, gave an address on the 'Influence of the League on the Individual and the Community.' The overwhelming times in which we live and in which we are accustomed to massive efforts of all kinds, and the movements of millions of men, must not blind us to the fact that it is through the individual and by the individual that all solid and permanent foundations are laid. The time and care given to the training of the young of our own small body could be seen in the distinguished service of our young men in this great struggle, and the devoted work of the young women. Behind it all stand the mothers and wives, and it is for the deepening and strengthening of the ideals of womanhood that the League works. Mrs. Blake Odgers showed the value and support of co-operation, and pleaded for the courage that will enable women to realise the fellowship in faith as well as in works. Mrs. Travers Herford outlined the history of the Fellowship Branch of League work. The Fellowship was developed to link up: (a) Those separated from the old home; (b) those who go overseas to Canada, Australia, or New Zealand; (c) those who go to places where there is no Church. Touching examples were given of the direct help of this branch of work, and Mrs. Herford urged each Church to have its own Fellowship centre. Mrs. Sydney Martineau began her address with the searching questions: Is the League worth while? Are we coming to the help of our country in her time of need? This help, said the speaker, could not be reckoned by the number of socks or garments or by the money raised, but by the ideals that held and directed us. They are the life of the country, and though hidden have called forth the best of our young men to offer their lives (though they might not be able to put this feeling into words) as an expression of their deep-lying faith. There is also a practical side to our ideals, and the speaker would not deprecate that, but could we not in our liberal and liberating church give more expression to the spiritual joy in faith and its renewing power? Mrs. Martineau spoke of scattered churches helped by loving contact, and said the word could be given by women as well as by men. The League should not miss its opportunity, and would and did help men and boys as well as women and girls through its Fellowship. Miss Brooke-Herford, the organising secretary, said she must not dwell on the high ideals (though these were there) but rather on the practical machinery which made them realisable. Miss Herford briefly sketched the history of the League, and showed its development into Fellowship and International work, and help rendered in difficulties, e.g., the John Pounds Home. Again, through the monthly Letter, all could see the activities of the various churches, and where help was required. Mrs. H. D. Roberts (of Liverpool) summed up appreciatively in the vote of thanks the addresses of the speakers, and Miss Florence Melly ably seconded.

London: Stepney—The Annual Meeting of the congregation of College Chapel took place on Thursday, March 29, Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., in the chair. There was a good gathering of members and friends. The Committee's report recorded a year of active religious work, and expressed warm appreciation of Mr. Walter M. Long, the student-minister, the devotional spirit he infused into his ministerial and pastoral duties, his sympathy with the young people and his power of keeping together and animating the little group of workers. Thanks were also expressed to Mr. Wallace B. Tavener, son of the Rev. L. Tavener of Aberdeen, for the help he had lately been rendering to Mr. Long so acceptably in the Chapel and school. Mr. Chancellor, in moving the adoption of the report, expressed his warm interest in College Chapel, partly on account of his love and reverence for the founder, the Rev. R. Spears, and partly because of the persistent struggle maintained by the congregation with which the present secretary, Miss F. Hill, had been connected for many years. He entirely sympathised with the distinctly Unitarian attitude of the congregation and commended the plan that had been adopted of systematic distribution of Unitarian literature in the neighbourhood. In replying to a vote of thanks, Mr. Long said that anything he had been enabled to do would have been of but little avail had it not been for the hearty co-operation of all, and he urged that a greater effort should be made to sustain the highest spirit of worship in the services, and also to make our living Unitarian Faith more widely known because it stood the test on all occasions.

Manchester : Sale.—The Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A., has resigned his charge at the Sale Unitarian Church, and closes his ministry on June 30.

Poole.—At a special service held at the Unitarian Church on Sunday evening for welcoming new members, ten young people from 14 to 19 years of age were received into fellowship. They were all from the Sunday school or choir, and had mostly been members of a class held during recent weeks for instruction in religious doctrine. The service was arranged and conducted by the pastor, the Rev. G. B. Stallworthy. Mr. W. H. Higgin, B.Sc., president of the church committee, gave to each member the right hand of fellowship, together with a copy of J. C. Street's 'What I Believe,' J. H. Crooker's 'The Unitarian Church,' and suitable cards. The address was given by the Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., of Bournemouth, who urged that religious profession should be taken in all seriousness, and yet should not be deemed to repress vitality or to diminish the joys of life, but the contrary. The duet, 'Love Divine,' was effectively sung by Mrs. Ford and Mr. Travers to Mrs. Belben's accompaniment. The names of the young people were: Samuel Coles, Dorothy Wilkins, Doris Primmer, Gladys Maers, Lily Boger, Hilda West, Daisy Tilsed, Dorothy Wheadon, Annie Rowe, and Ethel Peckham. The coming forward of so many promising young folk is not due to any sudden effort, but is the fruit of several years of diligent superintendency and pastoral oversight in school and church.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A Russian Patriot.

Mr. Charles Rowley, writing in The Manchester Guardian, has invited the friends and admirers of Katherine Breshkovsky, who has just been released from Siberian exile, to send their names to him to be appended to an address of sympathy and admiration. This gifted and heroic woman, born of good family, and highly educated, has devoted herself from early life to the cause of freedom and reform, and, as is well known, she has spent the greater part of her life in prison under the most wretched conditions. Once she escaped, and lived for a while in America, but on returning to Russia under a general amnesty in 1907, she was arrested again, and, as she firmly refused to submit to any restriction on her peaceable methods of furthering educational and social ideals, she was sent to the furthermost parts of Siberia. A correspondent in The Manchester Guardian who was in Petrograd when sentence was passed upon this wonderful old lady with her fellow-prisoner, M. Tchaikovsky, in 1910, and who had the opportunity of a few minutes' conversation with her, describes Mme. Breshkovsky's general appearance at that time. Simply gowned in black, her pink complexion, white hair, sweet smile and cheerful speech impressed him strongly. In reply to some expression of sympathy, she replied, "Do not let this trouble you. I have been through it all before." During her banishment friends in England and America sent her gifts of money and clothing, but she gave the former to her fellow-exiles, and all she would accept of the clothing was a set of woollen garments.

Wordsworth's Grandson.

The eldest surviving grandson of Wordsworth died in Rome last month at the age of 80. Mr. Wordsworth, who was a Balliol man, and took a high degree at Oxford, was for many years President of Elphinstone College, Bombay, and was made a C.I.S. on his retirement. On returning to Europe he settled in the Island of Capri, where he bought an estate, and here, or in Rome, where he had latterly spent the winter months, he passed the rest of his days. He was twice married, but had no family. The Times describes him as a "great scholar, and a poet himself of high distinction." A volume of his sonnets was issued privately some years ago, but he always refused to publish his poetical writings on account of the similarity of his name with that of his grandfather—he, too, being "William Wordsworth"—though pressed to do so at one time by no less an authority than Matthew Arnold, who spoke in the highest praise of his work.

Saving the Infants.

The programme arranged by the National Committee which is organising a "Baby Week," to begin on July 1, is a very comprehensive one, and includes special sermons in churches and addresses in schools on child welfare, a meeting of Health Associations at the Guildhall, an Exhibition, special cinema and theatre matinees, mothercraft classes, and a garden party meeting, which will probably be held at the Botanical Gardens. Similar weeks held in Paris, Copenhagen, and in several large cities in the United States have been attended with considerable success, and the lives of many infants have been saved in consequence. It is good news that Lord Rhondda proposes very soon to introduce legislation which will authorise Local Authorities to provide and supply crèches. The first municipal crèche in London was opened this week at Lion House, Walworth Road, by the Mayoress of Southwark. It will accommodate fifty babies, and over 50 per cent of the cost will be paid by the Government in the form of a daily grant of 7*d.*, or, in the case of two or more children, 5*d.*

A Sixteenth-Century Breakfast.

English people eat far less than their forefathers did, even when there is no Food Controller to impose severe restrictions, and that is a good thing. Recently the following details about the arrangements for breakfast in the Percy family in the sixteenth century were quoted from one of the Northumberland MSS. The morning meal "for my Lord and Lady during Lent," we are told, consisted of "a loaf of bread, two manchets (or rolls), a quart of beer, a quart of wine, 2 pieces of salt fish, 6 baconn'd herrings, and 4 white herrings or a dish of sprats." At ordinary times "half a chine of mutton or a chine of beef boiled," took the place of fish. We can imagine with what dismay "my Lord and Lady" would have contemplated the prospect of meatless days and bread rations if such an ordeal as we are going through at the present time had been proposed to them.

A Prayer for Philadelphia.

Through the efforts of the Philadelphia Friends' Historical Society a bronze tablet has recently been placed in the north archway of the City Hall, Philadelphia, upon which is inscribed the prayer of William Penn for the city of his founding, contained in the farewell letter to the Province written after his first visit, 1682-4. The prayer runs thus: "And thou, Philadelphia, the virgin settlement of this Province, named before thou wert born, what love, what care, what service and what travail has there been to bring thee forth and preserve thee from such as would abuse and defile thee. Oh, that thou mayst be kept from the evil that would overwhelm thee. That, faithful to the God of thy mercies, in the life of righteousness, thou mayst be preserved to the end! My soul prays to God for thee that thou mayst stand in the day of trial, that thy children may be blessed of the Lord, and thy people saved by His power." According to The Philadelphia Friend the MS. containing the prayer was found, after a search of three years, somewhere in Chili. A wax seal still adheres to the old paper bearing the Penn coat of arms.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

IRISH LINEN TABLECLOTHS. Fine quality; very slightly imperfect. Size 2 by 2 yards, 9*s.* (postage 5d.). Beautiful floral designs. Write for this month's Bargain List, free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any condition. 6*d.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 2*s.* on silver; 3*s.* on gold; 8*s.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return. —I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 6*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 7, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3902. NEW SERIES, No. 1005.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL

NATIONAL CONFERENCE UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING will be held in the ULLET ROAD CHURCH HALL, LIVERPOOL, on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18, 1917, at 3.30.

A PUBLIC MEETING will be held in the HOPE STREET CHURCH HALL at 7.45 P.M., Mr. R. D. Holt, M.P., in the Chair. Addresses on "The Churches and Social Problems" will be given by Mr. Holt, Dr. P. H. Wicksteed, and Dr. Mellone.

The meetings will be held under the auspices of the Liverpool District Missionary Association.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL MUSICAL COMPETITION will be held at ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, on SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1917.

3.0. Competitions (Junior and Senior) among ten London Choirs.
6.0. Adjudicator's Award and Concert.

Admission by Programme: Adults, 1*s.*; Children 6*d.* (with tea); Teachers, 6*d.*

A. STEPHEN NOEL, Hon. Sec.

75 Hainault Road,
Leytonstone, E.11.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April.

15. Rev. WILLIAM JELLIE, B.A., of Southport.
22. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
29. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

THEISTIC CHURCH.

The PULPIT of this CHURCH is VACANT, and applications are invited for the post of MINISTER, to commence in SEPTEMBER next. Salary proposed at rate of £400 per annum. Applications should be sent to me, giving age, degrees, and full particulars of present and past career and appointments.

G. W. JOHNSON.

14 South Square, Gray's Inn,
London, W.C.1.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE APRIL ISSUE INCLUDE

The Scope of Reconstruction
The New Russia
The Nation's Youth
The Claim of Adult Education
The World of Industry
Reviews
Scholastic Appointments, etc.

Monthly, 1s.;
Annual Subscription, 14s. post free.

Published at "The Athenæum" Office,
11 Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.4.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed ..	£19,500,000

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. Hill, 40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead London, NW.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, April 15.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Mr. C. A. Piper.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. Frank G. Fincham; 6.30, Mr. J. Begg.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. Vint Laughland; 7, Mr. Harvey Lewis.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11, Rev. D. Delta Evans; 6.30, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Miss Maud B. Burtt.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. A. J. Howard Hulme.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. Rosling; 6.30, Mr. Frank G. Fincham.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. William Jellie, B.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. A. Pearson.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, M. F. Cottier,

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. W. L. Schroeder, M.A.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mrs. Spencer Yates; 6.30, Mr. W. H. Jacobsen.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. Jacks.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

BIRTH.

Barnes.—On April 5, to Mr. and Mrs. George Barnes (née Edith Cropper), The Cottage, Gladstone Road, Farnworth, Lancs, a son.

MARRIAGE.

Evans—Roberts.—On March 29, at Clwyd Street Calvinistic Methodist Chapel, Rhyl, by the Rev. J. Jones, M.A., assisted by the Rev. W. Richards, D. Conwil Evans, Sec. Lieut. 10th Cheshire Regt., to Mary Blodwen Roberts of Rhyl.

DEATHS.

Crompton.—Killed in action, in France, on March 5, 1917, Thomas Solly Crompton, Corporal, Taranaki Co. 4th Wellington Infantry, N.Z. Imp. Forces; a great grandson of the late John William Crompton, formerly of Maple Bank, Edgbaston.

Johnson.—On April 6, at 16 Eaton Road, Cressington Park, Liverpool, John Johnson, aged 64 years, eldest son of the late Thomas Johnson of Chester.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY, middle aged, desires POST: Companion Help, care of old Lady, &c. Active. Highest references. Small salary. Any part.—E. H., Inquirer Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 *Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.*4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N. W.*3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 171
A SCHEME OF SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION . 173
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 174
CHRIST IS RISEN 174
COMMUNION OF THE DEEPER LIFE . . 175
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The End of the Opium Traffic . . . 176
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
Nursing Adventures 177
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 177
MEMORIAL NOTICE:—
Miss Mary Swanwick 177
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 178
Bank Street Chapel, Bolton 178
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 179
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 180

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

WHEN we wrote last week we had no knowledge of the vote in Congress, though the result was a foregone conclusion. Now America has formally joined the great Alliance of nations to defeat the aggressive schemes of Germany, and having come in she is doing so with all her strength. During the week many messages of congratulation have been exchanged, and there are signs of grave rejoicing on the part of the leading citizens of the United States, as of men who have shaken themselves free from hesitation and crippling fear and have at length asserted their full freedom to do their duty.

* * *

THE following cablegram from Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, President of the American Unitarian Association, was received at Essex Hall, London, on Good Friday :—

> Pledged to united and resistless endeavour, we send our glad and solemn salutations to our comrades who have borne the burden of the great conflict and upheld the banners of freedom and humanity.

We can assure Dr. Eliot that his words, so cordial in their recognition of the way in which we in this country have been trying to uphold the cause of freedom since the beginning of the war, will be received with the most friendly gratitude by our readers. Many of us have known where his sympathies lay all along, and private letters received from him and other friends in America have shown how restless they have been under the enforced yoke of neutrality. His message has behind it the strength of his Association, and the prestige of his own name; for we cannot forget at this moment the magnificent services of his father, Dr. C. W. Eliot, the late President of Harvard, to the cause of the Allies both in speech and writing. More than any other man he has given coherence to the opinions of educated men in the United States, and helped them to grasp the spiritual issues for freedom and civilisation which are at stake

* * *

WE believe that we describe the feeling of the vast majority of our own citizens correctly when we say that the decision of America has brought to them an immense feeling of relief. We were genuinely distressed that we should have to fight the battles of freedom for so long without the help of our natural comrades in arms, and if sharp words of criticism have escaped us now and then, these must be taken as due to the intensity of our desire to have them on our side in a cause which is so plainly and absolutely right.

* * *

THERE are of course a few people who think that the long hesitation, and the desire to explore every possibility of honourable accommodation with Germany before taking the plunge, have robbed the decision of its moral impressiveness. Others, taking a contrary view, speak of President Wilson's Address as though it were the first satisfactory statement of the principles for which we are fighting, and they even point to America as the home of liberty in contrast to ourselves as the fortress of reaction. May we suggest to these extremists, who have failed to find a prophet in their own country, that nothing could be more unfair than to contrast the first fine frenzy of the United States, and the dignity of President Wilson's appeal to basal principles in an address which is the fruit of long and patient meditation, with the swift decisions which had to be taken by our Government in 1914 and our present absorption in the actual problems of war. For us the ground bristles with questions about men and ships and guns and a thousand details of organisation at home and abroad. We have upon us the stains and the buffetings of a long campaign. The wounded men in our streets have dulled the glamour of a noble cause and made us conscious of the daily frightfulness of war. But behind it all the vision lives in our hearts in undimmed splendour. If our duties and sufferings leave us little time for noble speech, the ransomed provinces of France speak more eloquently than any words of our complete dedication to the cause of freedom and right.

* * *

BUT noble speech still lives among us and has its exalted uses. Among the messages which have gone forth to the American people Mr. Asquith has once again revealed himself as our most gifted interpreter of the deeper motives of the struggle.

> The President's speech [he says] will live in the annals of eloquence as a worthy and noble exposition of the grounds and the aims of a great national resolve. The people of the United States have been forced, as the United Kingdom was forced, into a struggle which in neither case was of their own seeking. They have realised, as we have realised, that the choice lay between peace with humiliation and war with honour. There was no middle course, for armed neutrality, as the President points out with irresistible cogency, affords no secure or tolerable foothold. The provocation offered in the two cases was different, but in both the challenge was one which neither nation could refuse to take up without the sacrifice of its self-respect, and without a betrayal of the sacred trust which is imposed upon all free peoples to uphold the defence of liberty and humanity.

Never have the fundamental issues which are at stake been stated with more precision or with a greater elevation of thought and language than in the President's address. The present German warfare, he points out, is a war against all nations, and the animating motive of the Allies, by whose side he invites his fellow-countrymen to range themselves, is not vindictiveness but vindication—the vindication of those human rights which are the common interest and the natural bond of the whole family of civilised societies.

To this great purpose the American people now dedicate their lives and fortunes—as we have already dedicated ours—conscious that they are listening to and obeying one of those supreme calls, which come but rarely in history, but which, when they come, sound in the ears of a community of freemen with the note of an imperious command.

* * *

Once again Dr. Jacks has made us all his debtor by an incisive article on 'Punishment and Reconstruction,' which appears in the current issue of The Hibbert Journal. It is strongly provocative of thought, and even those who criticise his arguments or resist his conclusions will find that they cannot escape the salutary discipline of mental disturbance. His theme is the fifth act in the drama of the Great War, which will show "the punishment of the guilty." Dr. Jacks has no sentimental dislike of punishment. He insists that in the tragedy of life the avengers must do their work, and they have no alternative.

> The punishment of guilt [he writes] is a duty laid upon a civilisation whose very life depends on its being able to vindicate the distinction between right and wrong. As a guarantee of the power and the will to maintain law and order it is the indispensable foundation of a lasting peace. And not of peace alone, but of the whole catalogue of reforms, reconstructions and regenerations for which peace is to provide the means and the opportunity, and from which it is hoped the world will derive compensation for the frightful sufferings it has now to endure.

* * *

From this point of view Dr. Jacks proceeds to discuss the question, Upon whom is punishment to fall in the event of a victory for the Allies? He dismisses the idea that all the citizens of the Central Empires are to be placed in a state of punishment as absurd and insane, for on that basis there can be no regenerated Europe at all, and he proceeds to distinguish between the German people and the military tyrants who have befooled and betrayed them. It is upon this "small group of exceptionally dangerous men" that the sentence of retribution must fall.

> They [he writes] are responsible for the war, and for all the faithlessness, cruelty, and general moral imbecility which has surrounded the conduct of the war with the darkest crimes of history....It is, I frankly confess, a vision of punishment, but of punishment so solemn, so deliberate, so just, and so universally approved that it would shine to future ages as one of the most sacred deeds in the history of man. Let those malefactors, then, be informed, by methods which admit of no misunderstanding, that the time has come at last when their presence, and the presence of their likes, is no longer to be tolerated on this planet. Let them be called to account for their crimes, solemnly judged, and effectually disposed of by the human race. A victory which takes that form will be a victory for all mankind.

* * *

We agree with Dr. Jacks that the removal of these men is essential, if the war is to start civilisation on a new career, but we must not conclude that it would result at once in a regenerated Europe, and mend onr broken friendship with Germany. We do not believe that with all the goodwill of the world at our disposal it will be possible for us to save the German people from a long period of suffering and bitterness, years which will be full of danger for us all. They have been submissive to their autocrats and proud of their crimes when they have brought them success, and this is a temper which must bring its own terrible punishment. It cannot be changed suddenly into love of all mankind under the brooding wings of peace. We shall prepare bitter disappointment for ourselves unless we face candidly the difficulty and the slowness of the work of healing and reconciliation. It must be enough for us if we live to greet the dawn of the better day, which our children's children shall see in its meridian splendour.

* * *

The publication of betting news is particularly obnoxious to all decent feeling at the present time, and we are glad to see that The Star is so far conscious of the fact as to express regret that the Government have decided that they will not support the legislation necessary to put a stop to the publication of racing tips and betting odds. The prohibition of the publication of betting news, it says, would be a war measure of considerable importance. After this candid expression of opinion we might naturally expect that The Star would suggest the immediate withdrawal of every line of betting news from the columns of reputable newspapers, instead of trying to find excuses for a practice which it acknowledges is hostile to the best interests of the country, as it appears to do in the following words:—"It is true that newspapers might voluntarily relinquish the practice of printing the odds, and the profits indirectly derived from it, but, apart from the impossibility of obtaining the necessary agreement amongst newspapers, if all existing newspapers refrained from such publication, then new publications would be started to meet the demand."

* * *

It is with deep regret that we see the announcement of the death of Prof. J. H. Moulton. The boat in which he was returning from India was torpedoed and he died from exposure. He was a devoted Wesleyan minister, but like all great scholars, endowed with the disinterested love of truth, he belonged to the Church Universal. One of the most distinguished of living students of the New Testament, he opened up fascinating fields of inquiry by his researches among the Egyptian papyri. Recently in collaboration with Prof. Milligan he issued the first part of a new lexicon of New Testament Greek. In 1912 he gave the Hibbert Lectures, his subject being 'Early Zoroastrianism.' Unlike some men of deep learning he was keenly alert to all the interests of the world around him. In Manchester, where he took a useful part in public life, he was always staunch for freedom and eager to help movements of social reform.

* * *

The death of Mr. Horace Mann at the advanced age of 93 recalls the first religious census taken in this country. It was in 1851 that the Government of Lord John Russell requested the Registrar General, Major Graham, to compile such a census, and the work was entrusted by him to Mr. Horace Mann, a young barrister and clerk at Somerset House. The result, known since by his name, brought the numerical strength of Nonconformity vividly to light, and doubtless, helped in no small degree to secure the removal of the legal disabilities of dissenters. From the days of Cobden and Bright, Mr. Mann, who was never married, has been a member of the Reform Club, which, during his latter years he made his home and where his genial nature won him many staunch friends.

A SCHEME OF SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION.

We have received a copy of a 'Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction,' which has been drawn up by a representative committee of the Interdenominational Conference of Social Service Unions. It is to form the basis for discussion at the next Interdenominational Summer School, and meanwhile it will be submitted to the various constituent bodies for their approval. In the end it is hoped that it may be issued, with a large volume of instructed public opinion behind it, as a moral challenge and a programme of activity to the Christian Churches of this country. For the moment we must be content with a few comments and observations in order to call the attention of our readers to a document which deserves very careful study. The Bishop of Oxford, as Chairman of the Committee, has taken an active part in its preparation, and it bears upon it the impress of his mind and spirit.

With the fundamental position that social reform depends upon spiritual power we are in entire agreement. The ultimate foe is not ignorance but selfishness. It is only as Christian conceptions of life rule in men's hearts that we can attempt to realise the Christian ideal of the family and the State. It is well said that "the contribution of Christianity to social reform is of a spirit rather than of a cut-and-dried programme. It may appear vague and general when compared with the precise and detailed recommendations of the politician. But it certainly supplies two great needs, for the lack of which so much effort in the past has been mischievous or barren; it gives us guiding principles and a compelling motive." We are thus delivered at the very beginning of the inquiry from the sterile warfare of texts. No question which is of fundamental importance for human life can be solved in that way. It is not what Jesus Christ said long ago in a context which it is impossible for us to recover, but his Spirit at work as an active principle in all the relationships of the modern world, that determines our duty. It is for Christian values in personal and social life that our whole reverence and energy must be enlisted. "Men must be clear as to their aims before they can profitably discuss methods. Our manner of treating our fellow men will depend upon our opinion as to the nature and destiny of human personality. Our housing schemes will be conditioned by our Christian ideal of the family. The Christian spirit should affect man in all circumstances of his life, and the application of Christian principles to social conditions will give a unique coherence and security to our work."

Another general feature of this Scheme which at once attracts our attention is the breadth and freshness of its outlook upon human relationships and the social duties which they involve. It has escaped entirely from the traditional method of a catalogue of evils which are an offence against Christian virtue, and it makes no attempt to deal with them in watertight compartments. The moral passion of the Puritan movement when it hardened into a code endowed us with a severe and settled judgment for certain forms of wrong, but it left the Christian conscience dull and uninstructed in face of the new sins of greed and self-indulgence in a rich industrial society. The result is that the Churches have attacked the Public House and the Drink Traffic with fierce hostility, but they have seldom paused to reflect that the business habits of their own members and their rapid rise to wealth may be the cause of economic weakness, bad housing and drunken habits among their fellow-citizens. From this initial error, which has led to much failure in the past, the Scheme before us is happily free. Our familiar foes, intemperance and impurity, are given no quarter, but they are taken up into a complete scheme of human relationships, and every social claim is weighed in the light of the fundamental truth that persons are more sacred than property.

On the present occasion we cannot examine the Scheme in detail, but it may be useful if we point out that it is arranged in three divisions. (a) Rights, Claims and Duties. (b) Modern Evils. Rights and Duties neglected. (c) Suggested Remedies. It will be seen that the keywords are Rights and Duties, and it is in the light of this twofold claim that the material is arranged in five sub-divisions, which practically cover the whole field of social activity. (1) Life, including the right to such necessities as food, clothing and shelter, and a wage sufficient to maintain a reasonable standard of life. (2) Employment. (3) Rest and recreation. (4) Marriage. (5) Education. Under these headings an attempt is made to map out the minimum requirements for a healthy human life, and suggestions are made in the direction both of personal discipline and self-control and of legislative action. We may illustrate the skill with which this is done and the unfailing instinct for the deeper human aspects of familiar problems by two short quotations. The first deals with the need of houses which shall be more worthy to be called homes.

> The real significance of the housing problem consists in the fact that the house is the material framework of the Home, and the Home is the abode of the family wherein the sacred and intimate relations of husband and wife, parents and children, brothers and sisters, find their fulfilment or their perversion. The central point of view from which the housing problem ought to be regarded is therefore that of the mother. It is her business to develop out of the young lives that come under her care healthy men and women who shall be effective in the broadest sense of the word. In addition to this, she has to care for the grown members of the family, making the home a place of rest from toil, a refuge from the stress of the competitive world, a centre for reinvigoration and the amenities of domestic social intercourse. The housing problem appears to be one with which private enterprise is unable to cope single-handed, and hence, according to our Christian conception of the State, the community has the duty of supplementing private initiative.

The other quotation deals with the familiar question of Temperance Reform. It will be seen that it does not shrink from sharp remedies, but at the same time the social service of the public-house and the very complex causes of intemperance receive proper recognition.

> Since the temperance problem .... is largely the outcome of other social defects, we must not confine ourselves to preventive measures but must seek to remove the causes, e.g. bad housing, defective education, lack of healthy opportunities of fellowship, &c. Here again we must emphasise the need for a widely diffused sense of personal and social responsibility. This sense of responsibility must express itself, among other ways, by wise legislation. It is imperative that the State should secure a really effective control of the liquor traffic and should exercise that control both by diminishing the present excess of facilities for the sale of drink and by constructive action.

The one part of the Scheme which we should like to see enriched in some directions and modified in others is that dealing with Education. We welcome the statement that enough stress has not been laid upon training for the responsibilities of citizenship, but it needs to be brought out in more detail that this, even more than the neglect of science and the lack of technical training, is one of the crying defects in the ordinary school curriculum. On the other hand a phrase here and there arouses the suspicion that the framers of this Scheme are still entangled in denominational difficulties as soon as they touch upon the place of religion in education. The right of clerical entry is no solution at all. We can teach dogmas in that way, but we cannot create atmosphere. The best religious teaching, human, imaginative and non-sectarian, which is being given in the schools of this country at the present time is not in clerical hands, and official religion has little to do with it. It is given under the direction of teachers, with the gift of sympathy and insight, who are not cramped by formulas and realise that religion must be a life and a spirit before it becomes a doctrine. If the affections and moral principles of Christianity are to enter into the lives of the rising generation and to penetrate their social activity, we must have the courage to claim larger freedom for the teachers to exercise religious influence and to impart simple religious knowledge in the light of their own training and experience. It is to little purpose that we urge that the whole life of the community should be controlled by common Christian ideals, if we persist, when we are dealing with the sensitive minds of children, in treating religion itself as a matter of rival claims and divided counsels.

We mention this matter because it seems to require some closer consideration, if the whole Scheme is not to lack the coherence and the driving power of common conviction which it needs. But for the Scheme as a whole, and the constructive ability which it displays, we have nothing but admiration. As we read it we are filled with eagerness to have some part in its realisation. These are the splendid tasks of justice and chivalry which await us at the end of the war. But suddenly the enthusiast is brought up full stop by the warning words of Dr. Jacks, in an article to which we have referred elsewhere, "The whole of this immense structure of hopes, dreams, programmes and ideals would tumble to the ground like a house of cards—if the Germans were to win the war. Viewed in that light, every programme of Reconstruction is a gamble with Destiny." Yes we agree, but it is also a kindling challenge to every man who cares for social reform to put all his strength into the task of winning the war. What matters for to-day and to-morrow is not that we should perfect our schemes of reconstruction, but that we should show ourselves such valiant fighters for liberty and right, that the Prussian spirit, with all its works of infamous barbarism, shall suffer a lasting defeat. Then, and then only, can we look forward with reasonable hope to the reign of social justice and the fulfilment of our dreams.

 The Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction is published in extenso in the April number of The Social Service Quarterly, to be had gratis on application to the Rev. H. H. Johnson, The Orchards, Croft Road, Evesham. The members of the committee of the National Conference Union for Social Service who took part in drafting the Scheme were Miss C. Gittins, the Rev. F. H. Jones, and the Rev. H. H. Johnson.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

Death, be not proud, though some have called thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so ;
For those, whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow,
Die not, poor Death, nor yet canst thou kill me.
From rest and sleep, which but thy pictures be,
Much pleasure, then from thee much more must flow.
And soonest our best men with thee do go,
Rest of their bones, and soul's delivery.
Thou'rt slave to Fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,
And dost with poison, war, and sickness dwell,
And poppy, or charms can make us sleep as well,
And better than thy stroke ; why swell'st thou then ?
One short sleep past, we wake eternally,
And death shall be no more ; Death, thou shalt die.

Donne.

Holy is the true light, and passing wonderful, lending radiance to them that endured in the heat of the conflict : from Christ they inherit a home of unfading splendour, wherein they rejoice with gladness evermore.

From an Ancient Liturgy.

O God, who hast drawn over the weary day the restful veil of night, wrap our consciences in heavenly peace. Lift from our hands our tasks, and all through the night bear in Thy bosom the full weight of our burdens and sorrows, that in untroubled slumber we may press our weakness close to Thy strength, and win new power for the morrow's duty from Thee who givest Thy beloved sleep. Amen.

CHRIST IS RISEN.

"His voice was as the sound of many waters."—Book of the Revelation.

About 6 o'clock the other night I walked down the hill at the back of my house and up the hill beyond. Between the two hills the road crosses a brook by a bridge. Lately the brook had been only "singing a quiet tune" in gentle, trochaic rhythm, but heavy rains have now made it boisterous, and it was tumbling along brown and white in wild rhymes. It was a lovely evening, the sky broken everywhere into silver rifts, the air saturated with moisture. As I stopped by the water several birds came down to the bare bushes, one all red-brown, another a shining black-and-white, and yet another one shimmering green. All around I heard the sound of water, in every direction pattering down to the brook. The song of birds and water. Birds for gladness, water for mystery. Miss Mitford, who loved paddling walks, used to think that it was the mystery of water which attracted children to it. As I stood there Swinburne's magical line came into my head—"the air now soft with a summer to be." There was a hush of expectancy to which the birds and brooks seemed to respond. Spring is coming—the day of Resurrection is near. I could not help thinking of those early times when men and women went out with pipes and timbrels and songs and dances to greet Dionysus :—

Spirit, Spirit, we have hied us
To thy dancing in the meadow !
Come, Iacchus : let thy brow
Toss its fruited myrtle bough ;
We are thine, O happy dancer ; O our comrade, come and guide us !

And then I thought of our Easter, and what a poor thing we have made of it. "Without him was not anything made that was made"—we say. And yet He rises in the blood-red shoots in the hedges, in the glad song of the birds, in the sudden greening of the hills, in the mysteries of milling waters, and we are fumbling for proofs in Bibles and Prayer-books.

Russia seems to me to be the one country in Europe where Easter is Easter indeed. Perhaps it is because there paganism and Christianity are blended in a wholesome manner. The whole country feels the resurrection. In truth "solvitur acris hiems." Winter is over, ice and snow have melted, the trees are still leafless, the fields black and bare, the wind is chilly, but there is a sense of the coming spring. As Tourgeniev describes it—"And the first spring day when everything is shimmering and breaking up, when across the heavy streams from the melting snow there is already the smell of the thawing earth ; when on the bared thawed places, under the slanting sunshine, the larks are singing confidingly, and with glad splash and roar the torrents roll from ravine to ravine."

Has not our own dear Wordsworth caught this spirit ?

There is a blessing in the air
Which seems a sense of joy to yield,
To the bare trees and mountains bare,
And grass in the green field.

Love now a universal birth
From heart to heart is stealing,
From earth to man, from man to earth,
It is the hour of feeling.

And this kind of feeling seems really universal in Russia, and so their Easter Service in Church is a fitting and natural climax. "The service begins two hours before midnight. All the peasants of the neighbourhood are there, the schoolmaster, the village tradesman, the gentry of the parish, and it may be a few artisans and tramps. Up till midnight the music is low and dreary. Then there is a restless movement. Every member of the congregation lights a candle, youths fire off guns on the church steps. The priest and deacon advance towards the door, peasants grasp the 'ikons' and church banners, and with candles, 'ikons,' and banners the congregation walks out singing into the churchyard and goes in procession round the church. Before they re-enter the priest cries, 'Christ is risen !' The congregation answers with one voice, 'He is risen, indeed !' The choir breaks into joyful singing, and the happy Mass of Easter morning begins."

The poor, ignorant Russian peasant probably knows nothing of the corruption which paralyses the hearts of churches. In his bare cottage hangs the case of sacred "ikons"—the Christ, the Mother, the blessed saints. He parts his hair in the middle, for so did Christ. To these pictures he bows when he comes in, when he goes out, when he eats his plain bread. The periods of his labour, his ploughing, his sowing, his reaping, his carting, are marked off by the names of his saints. The Church does not create his religion, she only endorses it.

After all what is the Church but the collective expression of the spiritual experiences of the people ? Her strength and meaning are in their lives or nowhere. The sacramental grace is in man and woman and nature, "felt in the blood and felt along the heart," felt in earth, air, and water. More and more the churches do not seem to me to have the real secret of Jesus. On the hills, by the lake, in the cornfields we find him, among fisher-folk and peasants, talking of seeds, and vineyards, and lilies of the field. Legend has it that he was a maker of ploughs and yokes. His voice is as the sound of many waters, his eyes have the hope of spring, his heart the peace of summer days. And out in the open here his words are for ever found true—"I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you." The sky is breaking into silver rifts, the hard earth is softening into a laughing grace of flowers, the streams are bounding for joy among the hills. Spring is coming and summer is breathless behind. Christ is risen !—He is risen indeed !

R. H. U. B.

COMMUNION OF THE DEEPER LIFE.*

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Those are moving words, perhaps the most moving of all those in the ancient record, as our thoughts are carried back to those first gatherings of the disciples after their Master's death, in which it was fully realised with rejoicing thankfulness that hope was reborn in them ; hope, with a new stirring of the deeper life of the spirit, which becomes the energy of a living faith, in the victorious power of love.

We recall this evening the memories of sorrow and of bitter trial at the close of the earthly life of Jesus, our Master in the things of the spirit, the chief of faithful souls ; but with the sorrow, that which went deeper and proved in the end the substance of things not seen, out of which was achieved a glorious triumph of the spirit, of life over death.

Before the agony in the Garden, with its complete surrender, "Father, not my will, but thine be done," there had been the last gathering of the disciples with their Master, and, in the very shadow of impending doom, that reaching out of a yearning affection on his part and the strong desire that they who were to carry on his work, when he was gone, might be bound closely to him, with a fuller understanding of his mind and heart, and in the same spirit be ready to endure to the end. The tokens of the bread and wine he gave them for remembrance, as emblems of his suffering for their sake and for the kingdom of God, and of the sacrifice of perfect love, which should be for them the closest bond of union.

And thus afterwards they did remember him. Other things may be doubtful in the record and in our attempt to realise the actual occurrences of those fateful days ; but what is certain is that after the agony and the tragedy of the Cross, the disciples passed through the revulsion of a deep experience, which brought to them an overmastering conviction of life triumphant over death. The darkness of despair and bitterness was swept away in a flood of glorious light.

Jesus had come to them in the days of his earthly ministry with the words of life, of the truth of the kingdom of God, the goodness of God over all, the absolute claim of righteousness to the dominion of their hearts ; he had come with pure and searching spirit, with a great tenderness and compassion for suffering and for the desolations of sin, with the touch of healing and uplifting and cleansing, with the all-compelling power of love. Love of God and man had been the very breath of his life, a great reality of quickening grace and truth, through which they felt that the world must be reborn, and the kingdom of God at last make an end of all the evil and miseries of the earth. So they were drawn into the circle of discipleship, with wondering reverence and eager expectation, even while they so imperfectly understood their Master's mind, yet capable of reaching out to better things ; and they were dedicated to a great purpose, in love and loyalty and faithful service.

And then came the terrible catastrophe of the Crucifixion, and with it despair, in the utter failure, as it seemed, of all their hopes.

But that could not be the end. In the great silence, out of the very shadow of death, came a stirring of the deeper life of the spirit, with unconquerable hope and triumph in their hearts, an unveiling for them of the heavenly life. Their Master had been faithful unto death. And all that he was to them now filled their hearts with new and transforming power, and with the deep and passionate conviction that in such a life there was that which death could not touch. God was not dead, and he could not suffer his son to be so destroyed. The mortal body had been cruelly broken on the Cross, but the spirit of the Man, the living soul, strong in faithfulness and love, triumphed over all. As the glorified Christ their Master was now ascended up on high, into the light of God, and still remained with them the life-giving spirit of their faith and love. So they went forth as his witnesses to the world, to do the work of the kingdom, to manifest in the world the same power of abounding brotherly love, to wait eagerly and joyfully for the accomplishment of their great hope, and, in the Master's spirit, ready for privation, unafraid of death, to endure to the end.

* Address in the Bournemouth Unitarian Church, at the Communion Service, on the Thursday evening before Good Friday, by the Rev. V. D. Davis.

So the ideal of Christian faithfulness was established in the earth, the spirit in which we are to take our life, faithful on earth, looking up to the light of heaven, and letting that light transfuse with hope and joy all earthly things.

As those first disciples took up their task they had the joy of abiding communion with the Master, now glorified in the heavenly places, yet very near to them in all they had to do and to suffer for his sake and for the great cause of the kingdom. They remembered him in their brotherly gatherings, in the breaking of bread together; and this, may we not say, was the most moving appeal in all their memories, that he had been faithful unto death. He had given his life for his friends. Greater love hath no man than this.

That is what we commemorate to-night, with the prayer that we may be drawn more closely into that communion of the deeper life, and in the Master's spirit be faithful in our time and in our place of service.

This Communion is enriched for us with many sacred and tender memories. The faithful of every generation are with us in this quiet time of remembrance, and in intimate communion those who are our own in the great fellowship of heaven, in the closest bonds of affection. Conscious of a great inheritance, we reach out our hands across the centuries and accept the pledge of fellowship and of faithfulness, and receive as from the Master himself these tokens of brotherly union, and of victory in pure self-sacrifice and undying love.

In these days of stern conflict, of striving in the spirit of a great testimony for the right, but with fearful demands of suffering and loss and steadfast sacrifice, this appeal of the Communion of the deeper life comes home to us with yet more moving power. To how many at this time will not this thought be blended with the older sacred memories—of some place on the field of battle where a young life was fearlessly given, in steadfast service of the cause, often quite literally in pure self-sacrifice, so that the words may be repeated again with perfect fitness, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends"—for his friend, for his people, his country, for the cause of righteousness, of humanity, of God. And our communion is the deeper, it should enfold us with a purer and more searching power, through the remembrance of these our brothers, and because of the stress and the sacrifice of these days, but most of all because of the triumph of the nobler spirit in man, the Cross lifted up once more in victorious power, and the kindling of a new and better hope for mankind.

Let our act of remembrance then be fulfilled in all simplicity, in this our quiet fellowship, with thanksgiving for the light of the true life and the better hope upon our way, and with earnest renewal of our dedication, in the Master's spirit, to glad and willing service of our brothers' needs, in the kingdom of our God.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE END OF THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—The issue of The Inquirer for March 26, 1881, contains the words: "Nearly a hundred and sixty of our ministers have already signified their intention of preaching upon the Opium Traffic on or about April 10, and it may be fairly hoped that the effect of this united effort will not end in a mere transient feeling of uneasiness or indignation, but will make both preachers and hearers henceforth feel that they have taken up a cause they must not and cannot drop till the national conscience is thoroughly roused and the evil thing removed." It was on March 31, 1917, that the Opium Traffic, as established by treaty and conducted for profit by our Indian Government, gasped out its unhonoured life, and it was in The Inquirer for April 7 that the event was hailed!

There lie almost exactly thirty-six years between the two dates. What had happened before the first of them, and what has happened between? The opium habit as a vice cannot be traced in China further back than the latter end of the eighteenth century, and as soon as it was recognised the Chinese Government attempted its suppression, and prohibited the import of the drug. In the earlier part of the nineteenth century an illicit trade in it between the East India Company and China became an important commercial interest, and in the thirties, when the Company's monopoly of Eastern trade had ceased, the representatives of the British Government in the Chinese waters found themselves in the position of having to protect trade interests a good half of which consisted in smuggling operations which were firmly established and which involved "furious engagements" between the armed smugglers and the native authorities, but which were by no means to be recognised or acknowledged, however much they were practically countenanced and upheld.

The way out of this position that seemed simplest to the official mind was set forth by Lord Napier in 1834. He recommended that a treaty should be exacted by force from China, England making what conditions she chose, and saying to the Chinese Emperor "Adopt this or abide the consequences," which consequences he went on to say would involve "all the horrors of a bloody war against a defenceless people." Yet the scheme he advocated would, he thought, "be worthy of the greatness and the power of England." England did not quite think that, but she resented the Chinese taking things into their own hands, as against British subjects or any one under British protection, even when they confessed that they were technically within their rights. So when the great reformer Lin, after every kind of protest and appeal had been made in vain, at last seized more than two million pounds worth of smuggled opium and destroyed it, England, while still repudiating the doings of the smugglers and not even asking China to admit opium as an article of regular commerce, nevertheless demanded compensation for the confiscated goods. And so began the "Opium War" of 1839-42. At its close China had to accept the terms we chose to dictate, but she was not asked to withdraw her prohibition of opium. There was undoubtedly a sense of compunction in official quarters. One of our own representatives had told us that in the course of the war "it appears that field pieces loaded with grape had been planted at the end of long narrow streets, thronged with men, women, and children; that they were mowed down like grass, and that the gutters flowed with their innocent blood"; and The Times demanded that we should wash our hands of the "moral and practical responsibility" under which we lay for the traffic, and should "cease to make it a source of Indian revenue." But commercial interests, that had now become Imperial, were too strong and things went on much the same as before, until in 1855 we picked another quarrel with China for exercising rights that we could not deny were hers, and when in 1860 we finally gave her peace on our own terms we required the official sanction of the opium trade as one of them.

During the next decades the history of the question is very simple. Our best representatives in China were endeavouring to teach our Government that China should be treated as a civilised Power, whose wishes and whose dignity should be respected in all our dealings with her. And a number of right-minded men at home were persistently attempting to rouse the public conscience. But the opium revenue had by this time become a fixed element in Indian finance, and the official conscience was not to be reached. Yet as long as the financial answer to all representations was frankly given the tide of moral resentment steadily rose, and at last, in 1891, a resolution condemning the traffic was carried in the House of Commons. It had no legislative force, but it was enough to alarm the Government and a dreary period of evasion and misrepresentation followed. The frank appeal to financial necessity was dropped. Apologies were sought. The hurtfulness of the drug was questioned. The sincerity of the Chinese desire to get rid of the trade was impugned. The practical result likely to follow any change of policy was minimised. A Royal Commission, with a suitable personnel, was appointed to allay the moral uneasiness which could no longer be ignored. The straightforward fight was obscured by the marshalling of a mass of technical pleas, and the array of a host of authorities, all of which could easily be dealt with by those who knew the whole history, but which seemed to excuse the mass of well-meaning men from having to face the problem.

The heroic days of the Anti-Opium Movement were over. But the work went on in silence, and point by point (always with as little grace as might be) the ground was yielded. And now, at last, almost unnoticed amid the din of arms and the stupendous issues of the times, the end has come. We hail it with mingled feelings. Our shame cannot be washed away by our ceasing at last to add daily and hourly to our guilt, but the hope of every man who believes in the force of moral principles even when they seem feeblest, in the face of the coarse and brutal passions that appear to rule the world, should be strengthened by the final victory in what long seemed an almost hopeless struggle. And by far the best feature of it all is that it is the unmistakable reality of China's own resolve to deal with the desolating plague of the opium vice that has enabled her friends here in England to shame down all effective opposition. And though we can never compensate China for the century of cruel wrong that we have laid upon her, yet her own awakened conscience and moral energy bid fair to enable her to shake off the burden we have done so much to fix upon her, and while freeing herself to return us good for evil by deepening our faith in the moral resilience of human nature, and (by some strange kind of vicarious merit) giving us, in our own consciousness, a relief that we have not earned.—Yours, &c.,

P. H. Wicksteed.

Childrey, nr. Wantage.
April 10, 1917.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

A F.A.N.Y. IN FRANCE.

Nursing Adventures: a F.A.N.Y. in France. London: William Heinemann. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

This book is anonymous, but it is no secret that it is by the pioneer and leader of the corps of women, known as the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry, who have done such magnificent service in France since the beginning of the war. Mrs. McDougall's narrative is intensely vivid, the reader almost sees and feels and smells the things which she describes, and it owes this quality largely to the fact that it is quite free from any kind of literary pose. Unlike some well-known novelists she did not visit the war-zone in order to collect copy; she went, driven by an irresistible impulse of pity, not caring what might befall her, in order to spend herself to the uttermost in works of succour and mercy. What she has given us is for the most part the contents of her diary, which was written in strange places, often at the end of days of great danger and fatigue, while the events and emotions it describes were fresh in her mind. The first part of the book deals with the German invasion of Belgium and the terrible retreat with the wounded after the fall of Antwerp. Here is the description of a scene in Ghent, to which the writer had returned alone—we will not spoil the beauty of the deed with any praise—in order to nurse a young English officer, who had been left behind mortally wounded when the hospital was hastily evacuated.

> "Then a German regiment marched past—little men all of them; and I watched them in a frenzy of despair from the window. That night Germans were quartered on the home: they were quite civil, indeed two of them, common soldiers, went about on tiptoe in the corridors when they heard there were malades there (they were not told there were wounded). The first two nights were rather nerve-racking, as I sat by my patient wondering if the Germans would come in and kill him. However morning came and the next night passed. Then Death came bringing freedom in her hands, and after that a sad little ceremony on a wet, dismal day, and a gallant British officer was laid to rest unmolested by the enemy to the end. There was no Union Jack and no 'Last Post,' and only three nurses to lay him to rest and I to read the Burial Service, but his was a hero's death—gallant and patient to the end."

After this there was a strange interview with the German staff, who regarded the woman in khaki with unfeigned astonishment and refused her permission to leave, and then through a woman's persistence and resource and sheer good luck the writer escaped into Holland, and so on a crowded refugee boat to England.

The second part of the book describes the establishment of the corps at Calais and their manifold activities for the Belgian army, in the trenches, at field dressing stations, at the Lamarck Hospital in Calais and at the convalescent depot at Camp de Ruchard. Their latest enterprise may be justly celebrated as a triumph over the official mind, for the corps has been formally accepted for service with the British Army and is now in charge of the convoy work for our own sick and wounded in Calais. But once again we are tempted to quote a vivid piece of description. This time the scene is in the dreary country near Dixmude and a duel is in progress between a Belgian armoured train and the German guns.

> "Boom-boon, spat the train, and boom-boom came the answer. It was an unforgettable thing. Up here alone, far from civilisation, very far from the homes where perhaps our people thought of us, but certainly did not imagine our surroundings—here we were, girls of the twentieth century in this atmosphere of storm and war living what surely few women ever dreamt in their wildest moments until this war began. This was life! My ears tingled; I breathed in long, deep breaths. Had I spoken, a sort of wild war song would have come from my lips. The Highland blood in me bubbled and frothed; I wanted to run for miles—to race, to climb—action at all costs. And then....well, along the road came weary, stumbling figures, and most of them carried stretchers or long strange bundles. There was no romance or triumph here, no wild war cry and exultation—just these men, dirty and muddy and footsore, bringing in their comrades, broken and maimed and moaning—or very quiet....The sunset and the fight between the armoured train and the German guns at Dixmude lost their glamour. War was no romantic heroic epic, only this dreary reality of gaping wounds and quivering flesh....These were the men of the Yser—shorn of romance and poetry, pitiful and human and noble beyond all words; heroes indeed, and heroes of the world."

We cannot close this notice of a strong and moving book without reminding our readers how many personal reasons they have for being interested in it. No other war-book with which we are acquainted comes so close as this to the interests and sympathies which have been awakened by the work of our Belgian Hospital Fund. We have been in personal contact with the activities of the F.A.N.Y. in several directions. If we have been able to do something to help their work at Calais and Camp de Ruchard, they in return have given us much encouragement and placed their rich fund of experience freely at our disposal. Some of us have even had the good fortune to be their guests at one of the al-fresco hospital entertainments, described with such gusto in these pages. At the present moment we are deeply interested in the new work which they have undertaken in a hospital for French wounded. We suggest to our readers that an excellent way of showing the high esteem in which we hold Mrs. McDougall and her fellow-members of the F.A.N.Y. is to do what we can to promote the sale of her book.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Messrs. J. & J. Bennett, Ltd.—Divine Humanity: Alexander Pyne. 5*s.* net.

Cambridge University Press.—Russian Realities and Problems: Edited by J. D. Duff. 5*s.* net. The Way to Nirvāna: L. de la Vallée Poussin. 4*s.* 6*d.* net.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—Algernon Charles Swinburne: Edmund Gosse. 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

Miscellaneous.

The Hibbert Journal.

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

MISS MARY SWANWICK.

It is with deep regret that we record the death of Miss Mary Swanwick, a lifelong and constant worshipper at the Elder Yard Chapel, Chesterfield, and a lady of culture and beneficence, known and esteemed far outside the chapel walls. No words of ours are likely to do justice to so rare and beautiful a spirit as was manifested in her life and character, but at such a time as this we cannot be altogether silent. Miss Swanwick was born in July, 1841, and was the devoted daughter of Henry Swanwick, who was associated with George Stephenson in important engineering work and railway enterprise. She was present and could remember the time when Emerson met George Stephenson at her father's house at Whittington, close to which she afterwards took up her residence, and where, after a brief illness, she died on Saturday last, April 7, aged 76. Her activities were such as to give no hint of her increasing years. Every Sunday, regardless of weather, after travelling three miles, she appeared in her pew. Every Tuesday she journeyed to Derby on educational work. She was a member of the Educational Committee of the Derbyshire County Council, one of the Chesterfield Board of Guardians, a Trustee of the Grammar School, a manager of the Girls' High School and of three Council Schools at Whittington. These and many other institutions owe much to her unobtrusive and sagacious counsel. In former years she had been a Sunday school teacher at the Elder Yard Sunday School, and never ceased to take a kindly interest in its welfare. Her generosity knew no stint, and it would be difficult to find in the district a worthy charity or good cause she has not helped. At her hospitable table Anglican clergymen and Unitarian ministers met and alike felt the charm of her presence.

Of recent years there have been many changes in the Elder Yard pulpit, yet to minister after minister she gave the same loyal support and thoughtful co-operation, and the present writer bears willing testimony to the inspiration of her sympathy. Her wide mental outlook caused her to care little for sectarian and doctrinal differences, but she recognised the worth of spiritual religion and loved and prized it wherever it could be found.

If a certain old-time modesty prevented her from speaking in public her word had power because it came from an undoubted source of refinement and culture. She kept to the last her bright forward look and was ever ready to enter into fresh problems concerning the welfare of the people. It would be difficult to convey to those who have not heard of her all she truly was, but even a complete stranger to the town might notice the peculiar deference with which the words "Miss Swanwick" were uttered, often in a reverent tone that indicated the recognition of a saintly personality. Her beautiful spirit, chaste and dignified by love of God and man, has now passed away, but grateful and fragrant memories will long abide. A noble example of Christian culture and high-souled chivalry will make clearer to other souls the deathless life on which she has entered.

On Wednesday last the funeral service was conducted at the Elder Yard Chapel, by the Rev. E. G. Evans and the Rev. Kenneth Bond, and the interment followed in the Chesterfield cemetery.

H. S. T.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

117th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,670	8	7
Miss Mary Fretwall (ninth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Lucy Colton and the Misses Gillespie (twenty-second donation)	0	7	6
A. B. C.	0	2	0
Mrs. Burridge (fifth donation)	1	10	0
Mrs. J. Worsley Austin (seventh donation) ..	1	10	0
	£16,674	18	1

Parcels have been received from: Camden School for Girls; Unitarian Church Sewing Circle, Southport (per Mrs. Harvey); Miss Corfield; Miss Baker; Mill Hill Chapel Sewing League (per Miss E. M. Buckley); Ladies' Sewing Meeting, Unity Church, Newcastle (per Mrs. Hall); Rosslyn Hill Chapel Sewing Society (per Mrs. T. Cobb); Miss Leigh; Bank Street War Circle, Bury (per Miss Johnstone); Mrs. Shipman; Miss C. Sharpe; The Women's Club, Effra Road Unitarian Church (per Mrs. Stevens); Girls' Club, Bridport (per Miss Colfox); Mrs. Partridge; Miss Short; Mrs. Greg; Bournemouth Unitarian Church Working Party (per Mrs. V. D. Davis); Mrs. Arnold; Mrs. R. Roscoe; Mrs. Harris; Mrs. Notcutt; Bury Branch of the Women's League (per Miss Johnstone); Miss B. Reed; The Church of the Messiah. Women's Friendly Society (per Mrs. Worsley Austin); A. B. C.

WEEKLY NOTES.

Our subscribers would be pleased if they could see our Maternity home here at Calais. Owing to many delays it has not yet opened its doors, but will do so shortly when the last of the equipment arrives. Mme. Lageot, the Directrice, has been seriously ill, and this has made it difficult to get everything ready. It is already looking very nice, with its wards of three or four beds each with its pretty coverlet. We are now only waiting for certain appliances which are coming from Paris. The Belgian doctors say that it will always be full, and already there are applications for beds. There are ten little cradles, and Mme. Lageot has spent a good deal of her convalescence in trimming them with frills and lace, at a trifling cost, but a great deal of love and labour. Some officers have wished that their wives should be received, and we have decided to do so, without charge, but we hope they will like to make some gift to the home on leaving, according to their means. Many of these ladies are lodged in quite small and poor rooms and could not command any conveniences for illness.

It is also proposed to have consultations on one or two afternoons a week, when mothers can bring their babies to be weighed and for advice. We shall thus have the beginnings of a School for Mothers, and its development will be very interesting. The equipment up to date has cost about £50.

This week I visited the Belgian orphanage at Wisques, and the girls will talk of our visit for some time. The snow was so deep that our motor stuck fast in a drift, and we could not move. I went on foot to the orphanage which was luckily near, but there was not a man in the place to help, and my chauffeur was a girl. So I chose the six biggest and strongest girls and they came back with me, and together we managed to push the motor through. The girls thoroughly enjoyed themselves, and were wet through and muddy up to their eyes before we had finished—a most delightful break in their rather monotonous days. The snow was waist deep in some of the roads, and quite impassable—most extraordinary for April. Every day one hopes for a change, but the spring is long in coming.

At one of the hospitals here, helpless shirts made of flannelette, not calico, are badly wanted. I should be very glad if our friends in England would send me some for them as soon as possible.

Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 14 by 24 in. with a string run in the neck.
Helpless shirts of flannelette or flannel (not calico).
Pyjamas (urgent).
Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.
Pants, vests.
Towels of all sorts.

For the Maternity Home at Calais:—
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).
Chemises for women.
Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N W. 3.

BANK STREET CHAPEL, BOLTON.

The following passages are taken from the Annual Report of the Bank Street Chapel and Sunday School, Bolton, for the year 1916. In spite of many losses owing to death, removal, and other causes, the average number of members is well maintained. Thirty-two new names were added to the list in 1916, making a total of 512:—

In looking over the records of the past twelve months one is struck by the manner in which many of the normal activities connected with our Chapel and School have become subdued by the exigencies of our national life. In civil association each one of us is content to forego many of the amenities which are usually and quite properly regarded as part of our normal experience, and the same feature is observable in our life as a congregation. It is not that our opinions and principles have undergone any change; indeed it is probably the case that we hold to them more strongly than previously, yet individually and collectively we are anxious to devote all our energies to matters of urgent national necessity as they arise, and are content to await a more favourable moment for the propagation of the Christian ideals for which our Chapel stands. We do claim for our religious and ethical beliefs that they give full scope to intelligence and reason, the greatest gifts which man possesses, and we are painfully conscious that the present state of European Society seems to be a negation of those attributes. It was peculiarly fitting therefore that Mr. Flower should have seized the moment to impress upon us by a series of evening sermons the desirability of holding fast to those ideals which we have always held and maintained to be true. Realising, as each one of us is compelled to do, the disturbing influence of the war on public and private opinion, Mr. Flower felt it a proper opportunity to preach on the importance of maintaining and asserting the principles of spiritual loyalty and moral idealism, those things which are everlastingly true and desirable, but which have not yet apparently been properly recognised and appreciated by the various peoples. "Where there is no vision the people perish" was asserted in Proverbs, and we are indebted to our minister for many thoughtful addresses in support of that great saying.

The present times are not very auspicious for the inauguration of new movements, but owing largely to the endeavour of our minister the "Bolton Shakespeare Society" has been formed, and a reading and study circle established at Bank Street. It is strange that a town like Bolton has not previously had a society for studying the works of the world's greatest playwright. A good list of patrons has been obtained, and the membership promises well for the future when a full and enjoyable career may be expected.

During the winter Mr. Flower has also conducted classes, principally for our younger members, to instruct and confirm them in the ideals and principles which our fellowship at Bank Street Chapel practises and seeks to establish. A leaflet prepared by Mr. Flower, entitled 'Some Thoughts on the Basis of Religious Faith and Fellowship,' which is printed with this Report, will assist our older members to understand the endeavour which Mr. Flower is making to train the coming generation.

The conditions which are responsible for the quietness of our social life are also responsible for the activity of the War Workers' Circle. The circle is a great credit to its members, but it is not our intention to chronicle its achievements at the present moment. Its service will be worthy of a special report when its labours are completed.

In spite of the war, or perhaps in consequence of it, the Christmas Party and the New Year's Day Party asserted themselves with a popularity as great as ever, and incidentally their patrons paid the "Entertainments Tax" for the first time in the history of these gatherings.

In harmony with the times we conclude our remarks upon a sad note. During the year we have lost a number of staunch supporters and old friends, some in the fullness of years, others cut down in the flower of youth, and we are compelled to look forward to the immediate future with anxious solicitude. The normal mortality in our community is one which we must accept in a proper spirit of resignation, but the toll taken by this terrible war gives deeper sorrow because of the consciousness that young, happy, strong lives have been sacrificed once again in the struggle for the undying principles of liberty and justice. They fought for honour's sake, well knowing for what they strove, and content to face the supreme issue. For just a little time we have been permitted to know them and the memory of their service at Bank Street is very fragrant. May we hope they have not died in vain, and pray that the ideals they held may be strengthened and renewed within ourselves by the memory of the sacrifice they made for us and for all mankind.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Huddersfield.—At the Annual Business Meeting of the Fitzwilliam Street Social Union which was held on March 28, it was unanimously decided to continue the work next session on the same general lines as before. All the former officers were re-elected, and three new members were added to the old Committee to replace three retiring members. The following extract from the Secretary's Report and the Treasurer's Statement show what excellent work has been done: "It is with great satisfaction and thankfulness that your Committee present the second Annual Report of the Work of our 'Union.' Believing that there was scope in Huddersfield for a social and educational work free from sectarian and political bias, your Committee came to the conclusion that a series of weekly lectures would command considerable support; and the abounding success of the movement has fully vindicated the soundness of their opinions. The high tone of the first year's work has been well maintained by a succession of able and earnest speakers; and the many expressions of appreciation voiced from time to time by those attending the meetings reflect great credit to the speakers and give much encouragement to your Committee. We feel that we owe a deep debt of gratitude to the many speakers who have served us with unflagging devotion—ladies and gentlemen who cheerfully give up their scanty leisure, and, in fair weather and foul, without fee or reward, often at considerable personal inconvenience, place their best at our disposal. Without disparaging in the least the splendid services of our own members and townsmen, we wish to acknowledge our special indebtedness to the several distinguished speakers who have visited us from afar, in most cases entirely at their own expense. Your Committee cannot speak too highly of the services rendered by the Hon, Lady Barlow, Miss A. Maude Royden, the Rt. Hon. the Earl Russell, the Rt. Hon. Viscount Haldane, M.A., K.C., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., K.T., P.C., the Rt. Hon. Lord Parmoor, M.A., K.C., K.C.V.O., P.C., and Surgeon-General G. J. H. Evatt, C.B., M.D., R.A.M.C. General Evatt's inspection of the Huddersfield War Hospital gave much pleasure to the authorities....Notwithstanding withdrawals and lapses common to most new societies, the membership now stands at 194; and we anticipate that the devotion and energy of our members will achieve a large increase before another year has gone."

Manchester: Women's League. — The third Annual Meeting of the Manchester Association Branch of the Women's League was held at Oldham Road, Manchester, on March 31, Miss Johnstone presiding. There was an attendance of about fifty, representing the following branches: Bury, Bank Street; Chesham; Chowbent; Failsworth; Gee Cross; Gorton; Oldham Road, Manchester; Oldham; Pendleton; Stalybridge; Stockport and Stand. Several distant branches: Ansdell; Blackpool, N. Shore; Blackpool, S. Shore; Padiham and Todmorden were represented by reports of their year's work. The Annual Report and Balance Sheet were both adopted, and all the retiring officers were re-elected, with Mrs. Enfield Dowson as an additional vice-president. After tea, kindly provided by the ladies of the small branch at Oldham Road, the meeting re-assembled to hear the interesting reports of the individual branches.

Norwich.—The Annual Meeting of the congregation of the Octagon Chapel was held in the Martineau Hall on March 28, the chairman, Mr. A. M. Stevens, presiding. The financial statement showed that the previous year's level of income had been well maintained. The Committee's report was comprehensive and interesting. With all the men of military age either in the army or fulfilling other duties of national importance, the attendances at services had necessarily suffered, and the congregation was now feeling the strain of the war severely; but it was believed that there had been no slackening in religious interest amongst those left behind to carry on the church work; and as a set-off against losses by death and removal fourteen new subscribing members had been added to the congregation. Much of the year's activity had been directed to purposes connected with the war, in all nearly £25 having been raised and devoted to those purposes, One of the chief events of the year was the visit of Mrs. Bernard Allen to speak of her work for the Belgian Hospital Fund. The most pleasing feature of the Report was the tone of personal regard for the Rev. Lawrence Redfern and the highly appreciative references to his work. Mr. Redfern, by the influence of his own positive faith and his spirit of hope and courage, had sustained the interest of his congregation in spiritual matters through many trying months of darkness and uncertainty It was felt that Mr. Redfern's work, both in the pulpit and in connection with the various institutions associated with the Chapel, was beyond all praise; and Mrs. Redfern's worthy share in these labours was gratefully acknowledged. Amongst the institutions, the Literary and Social Union was conspicuous in having had a most successful session: the attendances had been uniformly good, and the lectures given had been of a high order. The Report also referred to the valuable lay work done at Yarmouth, Diss and Hampton by Mr. James D. Wright and other members of the congregation: Mr. Wright having carried on the services at Yarmouth practically all the year. The meeting unanimously passed a resolution conveying to Mr. Redfern an expression of their heartfelt appreciation of, and sincere thanks for, his ministry during the past three years; in which expression Mrs. Redfern's name was included. Mr. Redfern, in his address, paid a tribute to the loyalty of the congregation, and referred to the difficulties and anxieties under which they and he had laboured. Speaking of the effect of the war on religion in general he said that the different branches of the Christian Church were being compelled to lay the emphasis upon the fundamental elements of the religious life: upon those things about which there was never any doubt or difference. The primary function of the Church was neither the fostering of secular reforms nor the exposing of theological errors, but spiritual leadership. So far from the war having killed religion the war is the strongest proof of the need for religion. Mr. Redfern traced the war to the sordid greed and covetousness in the hearts of men. No new problem of evil had been introduced by it. Mr. Redfern laid stress on the spiritual beauty of religion, and ended with an appeal that the congregation stand together so that the work at the Octagon might be abundantly blessed.

Pontypridd.—The Rev. D. Conwil Evans, whose marriage is announced this week, was admitted into the Unitarian ministry about eighteen months ago by the South Wales Advisory Committee. He was trained for the ministry of the Free Church of Scotland, and on leaving college was appointed assistant minister at Paisley. He applied for a commission in the army soon after the outbreak of war, and after completing his training was gazetted to the South Wales Borderers, but on proceeding to France he was attached to the 10th Cheshire Regiment. He has been wounded twice, the second time somewhat seriously, but after treatment at one of our military hospitals in this country he has made such progress that his services are now utilised at the Regimental Headquarters at Birkenhead. During a recent visit to South Wales Mr. Evans preached both at Pontypridd and at Merthyr.

Preston.—On Thursday, March 29, the ladies of the Preston Unitarian Chapel gave a concert in the schoolroom, Percy Street, in aid of the funds of the Soldiers' and Sailors' buffet at Preston Railway Station. There was a capital attendance, and the sum of nearly £10 was raised.

Southampton.—The Rev. Victor Moody, minister of the Church of the Saviour, having taken up whole-time National Service, the members of the Church Committee have decided to hold Evening Service only while he is thus employed, on the lines of the Denominational scheme put forward by the Ministerial Fellowship and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. On Thursday, March 29, the last lecture of the session in connection with the Kell Literary Society, 'The Romance of a Newspaper' was to have been given by the Rev. Reginald Hewitson, B.D., but owing to illness he could not attend, and the Rev. Victor Moody kindly took his place and lectured on 'The Religion of Bernard Shaw.' During the winter some excellent and interesting lectures have been kindly given by well-known local gentlemen: Dr. Alex. Hill, head of the Southampton University College, who took for his subject, 'The Art of Expression'; the Rev. Canon Mitchell, 'Reflections on the Book of Job'; and Prof. J. W. Horrocks, 'More's Utopia'; 'Springs of Laughter' was the subject treated in a delightful manner by Mr. J. Maher; the Rev. F. Blandford lectured on 'Some Aspects of Wordsworth's Poetry,' and the Rev. Victor Moody on 'Charles Lamb.' Dr. Stancomb contributed one of his instructive addresses, Mr. M. Park devoted an evening to 'R. L. Stevenson, Essayist and Poet,' and Miss E. J. Spencer gave a Lantern Lecture on 'Transylvania.' A member's evening and one or two social evenings have also been held. Considering the cold weather and darkened streets the lectures have been fairly well attended.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

In Green Pastures.

The following charming description of the surroundings amidst which our troops find themselves in Palestine after their weary sojourning in the Sinai Desert is from the pen of a Times' war correspondent. "Before and around us everything is green and fresh," he says. "Big patches of barley, for which the plain south of Gaza is famous, shine like emeralds, and the immense tracts of pasture are to-day as bright and beautiful as the rolling downs at home. You can truthfully compare the country to the Berkshire Downs. We do not see the buttercup and cowslip to remind us of the time when, the war being over, we shall return to Britain, but in their place there is an abundance of the most gorgeous flowers, lighting up the vivid greenness of the plain as if in welcome to an army which is to relieve the country from the oppressor's hand. There are crimson anemones, bright as any rubies, crocuses and narcissi, irises, short in the stem but brilliant in hue, a tiny sweet-pea, clover, and many common flowers in dazzling profusion, while a few specimens of an almost black arum lily have been collected. Can you not imagine the effect this enchanting scene has had upon the condition of troops who have become desert veterans? And what of the horses, those noble beasts whose courage and staying power helped to make possible the victories of Maghdaba and Rafa? One of the prettiest pictures I have seen for many a long day was of an Australian Light Horse Regiment out grazing. Each man was tending two horses. He was enjoying the luxury of a rest on the grass, but his pleasure was derived, not so much from lying full-length on turf as in seeing the animals revel in abundant green food. To beast as well as man it is the Promised Land."

Cheap Restaurants for the Poor.

The two communal war kitchens opened by Mrs. Lloyd George in the East End are doing excellent business, and the committee responsible for the movement have six new establishments in immediate contemplation, to be followed by six more should they prove a success. These communal kitchens fulfil the purpose of cheap restaurants for the poor, and are to be distinguished from the official communal kitchen which the Food Controller is about to establish in Central London on scientific lines for making the most economical use of the food supply. Since Mrs. Lloyd George's visit, about three hundred meals daily have been served at "Paddy's Goose" (once a notorious public house), and the "Lycett," and the two establishments are paying working expenses and running on a sound commercial basis. The menus include soup, meat and vegetable pies, puddings and stews, simple, nourishing sweets, a variety of vegetable dishes, and tea and cocoa. Rice, barley, oatmeal, beans, &c., enter largely into the daily fare, and this ensures a considerable saving in bread, which will meet with the approval of the Food Controller. The Rev. F. W. Chudleigh, minister of the Lycett Chapel, Mile End Road, the prospective Organising Secretary of the scheme, is about to publish a booklet on 'How to Run a Communal Kitchen' for the benefit of people in other neighbourhoods who are anxious to follow the example of Shadwell.

"Frank B. Sanborn of Concord."

The recent death of Franklin Benjamin Sanborn has removed the last link with the distinguished literary group of New England, and also the only remaining survivor of the associates and supporters of John Brown, that redoubtable champion of human liberty. His intimate connection with Concord began in 1855, when he set up a private school there at Emerson's request, which was attended by children of Emerson, of Judge Hoar, of Hawthorne, and two brothers of Henry James during the eight years of its existence. The greater part of his life was, indeed, spent at Concord, and his name appears as "Frank B. Sanborn of Concord" on the title-page of his 'Recollections of Seventy Years,' published ten years ago. For nearly fifty years Mr. Sanborn contributed political and literary letters to The Springfield Republican, and he was the author of numerous books. He was widely known as a lecturer, and the list of his public activities is a long and interesting one. He and Dr. S. G. Howe had a great deal to do with the pioneer work of the first State Board of Charities in America, that of Massachusetts, and in this connection he helped to effect great improvements in prison management, the care of the insane, and poor relief throughout the country. He was also one of the founders of the American Social Science Association, and, with W. T. Harris and others, helped to establish and maintain the famous Concord School of Philosophy. He matriculated at Harvard in 1852 at the age of 21, but he has confessed that he owed more to Emerson and Theodore Parker than to all the professors and tutors put together.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. Cumberland.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

IRISH PILLOW LINEN, sufficient for six full-sized Pillow Cases, only 10*s.* 6*d.* (postage 5*d.*). Send a postcard to-day for this month's free Bargain List.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any condition. 6*d.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 2*s.* on silver; 3*s.* on gold; 8*s.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return. —I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 6*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane. London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 14, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY
Berkeley, California

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3903.
NEW SERIES, No. 1006.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

2s. 6d. net (postage 4d. extra).

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS—APRIL.

SCIENCE IS ONE OF THE HUMANITIES By Prof. J. B. Baillie
PUNISHMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION By L. P. Jacks
AFTER TWENTY-FIVE YEARS By Sir Oliver Lodge
AMERICA'S SELF-REVELATION By Prof. Hartley B. Alexander
NATIONAL HATE By A. D. McLaren
DRUDGERY AND EDUCATION By Edmond Holmes
THE RELIGIOUS PHILOSOPHY OF VLADIMIR SOLOVYOV By Mrs. J. N. Duddington
FIVE NEW RELIGIOUS CULTS IN BRITISH NEW GUINEA By E. W. P. Chinnery and A. C. Haddon
FORCE AND THE CONQUEST OF EVIL IN CHRISTIAN ETHICS By G. F. Barbour
THE LOVE WHICH IS NOT THE FULFILLING OF THE LAW By Constance L. Maynard
NATIONAL TRAINING By Reginald F. Rynd
DISCUSSIONS, SURVEY, and SIGNED REVIEWS

SUBSCRIPTIONS:
10s. per Annum, post free.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14 Henrietta St., Covent Garden, W.C.2.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C. Four Lectures on 'The History of Roman Law' will be delivered by W. BLAKE ODGERS, M.A., LL.D., K.C., F.S.A., F.R.Hist.S., on Tues., Wed., Thurs., Fri., April 24, 25, 26, and 27, at 6 P.M. Admission Free.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,
Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April.
22. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.
29. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

May.
6. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.
13. Rev. A. W. FOX, M.A., of Todmorden.
20. Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, of Tenterden.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE APRIL ISSUE INCLUDE

The Scope of Reconstruction
The New Russia
The Nation's Youth
The Claim of Adult Education
The World of Industry
Reviews
Scholastic Appointments, etc.

Monthly, 1s.;
Annual Subscription, 14s. post free.

Published at "The Athenæum" Office,
11 Bream's Buildings,
London, E.C.4.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL
ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. HILL,
40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead, London, N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, April 22.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. G. W. H. Troop.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. Begg; 6.30, Mr. J. P. Rosling.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Bertram Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11 and 7.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. J. W. Peterken.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. H. O. Montague.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. Rosling; 6.30, Mr. J. H. Smith.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Frank K. Freeston.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. M. Livens.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Burgess, B.A.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Cambridge, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. C. Hargrove, D.Litt.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. Cottier,

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. L. Redfern, M.A.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Dr. E. Thackray.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. Fisher Short.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. H. Taylor.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. McLachlan, M.A., B.D.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

MARRIAGES.

Cliff—Maddison.—On the 5th inst. at St. George's, Birmingham, Vincent, youngest son of Mrs. Cliff, Evesham, to Jennie Valentine, eldest daughter of Mrs. Maddison, Leamington.

Smith—Kingston.—On April 12th at the Unitarian Christian Church, Wandsworth, by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., Claud Henry Smith, Artist's Rifles, 4th son of Mr. William Smith, Brackenhurst, Streatham, to Cicely Winifred Kingston, 7th daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kingston of the Poplars, Putney.

Goodwin—Osler.—On April 12th, at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, N.W., by the Rev. R. Travers Herford (uncle of the bride), Capt. C. J. Goodwin to Helen Frances, youngest daughter of Thomas Osler, of Waikato, New Zealand.

DEATH.

Willmer.—On Easter Eve, at Cranford, Buxton, Charlotte, daughter of the late Edward Willmer, of Liverpool, in her 78th year.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, LADY, about 40, to be Companion to a partly crippled Lady, and to do some Housekeeping.—Apply by letter, Mrs. Swann, Oakfield, Wimbledon Common.

LADY, middle aged, desires POST: Companion Help, care of old Lady, &c. Active. Highest references. Small salary. Any part.—E. H., Inquirer Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 183
LOYALTY TO THE FUTURE 185
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 186
THE VIGIL 186
UNDER THE MICROSCOPE 186
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The War and Social Reconstruction . 187
Ruthless Zeal 187
Paganism and Christianity . . . 187
Lawrence House Hostel for Soldiers and Sailors 187
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
The Value of Research 187
Europe Unbound 188
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 188
MEMORIAL NOTICE:—
The Rev. H. W. Hawkes 188
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 190
Manchester District Sunday School Association 190
Greetings to America 191
Men and Movements 191
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 191
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 192

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

APART from the magnificent military operations in France America has claimed the chief share of public attention this week. These are the days of enthusiastic welcome into the privileges and sacrifices of the Alliance. The days of grim struggle and silent endurance will follow swiftly in their train. Nothing could have been more cordial than the spirit which pervaded the social gatherings at which the chief speakers were the Prime Minister, Lord Bryce, and the American Ambassador. Dr. Page has the gift of noble speech. Some words of his are worth placing on record for the appeal they make to common moral endeavour as the strongest bond of union between nations. "High spiritual exaltation," he said, "does not come by direct seeking; it is an exhalation of noble effort. The most enduring companionship does not come of expressing mutual regards, but of a common struggle in some high and dangerous task. Winning a righteous war together is worth more than most other experiences, by revealing real men to real men, to bind them together in all common high aims."

* * *

BUT from the official point of view the chief place must be given to the Resolution passed in the House of Commons on Wednesday. It was in the following terms:—"That this House desires to express to the Government and people of the United States of America their profound appreciation of the action of that Government in joining the Allied Powers, and thus defending the high cause of freedom and the rights of humanity against the gravest menace by which they have ever been imperilled." Speaking to this resolution Mr. Asquith said that the decision of America was "one of the most disinterested acts in history." It was the constraining force of conscience and humanity which had driven her into the war.

> America [he said] has seen that there was here at issue something of wider import than the vicissitudes of battle-fields, or even the arrangement of the map of Europe on the basis of nationality. The whole future of civilised Government and intercourse, and in particular the fortunes and fate of democracy, are brought into peril. In such a situation aloofness is seen to be not only a blunder but a crime. To stand aside with stopped ears, with folded arms, with averted gaze when you have power to intervene is to become not merely a spectator but an accomplice.

* * *

PRESIDENT WILSON has issued a personal appeal to his fellow-citizens, in which he reminds them that the supreme test of the nation has come and their task must be taken up with their whole strength. The industrial life of the country, the labour of the farmer, the business of the middleman, the management of the home, all must be consecrated to the one end and carried on in the spirit of service. It is in many ways the finest and most complete utterance on the subject of National Service which the war has produced. Its appeal to the business instincts of the American people is aglow with moral imagination. We quote President Wilson's closing words, which apply with equal force to ourselves.

> This is the time for America to correct her unpardonable fault of wastefulness and extravagance. Let every man and every woman assume a duty of careful and provident use of expenditure, as a public duty and as the dictate of patriotism, which none can now expect ever to be excused or forgiven for ignoring. In the hope that this statement of the needs of the nation and the world in the hour of supreme crisis may stimulate those to whom it comes, and remind all who need a reminder of the solemn duties of a time such as the world has never seen before, I beg that all editors and publishers everywhere will give as prominent publication and wide circulation as possible to this appeal, and I venture to suggest also to all advertising agencies that they would perhaps render very substantial and timely service to the country if they would give it widespread repetition, and to clergymen not to think it an unworthy or inappropriate subject of comment and homily from their pulpits. The supreme test of the nation has come, and we must all speak, act, and serve together.

* * *

SIMULTANEOUSLY with President Wilson's appeal the significant announcement has been made that the heads of the great meat trust in Chicago have placed their businesses at the disposal of the Government and renounced every claim to war profits. It is stated that the revenue which they are prepared to sacrifice to the public good amounts to £20,000,000 per annum. It is an action which must have far-reaching results. What many of the best observers have told us is true. Beneath the surface of American life public idealism is stronger than devotion to the almighty dollar. Germany could never understand this, and so her propaganda has suffered a dismal defeat.

* * *

WE cannot close these comments on the American situation without quoting the following editorial note from The Christian Register of April 5, which has just reached us :—

> No nation could have been more patient and restrained under the strain of wrong and injury than this nation has been during the last two years. We have kept strict faith with nations in conflict, and have acted fairly with all. We have observed the requirements of neutrality to the utmost bound and beyond. We have borne violation of rights in which we are partners, have endured the wholesale murder of our citizens, have kept within bounds our protests in the cause of our common humanity and the existence of civilisation. We shall enter into war in no spirit of vindictiveness or hostility, if war must come, and for no reason of resentment or mere assertion of pride and self-will. No holier mission was ever entrusted to man than the protection of human liberty, the right to life and equal enjoyment of God's world, and the establishment of good faith where it can be trusted. If we cannot rely on the most distinct and solemn pledges, if we cannot have just freedom on the earth, if we must submit to an international slavery, it is not worth while to live. As we once fought to gain freedom, and again to preserve it, in our own land, so now in solemn duty we shall fight, as we must, to maintain that freedom and extend it in the world.

* * *

No words can be too strong to express our abhorrence of the German crime in sinking hospital ships, and it is difficult to imagine any punishment too severe for the perverted criminals who plan such wickedness. But any policy of reprisals fills us with grave concern. Even if it were likely to frighten the Germans into good behaviour, which is most unlikely, competition in lawless violence must always be a degrading business. We hate the idea that our men should be ordered to do such things, and we can take no pride in their deeds even when they run grave personal risks in order to accomplish them.

* * *

The recent raid on Freiburg is a case in point. The report of it leaves us disquieted and a little ashamed. We know that the motive is not one of mere vindictiveness. The aim is to inflict punishment for outrage and to curb similar criminal intentions for the future, but the fact that the penalty does not fit the crime and in any case only hits the real bully indirectly, makes it quite ineffective as punishment. A policy of reprisals is unlikely to protect a single innocent life, and by the ease with which it ministers to base passions will certainly lower our national self-respect. The provocation we have received is terrible, but let us endure and keep our self-control to the end.

We know that it will be asked whether we are to do nothing to avenge the dishonour done to the Red Cross and to let it be known to the whole world that our wounded men cannot be murdered with impunity. There is only one thing we can do, namely to get on with the war and hasten the defeat of Germany in the field. Let every fresh German outrage quicken our energy and renew our faith in our cause. Other methods, though they may gratify the desires of the moment, will not bear close scrutiny in the light of the moral aims for which we fight.

* * *

By prohibiting the foreign circulation of The Nation the Government has succeeded in giving it a good advertisement. From the point of view of publicity Mr. Massingham may congratulate himself on his good fortune. For many months circulation to neutral and enemy countries has been controlled. This carries with it the suggestion that at any time the special permission may be withdrawn and robs the grievance of a little of its sting. But it does not on that account make the action wise. The difficulty seems to us to have arisen over a question of personal judgment. Ultimately censorship must be of that kind, for it is impossible to devise any code of rules which will enable all fair-minded men to determine at once whether the press has offended or not. Friendly hints and private warnings, if it is felt that the tone and policy of a paper are helping the enemy or crippling the energies of our own men, should in our opinion always be the first step, and we believe that in most cases it would be quite effective.

* * *

Subsequent events have already exposed the fallacy of the articles in The Nation to which exception was taken, and they have ceased to be of any interest. We cannot help expressing the hope that the whole incident, while it makes some Government officials more considerate in their methods, will also open the eyes of the public to the value of the very self-important and omniscient articles on military matters which have become a feature of many newspapers. We never read them without a feeling of amazement that men who are so much wiser than the War Council, Sir Douglas Haig and all our generals, should be content to hide their genius in the Press. The difficulty is that they never agree! We are grateful to writers with an intimate knowledge of military affairs who help us to take an intelligent interest in the strategy of the war, but dogmatic opinions about a campaign while it is still in progress and the critic himself must be profoundly ignorant of many of the essential facts are the mark neither of a temperate judgment nor of a sound mind.

* * *

Since Mr. H. A. L. Fisher came into office many things have combined to give a new outlook and a fresh spirit of hope to the whole subject of national education. The ideals which must lie behind legislation are rapidly becoming matters of general consent. In his reply to a deputation of the Workers' Educational Association on Wednesday, Mr. Fisher spoke of the way in which an appreciation of the value of the higher forms of education is spreading among the workers as one of the most promising signs in our national life to-day. "The onward movement," he said, "still has to contend with very great difficulties. In parts of the country its progress is impeded by long hours, by overtime, by the shift system, by the heavy and exhausting character of the manual toil of the neighbourhood. You have everywhere a vast mass of inertia and indifference to overcome. Nevertheless the onward movement is steadily growing."

* * *

Mr. Fisher closed his reply with a strong appeal for more intelligent interest on the part of working-men in the schools where their children are educated. "Our popular system of education," he said, "seems to have been popular in one sense only. The State has provided schools in which the children of the people are educated, but I am afraid I cannot say that it is popular in the higher and better sense—that is to say, that the schools of the people have behind them what they ought to have, and what they deserve to have, the enthusiastic support and zeal of the whole body of the working-classes. What I desire to see is an entire change of tone and feeling with regard to National Education."

* * *

To the Note which we published a fortnight ago calling attention to the valiant leadership of Col. John Ward, M.P., on board the Tyndareus, we want now to add the words which he spoke to the officers and men, when they were lined up on the sinking ship.

> Officers and men [he said] you have now the supreme test of your lives, the one moment that we all ought to have lived for. Remember that you are Englishmen. All the best traditions of our country and race are in your keeping. You are members of one of the most famous regiments in the British Army. Pray God you do not act in such a way as to sully its honour. Obey orders, and we may be able to save you all. But if we cannot, then let us finish like English gentlemen.

LOYALTY TO THE FUTURE.

We own to some feeling of satisfaction when any words we write on the present situation and our duty in regard to it, are felt to be strong and challenging enough to deserve a reply. We want to be provocative of thought and action in days when every moment is charged with deep issues for the freedom and happiness of the world. There are of course replies which must be reserved for our private meditation. When they are written in anger, or even with a touch of rudeness, they would clearly be out of place in the public press, and cannot be regarded as in any sense a contribution to great argument. But there are others, like the letter which we publish to-day from the Rev. F. H. Jones, which suggest another point of view with candour and deep feeling, or perhaps make us conscious of some lurking obscurity in our own statement of the case. We should indeed be very dull of understanding if we did not welcome opportunities of this kind for explaining what we mean and pressing home our argument.

Mr. Jones, speaking for himself and for other social reformers with whom he is associated, repudiates our suggestion that the imperious duties of the war and the feeling that civilisation itself is in danger ought to pull us up sharply in the midst of our dreams of social good and our schemes for the future. We can only reply that we were describing an experience, which we believe is very widely shared by earnest men and women at the present time. The artist, the poet, the student, the reformer, desires to use his special gifts. He is lured by the enchantment of his dream. He has moods when he is tempted to leave this nasty business of war to other men, while he goes on with his own proper work. Suddenly he sees the futility of it all, unless these other men are strong and devoted enough to win a victory for the allied cause. As Dr. Jacks points out in the current number of The Hibbert Journal, he has been banking on the certainty of victory. And then he faces the bleak possibilities of a defeat which he has done little to avert. Defeat might not shake his faith in God or his loyalty to goodness. It could not destroy any of the essential spiritual values of life. But his schemes of creative activity would be scattered as chaff before the wind.

In the autobiography of Mazzini there is a moving passage in which he describes the deliberate sacrifice of a literary career, for which he had such eminent gifts, as his first great sacrifice for his country. "A thousand visions of historical dramas and romances," he says, "floated before my mental eye—artistic images that caressed my spirit, as visions of gentle maidens soothe the soul of the lonely-hearted. The natural bias of my mind was very different from that which has been forced upon me by the times in which I have lived, and the shame of our degradation." And elsewhere he writes, that if he and his friends were successful then the art of Italy would bloom and flourish over their graves. The most ardent and devoted spirits in our country find themselves in a precisely similar position to-day. They perceive that their first duty is to provide the opportunity of a free and wholesome life which other men will enjoy. Unless they succeed in that aim they will be defeated all along the line. It is this conviction that has turned social reformers into warriors fighting for the Lord. They know that if they succeed, the arts of peace, which have dropped from their hands at the call of duty, will blossom from their dust.

At this point we venture to make a distinction, for lack of which there seems to be a good deal of mental confusion. Religious people and those who work for social reform in a religious spirit are prone to talk of themselves as concerned with eternal things over which the changes of the world have no power. While our soldiers are fighting earthly battles they are toiling for the kingdom of God. There is a sense in which they are quite right. God will still be our Father, and the beatitudes will retain all their significance, and the victories of faith will be possible for the heroic soul, whether we win in this war or are crushed under the heel of Prussian despotism. The result can make no difference at all to the intrinsic virtue of whatsoever things are true and lovely and of good report. But it is not so when we try to give effect to our religious principles under human conditions. Our work for the kingdom of God is an attempt to take the next step forward at a particular time, in a particular place and in particular circumstances. It is dependent to a large extent upon our own intelligent choice, and upon the special conditions which we have helped to create. To imagine that we can appeal to the sacredness of our work, as a reason for averting our eyes or withdrawing any of our strength from the elemental task of placing the country in safety, is an act of spiritual blindness. When the city is on fire and all the citizens are summoned to the work of rescue the best form of social service is to put out the flames. Our schemes for rebuilding ruined homes may be excellent, but first of all we must save the city or perish in the attempt.

Our first duty then as servants of the public good is to save the country from the terrible danger which threatens it. Until we have finished that task all our schemes of social reconstruction must be treated as strictly subordinate. If we throw ourselves forward into them at all it is because we take it for granted that somehow the country will be saved, and then we shall be able to turn to the familiar duties of social service once more. But this act of saving the country, do we realise its vast spiritual significance for the centuries that come after us? Is it not in the highest sense social service, work for the kingdom of God? We do not hesitate to use language of this kind when we are fighting the demons of drunkenness and lust and inhuman greed. Is there not some lack of simplicity of heart in the presence of the awful behests of duty, if we shrink from using it when we are at close grips with a more formidable and corrupting foe? Deeply convinced as we are that we are serving the highest purposes of good for mankind in this struggle for victory, we do not want to keep our faith in God and our zeal for social reform in some different compartment of our mind, or to live with visions of the future till we forget that our chief duty is to serve the present hour. There come tragic crises in the lives of men when they must recall all their energies from far-reaching and attractive schemes and concentrate them with terrible effectiveness upon one burning point of duty. Without this concentration all may be lost. It is something more than the condition of a good human success. It is an act of loyalty to the future and of disciplined obedience to the will of God.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

Lord, mend, or rather make us: one creation
Will not suffice our turn:
Except Thou make us daily, we shall spurn
Our own salvation.

Next to sincerity remember still
Thou must resolve upon integrity.

Thy God hath not denied thee all
Whilst He permits thee but to call—
Call to thy God for grace to keep
Thy vows; and if thou break them, weep—
Weep for thy broken vows, and vow again:
Vows made with tears cannot be still in vain.

George Herbert.

He had understanding of righteousness, and discernèd great and marvellous wonders: and he prevailèd with the Most High, and is numberèd among the saintly company.

From an Ancient Liturgy.

A freeman thinks of nothing less than of death. His wisdom is a meditation not of death, but of life. Spinoza.

Grant us, O merciful Father, a sense of thy presence, that we may feel that we are not alone, and that we live to serve not ourselves but Thee. Give us true wisdom, that we may know what is right, and cleave to it steadfastly. Grant us a living faith in Thee, that we may walk, not in the flesh but in the spirit, and by the power of invisible things. Give us constant charity; that our judgments may be those of truth and soberness, and not of passion or jealousy; and that we may regard all men as brethren. In our temptations strengthen us; in our solitude support us; in our sorrows comfort us; and in times of anxiety and fear do Thou teach us how to put our whole trust in Thee. Amen.

THE VIGIL.

The actual line of demarcation is always a thing of poignant, not to say irritating interest. The very point and moment of a change: the horizon line which divides sea from sky, so straight, so clean, so evident, so apparently possessed of being of its own, yet having none—no reality or dimension, merely marking the meeting place of two realities: or the "place where the rainbow ends": or the very instant of crystallisation, when a liquid becomes no longer a liquid and is now a solid; there was nothing in that flash, nothing to be caught and measured and weighed and analysed, yet the before and after, how different! The moment of mental determination, the tense pause, the almost explosive liberation, of a spiritual decision.

The men at the front stand upon a line of demarcation of this kind and our minds play around it and about it in quiet moments. Out there in front is No Man's Land, ploughed up and scarred, and a hundred dangers, and the enemy, his country, his people and his people's hopes and plans. Out here, behind, are the lines of communication, and safety and the sea and home and affection and our hopes and plans. There's a vast difference between the endeavour in the hearts on this side and those on that, yet out there, on the line itself, there seems such a little way between the two. You get close up to the enemy: you see him: he is a human being like yourself: he is doing things very much like the things you are doing. "Why!" some of the men are apt to say in their letters home, "These other fellows are just like ourselves, their aims are the same as ours."

The attitude of mind is false, and it is damaging to our cause. We must demonstrate its untruth and forswear it. I am not required to elaborate the aims of the enemies' attack, or their effort to remain everywhere on stolen territory. Judge of their purposes by the fruits of their work up till now. I am quite clear, however, about the aims and purposes which were at the outset and ought to remain those of the Allies, and would ask our fighting men to realise that the spirit of our venture is already speaking out in the results achieved, and in the events which now crowd in upon us. The enemy at his best confessed that what he had done was wrong; at his worst he claims to be right and that he fights in defence of his native land. We claim to fight for the liberation of men and nations, and witness! the results that are gathering speak everywhere of just that redemption for which we hoped—and more. Think them over—the results in East Africa in the freeing of the slaves; the Arabs' joy in their own liberation; the restoration to the French peasants of hundreds of their villages—and freedom; the awakening of the vast population of Russia; their attitude towards the Poles; the stirring of a people in captivity in Germany itself.

It is a subtle thing, this spirit that lies at the back of our enterprise, that reveals itself, in whatever meed of victory we achieve, as a living force, fruitful, not in evil results but in larger, freer life for man, in the redemption of the people.

We sang "When wilt Thou save the people?" and when God replies "Now, even now," do we not rejoice with full hearts and see that all the strain is worth while?

It is the spirit that tells; the spirit at the back of the fight; the spirit in the hearts of the men who have gone for us; the spirit in our hearts at home. Remember the Vigil: there you kneel at the line of demarcation; how do you rise? Strong for the good or for the evil side? There, in the Vigil, the quality of our victory is determined. May our men press forward, and may their example incite us too to press on, in the service of the Highest and Purest and Best, to join with them in self-consecration, seeking Victory for God and nothing less. It is the spirit that tells; the spirit we put into our effort. Let us consecrate ourselves afresh each day to God's service, and the Spirit will find its way into our arms and hearts and minds, into our plans, into our deeds, and out into all the results that will follow upon victory.

John C. Ballantyne.

[From "The High Pavement Chapel Chronicle" for April.]

UNDER THE MICROSCOPE.

What insect with gauze wings is caught thus in the blaze of sunlight beneath the deep blue glass of the sky?

What infinite mercy magnifies the little creature, and raises to the power of endless sympathy the clear intensity of vision?

What heavenly soul, with all the richness of eternal thoughts, now concentrates the wealth of boundless love upon this world?

What empires rise and fall upon its breast—what eager heart-beats!

What agonies of ages shimmer into joys in the slow unfolding and refolding of its little wings!

What slenderness of hopes, what frailties of faith, outspread these wings of praise and prayer to love unseen!

What assurance of calm in the soul! What research for adventures in the deep! What soaring spirits, what determined energies, what hosts of hidden souls look up athwart the sunlight! What high ideals glance upward into depths of thought and love beyond the stars!

How penetratingly and how irresistibly they gaze in awe and reverence upon the soul whom they for ever seek, for ever see!

How the quiet assurance of the little creature pierces to the gazing secret!

How its own deep soul so wings its way unto the very soul that in mercy, awe, and love so highly magnifies and so deeply justifies the little earth.

Wilfrid Harris,
Adelaide.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE WAR AND SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—It is not often that one member of a committee can venture to speak for all his fellows without consulting a single one of them, and yet I make bold to speak for every member of the Interdenominational Committee of Social Service Unions whose programme you review so appreciatively in your leading article to-day, and to assure you that not one of us—from the Jesuit Father to the Quaker, or the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Oxford to Mr. Jones—will be "brought up full stop by the warning words of Dr. Jacks." As for the fact of this audacity on our part I can answer for all. As for the explanation I will speak only for myself, though I have little doubt that we shall be unanimous in this also. We are, I believe, all united in blankly refusing to admit that and serious effort for the kingdom of God upon earth can be properly placed in such a light that it appears to be "gambling with Destiny."

What the future of Europe may be, after the awful strife in which it is now plunged is over, no one knows. Dr. Jacks tells us it is "contingent on an event the issue of which rests with the men on the sea or in the trenches, and perhaps with the gods." Might not the editor of a journal the purpose of which is "the spread of Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form" have ventured to leave out "perhaps" and to write "with God"?

The war goes on, it is true, but after all it is impossible for all the people in Europe to spend all their time in making high explosives and killing one another. We must plant potatoes, even though there be a possibility that the Germans may dig them. We must sow wheat in the hope—without the certainty—of reaping. Even the men at the front have some time in which they can and do think of the future and of the things for which they are slaying and being slain. And if they know that some of us at home are devoting a little of our time and thought to clearing our minds as to what England is really fighting for, and preparing for the great efforts that will be required, after the war is over, to make the country they have saved worth the saving, they will see that this is not "gambling with Destiny," but is an act of faith in God.—Yours, &c.,

FRANCIS HY. JONES.

April 15, 1917.

RUTHLESS ZEAL.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—On numberless occasions you have championed the dumb creatures' cause in your pages, so I hope you will give this letter space. A few days ago I read in our daily papers that "School children in Cheshire are offered by the Council 2*s.* per 100 for sparrows' heads or eggs." Surely this is putting a premium on cruelty, and will undo much of the work that has been done by the League of Pity, Band of Mercy, S.P.C.A., Boy Scouts, and other societies whose aim is to teach kindness to all dumb creatures. If the members of the Cheshire Council would read Longfellow's poem 'The Birds of Killingworth' they would learn that a pest of worms, insects, caterpillars, &c., followed when the people of Killingworth decreed the birds must be killed. If winning the war in the least depends on the grain saved by thus brutalising our children, then indeed England is in a parlous condition! I trust all who have an opportunity in our Sunday schools will do their utmost to check any such cruel tendencies, or we may one day find our children willing to sing Hymns of Hate.—Yours, &c.,

JENNIE R. WORTHINGTON.

Torquay.

April 14, 1917.

PAGANISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—In the article 'Christ is Risen' appearing in your issue of last week, the writer ventures on a most suggestive thought. He says: "Russia seems to me to be the one country in Europe where Easter is Easter indeed. Perhaps it is because there paganism and Christianity are blended in a wholesome manner." I have been very much interested lately in speculation in this direction. I cannot but think that, sooner or later, there will stand revealed a sound reconciliation, on philosophical grounds, between Greek mythology (paganism at its best) and Christianity. Is it too daring to suggest that Christianity will be thereby materially enriched, since all religions, even the most remote and depraved, are but tributaries to the one great major stream which we know as Christianity? Of all these tributary religions, the religions of Greece (combined generally under the term "Greek mythology") afford the richest contributions, certainly those most fundamentally human in conception. Pater calls the Greek religion "a religion of pure ideas." He claims rights for it in the modern mind, because the conceptions therein "arose naturally out of the spirit of man, and embodied, in adequate symbols, his deepest thoughts concerning the conditions of his physical and spiritual life." And those symbols in Greek mythology, are they not, in fact, forecasts of what actually became historical fact in Christianity, or, in other words, man's anticipation in imagination of the working out of God's ideas (to use the Platonic terminology)? For instance, to take but one or two of the merely "surface" correspondences, does not Demeter adumbrate our "Lady of Sorrows"? And as the cry of Persephone, rising up from the underworld, pierces the mother-heart of Demeter, do we not instinctively think of another bitter cry, "even to death," stabbing its way, for all eternity, into the heart of our own mater dolorosa? And from that startlingly bold metaphysical flight of St. John when he declares that God is "Love" does not our mind hark back to the Greek intuition that Eros, though frailest, was the most potent of the gods? Even the historical facts of the sacred story, are they not prefigured in some vague, illusive manner in the legends of Dionysus? Perhaps the correspondences are most markedly shown by Euripides in the 'Bacchanals,' where the disguised god meets such harsh persecution at the hands of Pentheus the king.

The foregoing are, of course, merely physical correspondences. Were the relationship confined to this, however interesting, it would not be valuable. But I am convinced that the primary ideas or conceptions underlying the Greek religions and the Christian have even more in common, and that could the correspondences be established it would add a still deeper element of humanism to Christianity, and prove the Christian faith to be founded on the ultimate convictions of the human mind.—Yours, &c.,

T. W. COLE.

44 Rose Hill Road, Wandsworth.

LAWRENCE HOUSE HOSTEL FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—May I say through your columns that the Hostel Committee are anxious that the next Message sent to our men on active service should equally reach all the girls and women from our Churches, homes, and Sunday schools now living away from home, owing to their being engaged on war work. This term is to be understood in its wide significance as work, not only for the army, munitions, hospitals, canteens, &c., but also on the land, and in the many civilian occupations in which women are helping to "carry on" while the men are away. We would send a word of greeting and cheer to our girls as well as to our boys. The Women's League, especially the Fellowship Section, are helping us, and I would beg all ministers, Sunday school workers, parents, and friends of such girls to send their names and addresses to the Secretary, Lawrence House, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.2. A post card will suffice in the case of one name, and the church or school with which the woman is connected should be indicated.—Yours, &c.,

M. EDITH MARTINEAU.
(Mrs. Sydney Martineau.)

Streatham Grove, Norwood, S.E.,
April 18, 1917.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO. LTD. — Psychical Investigations: J. Arthur Hill. 6*s.* net.

MESSRS T. FISHER UNWIN, LTD.—The German Chancellor and the Outbreak of War: J. W. Headlam, M.A. 3*s.* 6*d.* net. Woman and the Church: Canon Streeter and Edith Picton-Turberville. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.—A Diversity of Creatures: Rudyard Kipling.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

THE VALUE OF RESEARCH.

Science and the Nation. Essays by Cambridge Graduates, with an Introduction by the Right Hon. Lord Moulton, K.C.B., F.R.S., edited by A. C. Seward, F.R.S. Cambridge: University Press. 5*s.* net.

This is a fascinating book, and it fulfils its purpose admirably of helping ordinary people to grasp the value of scientific research. A good deal of loose talk is current at the present time, as though the chief use of science in education were to train men in certain technical processes, which will add to our industrial wealth. It is the business of these essayists to emphasize the intellectual discipline and the experimental methods of the laboratory which must guide the activities of the practical man. As Lord Moulton says in his Introduction: "The publication of this collection of Essays has....been prompted by the fear lest in the eagerness to extend the application of scientific knowledge to Industrial developments after the war there should be a tendency even in the centres of education to cultivate the practical side alone"; and he proceeds to point out that it is only an intelligent appreciation of the value of scientific method which can save us in the industrial struggle for existence and give us the independence which we desire. The essays themselves are the clearest popular exposition with which we are acquainted of the achievements of modern science in the service of man. Underlying their quiet manner and their array of facts there is a suppressed intellectual excitement, which is communicated quickly to the mind of the reader. People who are beginning to dig plots for vegetables should read the essays dealing with agriculture and intensive cultivation. The account of the improvement which has been effected in our home-grown wheat by means of cross-fertilisation is like a fairy tale. After describing the varieties which have been produced already, Prof. Biffen concludes: "Several other possibilities of improving the crop still remain, and one can now look forward to carrying the work through with a fair degree of certainty, for we have measured the possibilities of using Mendel's principles from the economic standpoint, and know that once there is proof of the independent inheritance of any character, then it can be worked up into any combination one requires." A less pleasant subject is dealt with in the essay by Dr. Graham-Smith on 'Flies and Disease,' but in no department has scientific ingenuity won more astonishing results. Here too we see the moral qualities of the investigator at their best. We are familiar with his unflagging patience, but in many cases his quiet heroism is even more remarkable. The American doctors, who carried on the experiments which led to the stamping out of yellow fever in the zone of the Panama Canal, accepted danger in the spirit with which a soldier goes into battle. They exposed themselves to odious forms of infection and even offered themselves for inoculation, because without voluntary sacrifice of this kind some link would be missing in the chain of evidence. It is a case where zeal for knowledge and self-less love of humanity were present in an equal degree. Science like patriotism has its heroes and its martyrs.

Europe Unbound. By Lisle March Phillipps. London: Duckworth & Co. 6*s.* net.

Mr. March Phillipps writes with so much beauty and verve and with such a noble passion for freedom, that he may almost be forgiven for the violence with which he makes history and art serve his theory. He has an artistic devotion to the Middle Ages, akin to that of Ruskin in its energy and one-sidedness, and he views the centuries from the dawn of the Renaissance to our own day as a period of decline in democratic freedom and real religion. This gives a note of partisanship to his book on the historical side, which is likely to weaken the force of his appeal for many readers. Referring to the influence of the Renaissance he writes: "Faith, the spiritual instinct, the contemplative mood, the monastic profession, the authority of the Guilds, the influence of religion in the daily affairs of life, declined together. And with these declined also liberty. Liberty, possessing no longer now as its ally the deep spiritual instinct which so easily penetrates all human hearts, was forced to rely on the support of the intellect. What was the consequence? Intellect serves but a few; it is the instrument of autocracies." Now all this ignores the deeper currents of the Reformation, and the contribution of Puritanism to popular freedom in England and Scotland. Men destroyed the mediæval Church because they desired a larger freedom in personal and national life than was compatible with its imperialism. It is only one aspect of mediæval life that is represented by the consummate popular art of Chartres and Rheims; on the other side is the repressive engine of the Inquisition. We have felt bound to state quite clearly our point of divergence, for this romantic mediævalism crops up again and again and colours the whole book. But fortunately it does not destroy its intrinsic value. When Mr. March Phillipps deals with the spiritual forces of the present struggle, or prophesies of the Europe that shall be if the Allies are faithful to their cause, he writes with eloquence and convincing power. He has a fervent belief in the future of democracy. Again and again he pleads with us to be worthy of our cause—"To rise intellectually to the level of our own cause, this is what is needful—this is what is lacking." He sees that our past history has laid upon us a mighty trust as custodians and torch-bearers of freedom, —"It is time England emerged out of the old insular order of ideas into one of greater intellectual grandeur and more universal concern for mankind. The world, I sometimes think, is waiting for her to take this step. Let her take it, and there will pass over the land a wave of consciousness, a realisation of our Imperial mission, which will not only fuse the British race into a solid unit in this quarrel, but will inspire and hearten every hesitating State groping after the same ideal, and enlist on our side the passionate sympathy of all neutral nations in which the principle of liberty is cherished." The foregoing passage will give the reader some idea of the element of political vision which blends with Mr. March Phillipps's gifts of artistic insight. He cares passionately for everything which ennobles the common life. For him Liberalism does not belong to a political party; it embraces the whole of life and finds its highest expression in religion. His aim is to help his countrymen in the struggle between Light and Darkness by revealing the power of liberty "to unite, to harmonise, to build up a consolidated Europe."

MEMORIAL NOTICE.

THE REV. H. W. HAWKES.

A large circle of relatives and friends mourn the departure of one who by his goodness of heart, his utter unselfishness of character, his largeness of soul, and sincerity of conviction had endeared himself to many, not in this neighbourhood only but in all parts of the kingdom. The Rev. Henry Warburton Hawkes was born in October, 1843, at Kendal, where his father, the Rev. Edward Hawkes M.A., was for more than thirty years minister of the Market Place Chapel. A brother of Mr. Edward Hawkes, the Rev. Henry Hawkes, B.A., F.L.S., was for thirty-nine years minister of the High Street Chapel, Portsmouth. Mr. H. W. Hawkes at the age of 16 came to Liverpool and commenced a business career, but his deeply religious nature inclined him to take up missionary work among the poor and neglected, and he became the first minister of the Domestic Mission in Bond Street, Scotland Road. With remarkable energy and zeal he devoted himself whole-heartedly to the needs of the neighbourhood in which his lot was cast, and was soon privileged to see the good results of his labours. There and elsewhere he was friend, companion, adviser to young and old who found in his ministrations a sincere delight and constant help. His health was never robust, and after some years of hard work at Bond Street he accepted an invitation to co-operate for a time with an American Unitarian Mission in Japan. He always spoke in after years with warm appreciation of the Japanese people with whom he was associated, and told in very interesting lectures his pleasant experiences in the Far East. In 1890, mainly through his advocacy and energy, a Unitarian congregation was started at Bootle, of which again he was the first minister; it met at first in the Bootle Town Hall, and in 1895 occupied its own chapel in Stanley Road. There for ten years he continued his devoted labours, and succeeded in attaching to himself a large number of persons who loved him for his own sake and for the Christian message of life and truth which he uttered. He retired from Bootle in 1900 believing that his life work was finished; but after a few years of comparative rest he placed his services at the disposal of the Liverpool District Missionary Association and formed a Unitarian church in West Kirby, of which he became the first minister in 1906. During his pastorate and under his direction the meeting room in Grange Road was built. In 1913 he returned to Bootle and became Pastor Emeritus of the congregation he had founded there. When two years ago the present minister, the Rev. Walter Short, joined an Officers' Training Corps in preparation for active service, Mr. Hawkes resumed the oversight of the church, and rendered most valuable service in the time of need. His death at this juncture will prove to be a sad and irreparable loss, since he was acquainted with every individual member, and was in touch with all the subsidiary institutions. He died early in the morning of Easter Day at the age of 73 years.

Mr. Hawkes was not only an excellent missionary and effective preacher, but a poet of considerable sweetness and power. His hymns have found a place in many hymnals; his Scriptural dramas are favourites with the young people in the Sunday schools. Four years ago he published in one volume his literary productions under the title 'Gathered Fragments from Many Years.' His sacred poems entitled 'The Man of Nazareth' and 'The Coming of Christ' deserve to be more widely known than they are in every Christian circle. Very tender and pathetic are some of his minor poems, but all are animated by a deep, joyous religious faith. All who have known him will value the memory of one who was a strenuous helper in every good work, an ardent advocate of every movement that could uplift and bless mankind.

J. C. O.

A PERSONAL TRIBUTE

By the Rev. J. L. Haigh.

He often said: "The best years of my life were spent in the North-End Domestic Mission." Looking back, the heart aglow with many memories, bright, beautiful, clear, one sees focussed in those sixteen years, suffused with that light which never was on sea or land, not only the longings, the dreams, the visions, the idealisations of a soul thrilled with the very ecstasy of a strong, tender passion for humanity, no matter how rough or uncouth it may appear in outward form, but also something of the spiritual success which is only known to God himself in all its fulness. The inflowing of his spirit came with cleansing power; a stream from the mountain heights of a quickening, living faith in the eternal realities. The courts and alleys of the dreariest district in "a City of Dreadful Night" began to sing for joy. It was marvellous in our eyes; it becomes more marvellous as the years roll on. Cool reason demands to know the why and wherefore of this force that made for righteousness, and the moulding of this channel of God's grace. Family history counts for much: his father and uncle were both ministers of the gospel, and both were honoured and revered by that son and nephew, who felt the all-compelling call to follow in their train. But the impulse at the critical moment was the life, character, labour of John Hamilton Thom and Charles Beard. Renshaw Street Chapel sent many saints into the labyrinths of city life in its day, men endowed with the desire to make straight the highway of our God. Among its number of merchants and business men Dr. Beard found his young friend, Henry Hawkes, already dedicating most of his leisure time to night school teaching in one of our Domestic Missions. His sympathy was already set towards his life's vocation; and when the invitation came in the form of a fatherly mandate from Dr. Beard: "I want you to do this," his young friend accepted gladly. There was no reception party. He came and took possession of his own by the power of compassion, human brotherhood and strong goodwill. Strangers visiting the Mission have often said: "Why, it looks like an old warehouse from the outside." And in 1871 the inside was not much better. Whitewash and black varnish, the wash not very different from the varnish in many places, formed the favourite scheme of colour. Gradually the young and artistic enthusiast changed all that. Life, music, colour, joy began to express themselves, until towards the end visitors were delighted with the beauty and harmony of that chapel—the top storey of the old warehouse. That is typical and takes us to the secret of his genius. Love of music, love of beauty, brightened and made melodious his love of truth. His character was charming through his happy spontaneity. He believed in sudden inspiration, and in what he called possession by sympathy. He did not dogmatise about it; but he often referred to it in a half serious, half humorous fashion that kept it beyond the reach of cold criticism. In this way: "Do you know that I almost felt that Robert Collyer was speaking through me last night? I had his phrases; I heard the tones of his voice." Naturally a pagan said "Imagination!" but he always replied: "Perhaps—but——" These tea-table confidences as they return are a veritable treasure-trove of delight and holy tenderness. Never can a man forget a revelation such as this: "Yes, I believe in prayer, and in the immediate answer to prayer. I remember one morning, when I was in business, being faced with a great pile of work. I was weak and ill. In my very weakness I knelt down in the office and prayed to God for strength. And I was able to work all through the day and late into the night." Now, there is no contradiction in the following contrast: He delighted at times in the sheer, mad, irritating, innocent wantonness of making puns. The practice is out of fashion now. You said something very seriously. He seized the one word that could be played with, and all your thought was a skittle-alley. The only thing you could do was to laugh with your mouth like an inverted half-moon. Next day he would demand pardon: "A spirit of mischief must have had me in his possession." This sprite helped him wonderfully when we acted charades and impromptu sketches together; and generally speaking his dramatic instinct prompted him to touch the appropriate and decisive in all his speech and action. Concerts, magic lanterns (the good old-fashioned magic lanterns, when you took half a day to make your own gas, and half of it was gone before the time came to show the pictures), these and social gatherings were, under his leadership, something to remember. The unexpected always happened, and he had his own way in everything: a new rhyme, a new ditty, a new story, made a dinge in the items that you thought were fixed and stereotyped. His freshness and his life made all his contributions a success. If you said: "You want to do everything yourself; there is no need for me," he would become seriously silent, as though the sting of the playful rebuke had made him dumb. For at heart he was one of the most unselfish men; but practically his very desire to give helped him to forget his nearest friends.

Now, take a personality such as this, spiritual, poetic, musical, with a passion for fellowship, and give him the privilege and blessing of entering the poor man's home, and what happens? A change must take place: transformation, conversion, rebirth—something must happen. The strong, determined, happy warrior must win. He won all along the line. Church people, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Atheists (we had a few who called themselves that in those days), Spiritualists, all felt the charm of his character. Courts, cellars, attics gave him welcome as he came with his offerings of flowers or fruit. His imagination, moved by love, was not only used for his Mission people and his intimate ones; it was fully and beautifully exercised in every instance. He made a new programme every day. The divine autocacy of the lover belonged to him: "Ye are my friends....Ye did not choose me, I chose you." And the democracy always responds to the lover. Bring this winsome daily experience with you into the Sunday school, the religious service, the funeral service, the baptism, and what is the result? Power that comes through certainty and sincerity; the beauty of holiness, and the holiness of beauty. At times he dearly loved a theological argument, and he always felt that he was victorious. His wit was quick to find the ready word, that word which made his slow-moving antagonist twice confounded in the confusion which seeks for a door of escape. Illustrations sprang to the forefront of his mind like daisies in the grass on a sunny day. The popular things of the hour were seized, touched, and lifted into another atmosphere. Take Sankey's songs and hymns for instance. The beauty of a sweeter, saner theology and religion marked the altered phrase or verse, and in many cases fitted the music better than the original rhythm. Recognition and appreciation came to him in life. Every Annual Meeting was like a new consecration, which made him very humble for the time, and yet gave him fresh strength to go on his way rejoicing. And hundreds of his boys and girls, all of whom he called by their Christian names, now men and women with family responsibilities and cares, can look back and say, as one said on Sunday last: "Thank God! the happiest days of my life were spent in the old North-End Domestic Mission."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

118th List of Subscriptions

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,674	18	1
Dr. W. B. Drummond (third donation)	2	2	0
Mr. F. Maddison (twenty-fifth donation)	0	10	0
K. L. (eighth donation) ..	5	0	0
Mr. and Miss Barnes (eighth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. W. N. Martin (fifteenth donation)	0	12	0
Mrs. Wm. Mitchell (second donation)	2	0	0
Henry Thew (fifth donation)	0	1	1
American Unitarian Association (second donation) ..	28	5	0
First Icelandic Unitarian Church, Winnipeg.. ..	8	6	11
Mrs. Dendy (fifth donation)..	2	0	0
X. (twenty-sixth donation) ..	1	0	0
Miss S. S. Dowson (ninth donation)	5	0	0
Miss Ada Fricker, Trinidad (fourteenth donation) ..	2	0	0
Mr. Arthur Taylor (fifth donation)	0	10	0
	£16,733	5	1

Parcels have been received from: Bank Street, War Workers' Circle (per Miss Vera Flower); The Misses Orr; Mr. Richard Dickins, Ullet Road Church Sewing Circle (per Mrs. Odgers); Mrs. Tudor Jones; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Liscard Memorial Church War Sewing Party (per Mrs. Hamilton); Miss G. Sharpe; Mrs. Harrison; The Misses Worsley; Mrs. Perrot; The Finchley Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Odgers); Mrs. Grundy; Miss Robertson; M. C.; Miss Gorrett; Miss Nettlefold; Rosslyn Hill Sewing Society (per Mrs. Thomas Cobb); The Redlynch House Work Depot (per Mrs. Robinson); Mrs. Collier's Working Party, Trinidad.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 14 by 24 in. with a string run in the neck.
Helpless shirts of flannelette or flannel (not calico).
Pyjamas (urgent).
Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.
Pants, vests.
Towels of all sorts.

For the Maternity Home at Calais:—

Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).
Chemises for women.
Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N W. 3.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Instead of the usual Good Friday gathering this year the Annual Meeting of the Manchester District Sunday School Association was held on Saturday evening last, April 14, at the Memorial Hall, Manchester. The business meeting took place at 5.30, the reports and accounts being adopted on the motion of the President (Mr. Albert Slater), seconded by Mr. H. J. Broadbent. The officers and committee were thanked for their services during the past year, and the officers and committee for 1917-18 were appointed, the President being re-elected, also the Treasurer (Mr. J. W. Barlow of Bury), and the Secretary, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, Mr. T. Fletcher Robinson proposing and the Rev. W. G. Cadman seconding. The President expressed best wishes to kindred associations; greetings were read from the London Sunday School Society, the Liverpool Sunday School Society, and the Midland Sunday School Association, and the President welcomed the Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A., who was present as representative of the Sunday School Association, Essex Hall, of which he is President. Mr. Fox responded.

The following resolution, moved by the President, seconded by the Rev. Herbert Barnes, and supported by Mr. G. H. Leigh, was carried unanimously: "That this Association of Sunday Schools strongly favours all endeavours to make future wars between the nations impossible; and in the interests of young people, and for the promotion of permanent peace, it desires to impress upon all Sunday Schools the great importance of systematic instruction in the methods and principles of conduct necessary for the realisation of universal brotherhood."

Thanks to the Bank Street Sunday School, Bolton, for inviting the Association to hold its next Annual Meetings there on Good Friday, 1918, provided that the war be then at an end, were moved by Mr. H. J. Broadbent, seconded by the Rev. H. E. Perry, and cordially agreed to. There were about fifty persons present during this routine business, which concluded at 6.30.

After a short interval, when from eighty to ninety persons had assembled, the usual Public Meeting commenced with hymn and prayer. The President, in a short address, expressed thanks for the honour of his re-election, and referred to the various activities included in the work of the Association. He then moved the following resolution: "That this Annual Meeting of the friends of the Manchester District Sunday School Association, sends warmest congratulations to the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., and to Mrs. Dowson, on the attainment of fifty years' connection with Hyde Chapel and Sunday School, Gee Cross, gratefully acknowledging their many services to the Association as active members of its Committee during the whole of that period, and gives them cordial greeting with best wishes that they may continue many years in the enjoyment of health and fellowship amongst us."

This was seconded by Mr. J. Chadwick, and carried with hearty acclamation, the President announcing that, along with a copy of the resolution, a specially bound presentation music volume of the 'Hymns and Choral Songs,' with engrossed inscription inserted, would be sent as a memento to Mr. and Mrs. Dowson.

Following this, the President moved a similar resolution concerning another former active worker for the Association: "That this Annual Meeting of the friends of the Manchester District Sunday School Association sends hearty congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. John Reynolds on having passed the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, their Golden Wedding Day, and gratefully acknowledges the many valuable official services rendered to this Association by Mr. Reynolds, with much advantage to the best interests of the affiliated schools; and also wishes them every happiness in the coming years."

This was seconded by Mr. J. Wigley, J.P., and heartily agreed to, the President intimating that a presentation volume of 'Hymns and Choral Songs,' with engrossed inscription inserted, would also be sent to Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds.

Then came a hymn, and a collection in aid of the Association funds, after which the Rev. A. W. Fox addressed the meeting on Sunday School matters, urging more home discipline, more visiting the homes of scholars by their teachers, more appeal to the emotional side in teaching, the influence of the teacher's example in making religion attractive, and the importance of making scholars feel that they are children of God.

Miss Johnstone of Bury was the next speaker, her topic being 'Subjects for our Elder Scholars.' Introduce them to books of good stories, she said, and especially books that inculcate kindness rather than cruelty. Discuss the cinema with them. Help them to find delight in the purely clean and really funny. Assist them to understand religious terminology. There should be lessons explaining the meaning of our sacraments—the Christening Service, the Communion, the Marriage Service. Our Church history should be made familiar to them. There should also be lessons on citizenship, common ownership, partnership in public property, and the duty of giving in return for receiving. Clean sex morality should be taught with the aid of physiology, hygiene, and botany. She considered that temperance and self-control, and such principles as those represented in 'The Strength of Britain' Movement, should receive due attention; that wholesome recreation of both sexes should be provided for and the cultivation of esprit de corps in games and play.

After another hymn the audience listened to an address from the Rev. John Ellis (Stalybridge), in which he described some of his experiences with the Y.M.C.A. near the front in France. Applying as a Unitarian minister, and with the consent of his church, the Y.M.C.A. accepted the offer of his services. He was put in charge of a hut, with a staff of helpers, responsible as the head for the management and carrying out of the various activities, including food catering, provision of amusements and entertainments, and for soldiers' letter-writing, and the conducting of religious services and morning prayers. Mr. Ellis said he was profoundly thankful that his congregation had spared him for the opportunity of these four months' rich experiences, which he felt sure would be of exceptional and permanent value in the work that lay before him.

A vote of thanks to the speakers and to the trustees of the Memorial Hall was briefly moved by the Rev. H. Bodell Smith, seconded by Mr. J. W. Barlow (Treasurer), and passed. The meeting concluded with hymn and benediction. The hymns and hymn-papers used were those of the new issue of 'Hymns and Choral Songs,' copies being sold at the door. Mr. Oliver H. Heys assisted as leader of the singing, which was without instrumental accompaniment, and Mr. J. Chadwick, assisted by Miss Fletcher and Miss A. Ashworth, managed the bookstall department.

Compared with the usual Good Friday attendances this Annual Meeting may seem to have shown up meagrely, yet considering the increased restrictions and cost of railway travel, the inclement weather, and other difficulties and disadvantages, the meeting was by no means disappointing. The spirit and tone throughout were good. There was a warmth and earnestness in speakers and listeners that made all feel that it was well to be there, and an evident conviction throughout that this work must be kept going, though so many workers have been called away.

GREETINGS TO AMERICA.

Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, has sent the following letter in reply to the telegram received from Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, President of the American Unitarian Association :—

My dear Dr. Eliot,—The Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association were much moved by your gracious telegram, and desire me to express on their behalf their warm appreciation of your fraternal words of salutation on entering the conflict in which our country has so long been engaged.

Pledged by our own traditions to associate the practice of our worship with political freedom, we have for generations cherished the sentiment of "Civil and religious liberty all the world over." The great address of President Wilson and its reception by Congress have now brought this ideal of the right of each nation to determine its own method of life into the forefront of the struggle. It was for this cause in the case of Belgium that we entered the war; and this, with ever widening application, has been our highest and ultimate aim.

By placing this in the forefront of the purposes to which your country now dedicates her magnificent resources, President Wilson has opened a new era in the world's history. No great nation can in the future evade its share in the common burden of securing the interests of humanity at large, when any autocratic power, in violation of its own pledged word, tears up its treaties and covenants, and spreads ruin and destruction over land and sea. The elimination of such power from the fellowship of the world's sovereign States is indeed one of your immediate objects. How far it may be possible to secure that result by force of arms, only time can show. We do not disguise from ourselves that grave dangers may yet beset us, and sacrifices, heavier than any that we have yet made, may be imposed upon us. But with your co-operation, in addition to the tried strength of the Allies, we are convinced that the victory of freedom is assured, and when America enters the council of peace, it will be to secure the permanence of international order and the sanctity of international law, to which this country dedicated its efforts from the first.

We welcome your co-operation therefore with heartfelt joy, with sympathy with you in the internal perils to which you may for a time be exposed, and with confident hope that the final issue of the struggle may be nothing less than such a reorganisation of the great democratic forces of the world under the administration of justice, as shall lead to the final abolition of war.

With warmest personal regards,

Always yours sincerely,

J. Estlin Carpenter,

President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

In consequence of the war, the anniversary meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association in Whitweek will be curtailed in some ways. The President's Luncheon, which has proved such an attractive function, will very properly not be held this year. The Conversazione at Essex Hall on Thursday evening, May 31, will, however, afford the members and friends of the Association an opportunity for social intercourse. The difficulty and expense of travelling will probably prevent country ministers and laymen from attending in such large numbers as usual.

The religious service will be held at Essex Church, Kensington, on Tuesday evening, May 29. The devotional service will be conducted by the Rev. C. M. Wright, M.A., of Mansfield. The preacher of the Annual Sermon will be the Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A. It will be remembered that the Rev. Dr. James Drummond was the preacher in 1906; and now his son has been selected to speak to our religious community in this period of stress and trial in the history of the world.

On Wednesday morning, May 30, under the presidency of Dr. Carpenter, the annual business meeting of the Association will be held at Essex Hall. We understand that Dr. Carpenter has been nominated for a second term of office as President. His reappointment will give widespread satisfaction.

The public meeting on the Wednesday evening is always an impressive and striking feature in the proceedings in Whit-week. The general topic for the speeches this year is 'The Need and the Opportunity for the Reorganisation of the Religious Life of the Country.' Dr. Carpenter will preside, and the speakers will be the Master of Balliol (A. L. Smith, Esq., M.A.), Miss Caroline Spurgeon (Bedford College), the Rev. Neander Anderton, B.A. (Monton), and the Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D. (Hindley).

The programme of the week will, of course, include the meetings of the Sunday School Association, under the presidency of the Rev. Arthur W. Fox, M.A., when Mr. T. M. Chalmers, M.A., will give an address on "Child Religion and the Future Sunday School." The Lay Preachers Union, the Women's League, the Central Postal Mission, the Historical Society, the Temperance Association, and the Ministers will all have something to say about their work during the past year; and doubtless will also have prophetic messages respecting bigger and greater things which they mean to do when the war is over.

We are glad to hear that Dr. Jacks has accepted an invitation to speak at the Unitarian Ministers' Meeting in Whitweek. His subject will be 'What ought We, as Ministers, to do after the War?'

We hear with deep concern that Dr. John Hunter is seriously ill. On inquiry at his house on Thursday morning we learned that his condition is very grave.

The Rev. W. H. Drummond expects to be away for about four weeks in France on a round of visits to the Belgian Hospitals. He will also lecture for the Y.M.C.A. in several places.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Burnley.—Mr. Harry Taylor, who since last May has acted as Lay worker at Trafalgar Street Unitarian Church, has taken up National Service, and terminated his ministry on Sunday last.

Coseley.—The 255th Anniversary of the founding of the Old Meeting congregation was held on April 1, the preachers being the Rev. Lawrence Clare, of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, and the Rev. W. G. Topping, minister. Solos were rendered by Mr. Fred Badham, of Birmingham, and anthems by the choir. Mr. R. A. Clarke, of Birmingham, presided at the organ at the evening service. On Easter Sunday evening the cantata, 'The Lord is Risen' (Maxfield) was given by the choir, the minister giving an address on the subject of the Resurrection. Mr. H. Millington was organist, and two members of other choirs in the district gave much appreciated assistance. The Minister is now engaged on National Service work during the week-days, and preaching every Sunday, and is being heartily supported by the Committee and congregation.

Dundee.—The series of Sunday Evening Conferences on 'After the War Problems' at the Foresters' Hall in connection with the Free Religious Movement is proving very successful. The first took place on April 1, when Miss Husband, a member of the Dundee School Board, gave an address on 'Education.' On April 8, 'The Ethical Aspects of the Socialist Movement' were dealt with by Mr. James Reid, a local Labour leader. On April 15, a paper was submitted by Dr. W. B. Drummond, of Baldovan Institution, on 'Froebel and Child Welfare.' It was a fine address, laying great stress on the importance of caring for the child between two and five years of age, a period when it is too much neglected, and on the need of a system of education capable of drawing out the social and religious instincts, and developing the child's faculties in a natural manner, religion being conceived in Froebel's words "not as an emotion or a dogma but as service." It was suggested that Dundee millowners should establish the Kindergarten system in their own town, and Dr. Drummond instanced the splendid work done by five kindergarten schools in Edinburgh, where children born in the most squalid districts were trained naturally and brought up under the most satisfactory conditions and environment—the chief aim being to develop the young folks' capacities through voluntary activity, and fit them for the Board School when they reached the requisite age. Freedom and opportunity were the watchwords of the kindergarten. Not only did this idea provide the child with a social training, but it also established a moral and religious outlook. In the discussion which followed, Dr. Drummond said that there was a great difference between the children trained by the Kindergarten system and those trained at home before they underwent the Board School training. The former were more active, interested, and anxious to do things. A different kind of teaching would have to be introduced if the Kindergarten children were to get the full advantage of their original training. On Sunday, April 22, the Rev. H. Dawtrey will speak on 'The Spirit of the Reformers.'

Nelson.—At a recent congregational meeting, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith intimated to the members of the Unitarian Church that he proposed to terminate his ministry at Nelson at the end of May. At the same time he said that he had accepted a unanimous invitation to return to Mottram in Cheshire, where he was formerly minister for over seven years. He thanked the Nelson Unitarians for the way in which they had worked, and praised them very highly for the very good feeling which animated them throughout and for the united and harmonious spirit which had characterised them. Mr. Smith was pressed to reconsider his resignation with a view to its withdrawal, but as he was unable to do that, his resignation was accepted with regret.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Sir Rabindranath Tagore at Yale.

During his recent visit to the United States Sir Rabindranath Tagore was presented with the Yale Bicentenary Medal by the President of the University, who in the course of a most appreciative address referred to the great debt which the West owes to the East. We are reminded by an Indian contemporary that the University was founded two centuries ago by Governor Yale of Fort St. George, who acquired the wealth which enabled him to render so signal a service to education, "perhaps not too scrupulously," in the Indian Peninsula. It is a matter of encouragement and gratification to his countrymen that the great gifts of the Hindu seer and poet, and his services to the common cause of humanity, have been so ungrudgingly acknowledged by English-speaking people both in Great Britain and America, and that the good relations between India and her sister nations of the West have been materially strengthened thereby. The President of Yale, who welcomed Tagore as one of the Brotherhood of seekers after Light and Truth to whom it had been given to help millions in their spiritual quest, gave the interesting information that for three-quarters of a century the great classics of India have been taught in the halls of his University.

The Centenary of 'Blackwood's.'

Blackwood's Magazine has, says The Times, always been unremitting in its search for high adventures, and although it is suggested in the Centenary Number that it has always stood for "honest, downright, unblenching Toryism," and cherished the motto "down with the intellectuals," its career has been far from dull, and its contributors by no means uninspired. Such men as Lockhart and Wilson (Christopher North), who helped to frame its destinies from the editorial chair, were too vigorous and energetic not to attract young writers of like power and individuality, and many were the famous men who, in times past, found scope in its pages for their imaginative powers and exuberant wit. Scott was a contributor, so were De Quincey and Coleridge. In succeeding generations Alison and Samuel Warren (the author of 'Ten Thousand a Year'), Mrs. Oliphant and Laurence Oliphant, Charles Reade, Bulwer Lytton, Anthony Trollope, Landor, Sir Edward Hamley, Sir George Chesney (of 'The Battle of Dorking' fame), and William Maginn of Trinity College, Dublin, all wrote for Blackwood's.

Industry and Motherhood.

A much-needed inquiry into occupations and conditions of occupation which are likely to be injurious to motherhood is being conducted under the auspices of the Women's Industrial Council. The investigators have in mind two classes of injuries which may be involved—those affecting the mother herself, and those affecting the health of the child, either before or after birth. One of the trades has now been thoroughly investigated, and the health of the women engaged in it and their children compared with that of women and their children living under identical conditions excepting that the mother does not go out to work at all, and the facts, when they are published, should be particularly useful to welfare workers. Miss Clementina Black is conducting the inquiry, assisted by Miss Agnes Kelly, and a band of voluntary helpers, including Mrs. Stanton Coit—wife of Dr. Stanton Coit, of the Ethical Church, Bayswater—who has spent much time in visiting the workers in their homes.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

LADIES' HANDKERCHIEFS. Slightly imperfect, hemstitched Irish Linen. Fine quality. About 13½ ins. Six for 3s. 3d.; bundle of twelve, 6s. 3d. (postage 4d.). Write now for free Bargain List.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any condition. 6d. per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 2s. on silver; 3s. on gold; 8s. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6d. per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2s. each on silver, 3s. each on gold, 9s. each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return. —I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any?

I will pay 5d. for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2s. each on silver, 3s. each on gold, 8s. each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. What is the use of artificial teeth that you do not wear lying in a drawer? But don't be misled by higher advertised prices. Far better write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any make of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Bankers: London City and Midland Bank, Ltd. When sending kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO., 29 London St., SOUTHPORT, Lancs.

ESTABLISHED 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 21, 1917.

* Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3904. NEW SERIES, No. 1007.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WHIT-WEEK MEETINGS, 1917.

President: Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

Tuesday Evening, May 29.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE.

Essex Church, Notting Hill Gate, 7.30.
Devotional Service:
Rev. C. M. Wright, M.A.
Preacher: Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Collection for Funds of the Association.

Wednesday Morning, May 30.

ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, 11 A.M.
The Report; Election of Officers and Committee; Resolutions and other Business.
The President, Dr. Carpenter, in the Chair.

Wednesday Evening, May 30.

PUBLIC MEETING.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, 7 P.M.
Addresses on
'The Need and the Opportunity for the Reorganization of the Religious Life of the Country.'
Rev. Dr. Carpenter in the Chair.

Speakers: The Master of Balliol (A. L Smith, Esq., M.A.), Prof. Caroline Spurgeon, Doc. Univ. Paris (Bedford College, University of London), Rev. Neander Anderton, B.A. (Monton), Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D. (Hindley).

Thursday Evening, May 31.

CONVERSAZIONE.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, 8 P.M.
The President will receive from 8 to 8.30.
Tea and Coffee, Small Hall, from 8.30.
Tickets 1/- each, may be had at the Book Room.

London:
ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.2.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

THE EIGHTY-SECOND ANNUAL MEETING will be held at LINDSEY HALL, THE MALL, KENSINGTON (nearest station Notting Hill Gate), on TUESDAY, MAY 8, at 8 o'clock.

Chairman: Mr. Charles Martineau. Dr. Philip Wicksteed, Mrs. Wallace Bruce, Mrs. Sydney Martineau, the Rev. H. Gow, and Mr. Philip Roscoe will address the Meeting.

FRANK K. FREESTON,
Hon Sec.

Tea and Coffee at 7.30.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

April.

29. Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON.

May.

6. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.
13. Rev. A. W. FOX, M.A., of Todmorden.
20. Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, of Tenterden.

DEPTFORD CHAPEL BUILDING FUND.

RECEIPTS.

	£	s.	d.
Amount received from Subscriptions	1,037	13	6
Interest on Deposit...	1	12	0
	£1,039	5	6

EXPENDITURE.

	£	s.	d.
Hall, Beddall & Co., Builders ...	754	10	0
J. D. Hunt, Ltd., Builders... ...	152	12	4
A. Kirkland, Organ Repairs ...	42	0	0
Architect's Fees...	41	17	6
L.C.C.'s Surveyor's Fees	3	14	3
Advertisements, Christian Life, The Inquirer, &c.	10	12	6
Stationery and Postages	1	0	5
Interest on Bank overdraft... ...	11	15	0
Balance in hand	21	3	6
	£1,039	5	6

An additional sum of Ten Pounds has been promised by Deptford Chapel Congregation.

F. C. CREAK, Hon. Treasurer.

Audited and found correct,
(Signed) T. B. TAYLOR.
December 11, 1916.

THE LIBERAL CHRISTIAN.

The April Number contains Aricles by Revs. Dr. J. Drummond, Dr. A. G. Duff, W. G. Tarrant, B.A., G. T. Sadler, M.A., LL.B.; Notes and Comments, &c. Price 2d. post free.

"Mine eyes have seen the glory."

This Army Hymn of the U.S. of America is included, with 70 others, in 'The Liberal Christian Hymnal.' Price 2d. post free.

Offices, 28 Red Lion Square, W.C.1

City Agent—
A. Wilson, 18 Gracechurch St., E.C.3

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

OLD CHAPEL, DUKINFIELD.

SCHOOL SERMONS,

SUNDAY, 6th MAY, 1917.

Morning, 10.45. Evening, 6.30

DR. S. H. MELLONE, M.A.,
Principal of the Home Missionary College, Manchester.

Afternoon, 2.45.

Rev. JOHN S. BURGESS of Flowery Field.

Collections at each service.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed ..	£19,500,000

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, April 29.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11, Miss M. A. Francis; 6.30, Mr. A. A. Taylor.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. H. W. Stephenson.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. Rosling; 6.30, Rev. Dr. Chas. Hargrove.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Mr. A. Stephen Noel.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. P. Spedding.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. Vint Laughland; 7, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Davis.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. A. J. Howard Hulme.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. Begg; 6.30, Mr. J. P. Rosling.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Frank K. Freeston.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. M. Wright, M.A.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Cambridge, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, H. G. Chancellor, Esq., M.P.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. Cottier,

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45 and 3.0, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30. Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. C. Seymour Bullock.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. L. Schroeder.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. W. Newall; 6.30, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Douglas Walmsley, B.A.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. Jacks.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

MARRIAGE.

Mildred-MacNay.—On the 24th instant, at Christ Church, Middlesborough, by the Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A., of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Frank, second son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Henry Mildred, Warley, Essex, to Florence, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. MacNay, The Lindens, Grove Hill, Middlesborough. At home, The Mount, Sedgley, Staffs, June 12 and 13.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY, middle aged, desires POST: Companion Help, care of old Lady, &c. Active. Highest references. Small salary. Any part.—E. H., Inquirer Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

WANTED, by May 22, useful MOTHERS' HELP for one little girl, aged five. Must be healthy and ready to assist in light house duties.—Apply first by letter to E. M. C., Fernwood, North Hill, Highgate, N.6.

LADY (Shropshire, husband in France) wishes to share her home with another lady or two friends. Every convenience. Terms moderate. Highest references. Lovely country,—Y., Inquirer Office, 13 Bream's Buildings. London, E.C.4.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
No. 50, Cannon Street, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

Directors.

Chairman—Sir Alexander Waldemar Lawrence, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I.

Leslie T. Burnett. | Miss Cecil Gradwell

Humphrey G. Russell.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT
FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 *Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.*4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3, endorsed "Inquirer."

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 195
EDUCATIONAL REFORM 197
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 198
THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD: I. 198
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Reprisals in War 200
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 200
Union for Social Service 201
The Anti-Slavery Society 202
Men and Movements 203
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 203
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 204

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W 3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE dispatch of influential British and French representatives to confer with American authorities at Washington is everywhere hailed as most wise and practical. That Mr. Balfour in particular will worthily play his part we can have no doubt; he and the other able visitors will convey and receive much valuable assistance in bringing together the available forces on our side of the great struggle. We are assured that while much is done to secure co-operation with the material resources, there will also be effective intercourse on ideals and future policy; indeed, it is said that already the closer fellowship into which the several Powers are now drawn has justified a quite new and fruitful freedom of counsel on political matters which are of concern, not to the domestic life of individual nations merely, but to the general civilised world. No doubt, our spokesmen will be able to remove some not unnatural prejudice existing in the States against old-world ways and institutions; in return, we trust, they will gain a freshening breath of the democratic life which in a century and a half has made of the New World of the West a potentiality so great.

* * *

THE solemnity at St. Paul's last week fitly consecrated the adhesion of the United States to the cause of the Allies, and if bright sunshine can be taken as an omen the day was one of reassuring promise. Bishop Brent, who delivered the sermon before the great concourse assembled at the Cathedral, said well:—

> This is not merely the beginning of a new era, but of a new epoch....The Allies have been fighting a battle not merely for their own laws, their own religion, their own homes, their own social order, but also for the great commonwealth of mankind. They have been championing Right....A quarrel is sometimes euphemistically termed a "misunderstanding." Our quarrel with Germany is not a misunderstanding, but an understanding. We know the principle which that nation has espoused as its guiding star, and it is one that contradicts the principle by which men live.

They were there, he concluded, to seal the pledge of life, fortune, and all they possessed to the cause of God and humanity.

* * *

IT is of interest to note that Dr. Brent, who is Bishop of the Philippine Islands, has been remarkably successful in drawing into accord, not to say alliance, a very large number of members of different religious bodies in the States. But, imbued as he is with generous and far-reaching sympathies, he dares to believe that Christian people throughout the world are ready for closer fellowship; he even cherishes a hope that he may succeed in winning support from the Pope himself. If the Pope were not the head of a vast secular organisation, as well as of a religious communion, we might share the good Bishop's hope. But how effectually the moral and spiritual influence of Rome can be paralysed by political considerations has been only too well illustrated in its shameful impotence even to protest against the wrongs and outrages inflicted upon Catholic Belgium. As to the chances of any relinquishment of the Romish claims to sole authority in the world of Christendom, who but an incorrigible enthusiast can dream of them!

* * *

IN a letter written to Mr. Bowie the President of the American Unitarian Association, Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, nobly expresses the feelings of our friends across the ocean on the entry of their country into the war. "We Americans," he says, "are instinctively and traditionally peace-lovers. We are drawn into the great conflict with no selfish ambitions, no desire of conquest or of vengeance. We shall take our place in the battle-line because the ideals which our democracy represents are imperilled." He goes on:—

> What thrilling revelations of unsuspected capacity for heroism and idealism have come to us in these last three years. First, the sight of little Belgium throwing herself undauntedly across the path of the unscrupulous invader and losing all but her unconquerable soul. Then the revelation of the amazing spirit and tenacity and endurance of the French people—a people we had thought given primarily to frivolity and almost incapable of spiritual passion. Then the birth of a new England, a great people awakened from self-complacency, prosperity, and absorption in material concerns, and throwing all that they have and are in defence of the principle of good faith among the nations and of the right of little countries to their own life and liberty. Then the disclosure of the deep sentiment that binds together the scattered units of the British Empire, and the eager response of Canada and Australasia, South Africa and India, to the call of the mother of free men. Then the tremendous apocalypse in Russia; the uprising and the triumph of the long subdued powers of democracy and the overthrow of despotism. We have lived, in these three tumultuous years, through the march of centuries, and the end is not yet. I can but hope that we may yet see the last citadels of absolutism falling before the assaults not of the free nations alone, but of a people awakened from the rigid discipline of subserviency, from delusive dreams and mad ambitions.

* * *

Dr. Eliot, whose journeys far and wide through the States enable him to gauge well the mind of his countrymen, has the utmost praise for the skill with which President Wilson has drawn their reluctant wills together for this great departure. What the more ardent spirits, including we know well many of our brethren in the faith, regarded as the President's "almost intolerable patience," has had its reward; and his final and convincing word "has gone far to reconcile even our peace-at-any-price people to the inevitable issue." We may also quote a word which, though not by now much needed, we hope, among us on this side, is still and always worth remembering: "This war is going to be won not merely by the preponderance of material forces, but also by the tenacity with which our people cling to certain spiritual ideas. I feel that this is a great opportunity for our Free Churches. I want to see our ministers laying hold of that opportunity, and interpreting the spiritual values of the great wave of patriotic feeling which is just now sweeping through the country." That Dr. Eliot's mind is bent on certain definite pieces of work to be undertaken by our brethren is just as we should expect; and in passing we may gratefully note a second handsome contribution sent (but not yet actually to hand) for the Lawrence House hostel.

* * *

Mr. Herbert Fisher's speech last week on the new educational policy elicited much notice and considerable commendation in the House of Commons and beyond. Its main points are discussed elsewhere; here we emphasise it as illustrating a settled mood which, we hope, is shared by all in our churches. While the majority of us are intensely interested in such fields of activity as are open to us in the one immediate effort of winning the war, there are things to be done—now, as far as possible, but with freer energies hereafter—which are of permanent and far-reaching importance. The report of the meeting of the Union for Social Service held at Liverpool last week will surely be read attentively by many readers of The Inquirer. "Social Service," in the widest sense, is, and must ever be, a duty of the most pressing order. How pressing that duty is we see not only in regard to education, but also in regard to the quite elementary virtues of thrift and temperance—witness the difficulty of persuading large numbers of people even now to economise in food and money—and in respect to child welfare, and what is called the "social evil."

Dealing with the latter, it was stated by an officer in Parliament this week that "the inroads of this disease in the army were such, as regards men in this country, as to represent the equivalent of a division permanently out of action. That did not take into account the large number that passed through the hospitals in France, or the colonial troops." It is poor comfort to be assured by the Secretary to the Local Government Board that certain evidence showed five times as much of this disease among recruits in Germany, while the percentage among the German civil population was also very much higher than in ours. The whole matter is horrible to the last degree, and bodes ill for the nation, body and soul alike. On the other hand, let us bear in mind that a million children in the elementary schools suffer from ailments which good care in infancy would have prevented. Yes, there is need enough and to spare, for all the wise and energetic work of religious-minded patriots; and nothing but the highest possible faith, courage, and devotion can hope to win in this campaign.

* * *

For the third time in the war spring is coming round us and our soldiers in France—long looked-for, it is coming, as that other consummation will come, though long delayed. "This afternoon," writes one of the lads, "we had to reconnoitre a large wood close by. It was gloriously sunny, with blue sky and bursting buds; and I'm glad to say my mind refused to confine itself entirely to military matters. There were anemones and violets in profusion; I enclose just one of the former. The primroses were not yet out. In the wood there had been some fighting in the early days of the war; the shallow trenches were filled in and covered with opening flowers. How quickly Nature sets things right again, and plants flowers on top. Strangely enough, we have a nightingale that sings in the Château grounds; very strange its full-throated music sounds above the resounding thuds of the 'evening strafe.'"

* * *

One of Nature's lovers, Edward Thomas, fell in the Easter advance. His prolific pen was the servant of an observant eye and a much-meditating heart. The title he chose for his first book 'Horæ Solitariæ,' published in 1902, was prophetically true to his genius. In many ways he went apart from the crowd; reserved in manner; as a writer devoted to a prose music of his own and sometimes beyond the popular ear; in habit prone to the by-path and hills and streams remote. An early disciple of Richard Jefferies, he also found himself as he followed in Borrow's tracks. Among the tributes to his memory given by brothers of the craft perhaps the most fitting was the earliest, communicated to The Times, April 14: "With him," said the writer, "has died a personality rare and enigmatic.... He has died on the brink of an expressiveness finer and more complete than his books have anywhere revealed.... Beyond almost any modern English writer since Cobbett he has apprehended the immanent spirit of England, in fields and trees and roads, in flowers and grass, and communicated it pure from egotistic strain." Quite recently he had published some fine poems, characteristically hiding himself behind the name "Edward Eastaway." It is one more drop of bitterness in the cup we drink that so gifted a writer should be lost to this country at the early age of 39. An officer in the Garrison Artillery, he died at his observation post. Our little folk (who still find something, we hope, to interest them in our pages) may like to know that Edward Thomas's first appearance in print was in Young Days, and that he was once a boy in our Wandsworth Sunday School. To his father, Mr. Philip Thomas, minister of the Church of Humanity, and to his widow, a daughter of the late James Ashcroft Noble—also well known to some at Wandsworth—we tender respectful sympathy.

* * *

We are asked sometimes whether we have found our Belgian friends really grateful for the help which they have received from our Belgian Hospital Fund. Our columns have borne overwhelming testimony to their gratitude. Once again let us quote a typical passage from a letter just received from a doctor in charge of one of the hospitals:—"How can I express my thanks better than by reiterating to you the sincerity and the sympathy with which we, Belgians, admire with pride our great and powerful Ally—your nation and people—the gratitude which animates us all when we think of the untold assistance given to our poor Belgium for two and a half years, and of the frank and friendly hospitality enjoyed by thousands of our compatriots who have had to leave their homes?"

* * *

Our readers will be interested to learn that the Editor crossed the Channel safely last week, and is now for a time at Rouen, visiting hospitals and delivering lectures at the Y.M.C.A. huts. He has a tour arranged for between three and four weeks, and we may fully expect him to bring back much that will make clearer to us the conditions and work nearer "the Front."

EDUCATIONAL REFORM.

The speech of Mr. Fisher on the Education Estimates for 1917-18 is the most important and encouraging deliverance made in Parliament on National Education since the introduction of the measure known as the "Board School Bill" in 1870. It was Mr. Fisher's maiden speech in the House of Commons, and curiously enough the first maiden speech of any length ever delivered from the Treasury Bench. Also, it was noticeable as one of the very rare instances of a speech by the head of a great department of State who is an acknowledged expert in his subject. Mr. Fisher amply justified the expectations that had been raised by his presence at the Education Office. In a noble and enthusiastic statement, lasting more than two hours, Mr. Fisher outlined a broad and comprehensive programme dealing with various phases of the adequate training of the young. It was an encouraging and vitalising speech, leading up to new advances and adventures in national education. Many changes are indicated, some of them already long-delayed; but of more importance than the particular measures proposed is the large and generous way in which the whole position from elementary schools to the Universities is regarded. The moment for bold action has arrived. The way has been partly prepared by the efforts of Lord Haldane, Lord Bryce, and many others, calling attention to the crying need of the nation for some progressive action. The war itself has done much to convince the public of the supreme value of trained and disciplined intelligence. Something of the success of our armies at the front is due to the fact that our millions of new recruits have nearly all passed through our elementary schools. When we remember the speed with which these recruits learned their business, so that in the short time of six months they acquired all the skill that it took our old-time recruits to acquire in three years, we see the point of the amusing remark made by an officer and quoted by Mr. Fisher as to that "sudden and brilliant improvisation of an army" which has so surprised the enemy: "There is something in your d——d School Board education after all." The courage of our recruits was never in doubt; it was their quick intelligence which astonished the authorities. It is along the line of quickened intelligence the nation must meet the future with all its complexities and difficulties. This applies not only to elementary education but education all round. For while the rank and file of the army have been adequate to their responsibility, the same can hardly be said of those in the higher positions. The mistakes and disappointments which have from time to time marred our fighting and delayed success have been nearly always in the upper branches of the service. A lack of intellectual vigour and seriousness, a lack of thoroughness, a lack of imagination, the presence of a certain intellectual slip-sloppiness marked many of the failures or comparative failures in the early parts of the war. Experience has taught the leaders many valuable lessons, and, thank Heaven! we are not to-day quite what we were two years ago. But a more adequate intellectual equipment among our officials, both military and political, would have saved the country much disappointment. Mr. Fisher is alive to the fact that the so-called upper classes need a higher standard of education than has hitherto satisfied them, and proposes to stimulate secondary schools and the Universities with the ambition of making themselves more efficient. The war has made apparent on all sides the weaknesses of our intellectual position, and, in Mr. Fisher's language, "has invited us to take stock of all available agencies for their improvement." It is a good sign that both Labour and Capital are now demanding educational reform. At the same time it is more clearly seen than ever that the first thing to be aimed at is not economic and industrial efficiency, whereby profits may be greater and wages higher, but that mental and moral efficiency which shall give us better and more enlightened citizens, happier households, and finer, broader conceptions of what it is to live as men among men. "Though we are an extremely clever nation when we choose to use our brains, we are only just beginning to realise that the capital of the country is in the brains and bodies of the people." Mr. Fisher is evidently a student of Ruskin, who startled the world sixty years ago by saying: "It may yet be discerned that the true veins of wealth are not in Rock but in Flesh—even, that the final outcome and consummation of all wealth is in the producing as many as possible full-breathed, bright-eyed, and happy-hearted human creatures." To secure that desired end something more than economic efficiency, with its tendency to turn human beings into mere labour machines, is required. We do not remember any previous education minister pointing with regret to the low standards of taste in the amusements of the people, and to the starvation of the æsthetic side of human life. We are reminded of a time when music and other arts were as widespread here as in other countries. Truly if our principal manufacture, to quote Ruskin again, "is that of souls of a good quality," the schools must labour to uplift our tastes, refine our amusements, and at least lead us to the threshold of pleasure in art.

Mr. Fisher asks in the first place for an addition to the education estimates of £3,829,048. Not that this will cover the cost of the changes contemplated, but only of such as can be brought into operation in the current year. The chief of these are: (1) Raising the age of school exemption for all children alike to 14; (2) abolishment of the half-timer; (3) establishment of Day Continuation Schools for children above 14; (4) establishment of Nursery Schools for children under 5; (5) establishment of an inexpensive Secondary School in every area; (6) establishment of Post-Graduate Studies in Universities; (7) introduction of some form of Leaving Certificate in Secondary Schools to take the place of the now numerous entrance examinations required by various professions; (8) increase of grants to Secondary Schools—more especially of maintenance grants to pupils from elementary schools; (9) increase of teachers' salaries; (10) grants to increase automatically as the local expenditure on education increases; (11) the poorest areas to benefit most; (12) Local Authorities to have greater freedom of control.

All this is a great programme, and while it does not cover the whole ground it is a good beginning. Only a portion of it can be at once put into action; other portions will require separate legislation, while others must be left for realisation until after the war. At the same time we heartily thank Mr. Fisher for his quite noble first effort, marking as it does the preliminary steps in a long-looked-for advance on the whole front. Of course if we should not win the war and the Germans should successfully invade these islands all this business will come to dust as surely as the towers of Louvain. In that sense our new education proposals may, we suppose, be called in Dr. Jack's striking and effective phrase, "a gamble with Destiny." Yet there is such a thing as a legitimate gamble even with Destiny, or else the writer of Ecclesiastics did not know what he was about when he uttered his parable: "He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap."

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

Yet there are some to whom a strength is given—
A look, a self-constraining energy—
A Faith, which feeds upon no earthly hope,
Which never thinks of victory—but content
In its own consummation, combating
Because it ought to combat,
And conscious that to find in martyrdom
The stamp and signet of most perfect life,
Is all the science that mankind can reach—
Rejoicing fights and still rejoicing falls.
It may be that to spirits high toned as these
A revelation of the end of time
Is also granted.

Houghton.

It is the great marvel of the Christian character, that the completest self-sacrifice gives the completest self-possession; that only the captive soul, which has flung her rights away, has all her powers free; and that simply to serve under the instant orders of the living God is the highest qualification for command. This is the meaning of the great saying of Cromwell's, "One never mounts so high as when one knows not whither one is going"; a saying which "the wise and prudent" scorned, as a confession of blindness, but which reveals to simpler minds the deepest truth.

James Martineau.

O THOU to whom we may come in all our needs, help us in this time of trial to enter more perfectly into the true spirit of discipleship, as followers of Jesus Christ. May our hearts be open to that great appeal of his endurance of the Cross, his faithfulness unto death, and of that love with which he gave his life for his friends. Let this come to us as the call of divinest life, with rejoicing in the remembrance of his victory, the triumph of the spirit, not subject to the law of sin or of death; and not in him alone, but with great thankfulness that the faithful of every generation, who have learnt the secret of the Cross, are bound together in the fellowship of earth and heaven. Let the light of their victory and their gladness be on our path, to consecrate our sorrows, to give us strength and joy in the service of our lives, to unite us with them in the same faithful spirit. Amen.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

I.

One need not be a pessimist to take a very serious view of the situation of the Church in the modern world. There is no desire on my part to revive discussion on the rather barren question with which we were made familiar earlier on in the war "Has the Church failed?" The very putting of the question seems to me to be a failure to grasp the central problem in its cogent reality and relevancy. There is no answer to such a seeming question, for in reality there is no question until the terms made use of are particularised. Like all human institutions the Church has a record of mingled failure and success. If you look in one direction only and decline to acknowledge that there is another at all, it may appear that the Church is a complete failure and should be eliminated. But if you are a person who can only look in one direction, and who proceeds to promulgate that judgment, all you really demonstrate is your own failure as an observer and a critic. The question becomes intelligible, and even useful, when put thus: Has the Church really done its best to make the most of its opportunities? But even this question, as retrospective, is likely rather to turn on the gas tap than to light the jet; and while burning gas gives light and warmth, escaping gas poisons and suffocates. The only value of a discussion on this question as to what has been is to bring sympathetic judgment to bear upon the present and future in relation to the experience of the past. To call our spiritual forefathers, and the forefathers of the various branches of the Church, fools and failures because they enterta ned different ideas from ourselves, and set themselves to rather different ends, is an ignorant, not to mention uncharitable, use, or abuse of breath. We may wish that they had entertained ideas as to the function of the Church and the meaning of re'igion other than they always did; but it is not improbable that our descendants will pay us the same compliment.

I propose to make a broad generalisation for the sake of leading up to what is, as I see it, the vital part of the problem for us, and in passing I draw attention to the fact that it is only a rough generalisation, not intended to be ruthlessly applied. I should say, then, that the Church has developed two fairly distinct ideas, and evolved the appropriate organisation as to its relation to and function in regard to the world. The one is social, corporate, catholic, priestly; the other is individual, personal, salvationist, prophetic. Both ideas and both organisations have produced a great deal of good, and, we must admit, not a little evil. The one is imperialistic and extensiv e: it aims at nothing less than conquering the world. The other is parochial and intensive, and aims at withdrawal from the world. The ideas, however, overflow organisations. Nothing is more misleading than to say that the Catholic Church represents spiritual imperialism only, and that the Protestant Church represents spiritual parochialism merely. There are prophetic and personal movements in the Catholic Church, and there are priestly and imperialistic tendencies in the Protestant. To make the leading divisions of Christendom identical with definite ideas is to introduce a false and misleading simplicity into a very complex phenomenon. Vital problems are always something more than problems of classification. It looks attractive and scientific to identify Catholicism with Petrine Christianity, and Protestantism with Pauline, as Bernard Shaw seems to do, but that gives no real account of the intermingled forces and tendencies and ideas of either branch of the Church.

Now, these two leading ideas of the Church, if the general validity of my analysis be admitted, have provided us with two extremely valuable and important concrete conceptions, namely, the Holy Catholic Church and the eternal value of the human soul. That each of them has so far failed in full measure to give complete expression to these potent concepts in the world is not so wonderful as that they have done so much towards establishing and realising them. For the world is not merely a slow pupil, but, on the whole, a very unwilling, cantankerous, and naughty pupil. And one must sorrowfully admit that the attendant dangers of these two views have not been avoided by the Church. The Holy Catholic idea has largely been conquered by the world which it set out to conquer; while the eternal value of the human soul idea has tended to degenerate either into a revivalism whose only root in reality is an abnormal stimulation of the emotional side of human nature, or into an edification of the saints which leads nowhere, and causes a good deal of unproductive and unnecessary cerebration in countless ministerial studies.

Meanwhile the world is much larger than the Church, and the world is growing larger, while the Church is gradually dwindling. The world has on the whole got the better of religious imperialism. It made the Church adapt itself to the world's conditions; it imposed its ancient superstitions, festivals, and forms upon the Church, so that there was left scarcely a single original symbol or festival to the militant Church that set out to conquer the world. Its man god, his virgin mother, his death and resurrection, and all the elements of dramatic ritual, were in the main a restatement of the world's myths and superstitions, drawn chiefly from the exigencies of agriculture. The essentially new and original element, namely, the vividness and electrical force of the teaching of Jesus and its application in his relationships with fellow human beings, was deliberately withdrawn from circulation. The Jews and the Romans put Jesus to death. The Church and the world very nearly went one better: they almost succeeded in destroying his teaching and personality. And, in my opinion, to-day the result is that a very large part of what is politely called the Church is not the Church at all, but is simply the world, covering its naked limbs in the gaudy finery of resurrected superstitions and transformed agricultural and nature dramas and rituals which in their original form have long been discredited and abandoned, but have won a new lease of life through union with ecclesiasticism. And what about religious parochialism? On the whole, I do not see that it has been much more successful in its contest with the world. It has snatched its brands from the burning, but has very largely been unable to quench the smouldering fire in the brands themselves, with the result that you often hear it said that you need to be very careful in any business transactions with Nonconformists. They fulfil the commandment about God and Mammon by an arrangement whereby six days are devoted to Mammon and one day to God.

Meantime in all the Churches you find, if you are not blind or demented, as some critics seem to be, a great body of faith and piety: of noble living and high aspiration. Every Church has its saints, dead and living, its achievements of moral and spiritual usefulness; and dark as the world is to-day, it would have been ten times as dark but for the flickering and unsteady light which has bravely been held up by the much abused and admittedly imperfect Church of Christ.

Now the supreme question, for the sake of which I have undertaken the rather distasteful task of adversely criticising the venerable institution of which I am a product and a member, and to which I owe in every direction far more than I can hope to repay, is this: Can we upon whom has fallen the duty of being in our measure the custodians, or at least the guides and leaders, of the Church, do anything to trim the lamp, to steady and increase the illumination, in the present uncertain flicker of which the world has to read, if it is to read at all, the Word and the laws of God?

What of the two chief ideas evolved in the history of the Church, but so far so imperfectly applied—the Extensive and the Intensive? Must we choose one or the other, or seek a synthesis of both, or discard them both and discover some other principle for the successful application of the mission of the Church to the world? I was talking over this problem recently with a Wesleyan minister, in charge of a large Wesleyan central mission which has two big halls, fitted up with all the appurtenances of Wesleyan home missionary work. He admitted to me that he wondered to what extent the idea this represented was either successful, or even good if successful. The result was, he said, very largely to destroy the home as a centre of religious life, for the faithful were, evening after evening, gathered together in one or other room of the mission. He further went on to compare the imperialism of the Wesleyan Church with the parochialism of the Friends, and to estimate them in the light of the history of Jesus and the first days of the Church. He wondered, he said, if the whole extensive idea (he did not use this term) of the Church were not a departure from the very heart and soul of Christianity, and whether a movement despised and rejected, maybe, by the world, and essentially not "of the world," would not be the only way in the end of saving the world. This represents a return to what I have called the parochial and intensive view—it is, of course, not a new principle at all. For my part in that discussion I developed the extensive idea, and propose to set out the main line of my contention then, in order that I may criticise both my friend and myself.

I contended, then, that the Church had gradually surrendered, voluntarily or involuntarily, the very instruments whereby it ought to have moulded the world into the Holy Catholic Church. First the drama. It was the Church that revived drama, in its miracle and morality plays, and in having taken over and sanctified various season and nature dramas bequeathed to it from old-time superstition. But the Church did not retain the drama. It never built a theatre, and never trained first-class actors as part of its work. It dropped its miracle and morality plays, retaining only its pompous dramas of ritual, and watched the stage arise as an independent and even opposed influence. With the outbreak of Puritanism the ritual dramas were damned, and the stage was damned, and the prevailing attitude of the Church became one of violent opposition to one of the most effective instruments for influencing, for good or evil, the world. To allow the stage to slip into the control of people who meant to make money by it, and to whom the idea of benefiting or uplifting people by means of it was secondary if it was there at all, seemed to me one of the most tragic of blunders. Very much the same may be said regarding the history of the Public House. The Church frowned, rather than smiled, upon social intercourse for any other purpose than prayer or worship. The beer and spirit people very soon appreciated the situation, with the result that the beer house is the public house, and the Church is practically marooned in the ocean of the week upon the little island of Sunday. Take education, in its broad aspect. The Church was the first educator, and did great public service in that direction: but smitten with the curse of denominationalism made such an exhibition of itself that most of us pray now for secular education. But even with the passing of the education of the children from Church to State, was not there a vast field for activity in instruction in sciences and arts which are of fundamental importance to body and soul? In art and literature there has been the same story of failure to make any full use of these instruments of extension. Where "art" is tolerated it is in the main an imitative sort devoted to the interests of creed, tradition and superstition: while in literature the best brains and pens of the Church have been devoted to such problems as the accommodation on the point of a needle for angels, or whether woman was a human being, or whether God was a self-contradiction. Or if you prefer another example you have it in many of the publications of the Religious Tract Society. Consider political life, and the immense opportunities of helping forward the Kingdom of God through legislation and the creation of a healthy public opinion through the scientific (not partisan) study of and instruction in politics, and see how the Church, though it boasts of what it did in the remote past in regard to slavery, and improving the position of women (very debatable questions so far as the Church's initiative is concerned) is nearly always behindhand in its teaching, generally having made friends somewhere with the mammon of unrighteousness. It has neglected very largely to instruct its own teachers and ministers in regard to sociology, politics, and economics, with the result that when you do get a "political parson" he is generally a windbag, and rightly shunned by the most intensely religious people. And finally it has allowed the world to encroach upon its own special ground in such matters as that of personal immortality, the hidden forces and nature of the soul and personality: with the result that the people read 'Raymond' and take very little notice of the Church's teaching as to the immortality of the soul; for in the main the Church has inherited a dogma it calls "faith" and has forgotten that people do not live by the bread of ancient faiths and traditions alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The world provides the explorers even into the country of the spirit and of human personality, matters of fundamentally vital importance to the Church, while the Church looks on in astonishment and searches for texts to see whether such explorations are not infidelity to the doctrine of justification by faith.

Now had the Church been efficient and, in its best sense, businesslike in seizing all these opportunities, might it not have equipped itself with instruments wherewith it could have conquered the world?

In thinking over the discussion which I have thus summarised I am by no means confident that either of us said anything very enlightening, even if much that both of us said was true. It seems to us, looking backward over the centuries, as if the Church were really strongest, morally and spiritually, when it was despised and rejected, and before its association with the State. But was it? How do we estimate its moral and spiritual strength? By the type of life that it cultivated among the few, or by its restraining and uplifting influence upon the many? The persecution of the Church created enthusiasm and fostered magnificent loyalty, which made it possible eventually for the Church to become an immensely powerful institution, exercising sway not only over the spiritual life of men and women, but over policies and governments. In that very success its inner spring of power was defiled and to a large extent destroyed: yet is not the fact that it achieved the questionable success which led to this spiritual weakening the very criterion we apply to its vigour and utility in the time of its persecution?

Had it remained a mere handful of loyalists and enthusiasts, a perpetual thorn in the side of the world, for ever being plucked out and burned, but for ever growing into a pricking thorn again, would it ever have been possible to rank the Church as one of the great human institutions to be seriously reckoned with in world affairs? And I contend that with all its weaknesses and imperfections it is still to-day an institution which counts. Is it not inevitable that a movement inspired by the faith and ideals of the Christian Church must seek expansion: that to attempt to choose the rôle of a peculiar and despised minority would lead to complete self-frustration? On the other hand, I see quite clearly that, human nature being what it is, success and prosperity, honour and prestige, at once weaken and threaten to engulf the spiritual independence and vehemence of any revolutionary movement. All this leads me to the tentative conclusion that there is something wanting in both the ideas—extension and conquest, and intension and separation. The problem is now so vast, so intricate and so complex that it cannot be solved by the application of distinct and definite ideas, however successful they may have been in an earlier age. We all go back in the study of sociology to Greek thought and practice, and we discover there the organic theory of society, and we hope to bring a solvent to our multifarious problems in the modern world from this study. But in application the simple ideas, which represented actual facts, in a small social group like the city state of the Greeks, are utterly inadequate when you come to nations, federations and empires.

To think you can solve the social problems by uttering the magic words "organically related," when as a matter of fact the only relation oftentimes is one of repulsion and fission, is as hopeless as is the ostrich's attempt to hide itself in the desert by covering its head in the sand. So I think in regard to the immense and complicated problem of the Church and the world. What was historically a principle of success for Jesus and his first disciples is not necessarily, nor even probably, a principle of success to-day. The forces of their disposition and organisation are so different. And in passing I would suggest that this line of thought has its bearing upon the question of pacifism and resistance to evil.

I am quite prepared to believe that Jesus in his day would have refused to bear arms for any cause, and would have refused under any circumstances to kill his man (though I do not know how it is possible to prove that it was so). But much as I revere the man, and still more his teaching, I must refuse as an intelligent being to believe that Jesus's analysis of his own particular time, people and task can be universalised and applied without modification in a universe so infinitely altered in essential respects as ours to-day is.

So far the discussion has been rather theoretical and critical, and at this stage a more practical and concrete question inevitably presses forward and demands consideration. An examination and critique of principles is helpful only as a preparation for grappling with the problem of defining aims and objects. The question, then, without an answer to which no solution of the difficulties so far raised can be attempted, is this: For the sake of what the Church should, or does, seek either extension or intension. An attempt to answer this question and to bring the inquiry to a concrete issue, will be made in a Second Part to follow next week.

John Cyril Flower.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

REPRISALS IN WAR.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—It is good to read the reference to "reprisals" in last week's Inquirer, which has never failed to represent the highest and best thought throughout the war, and we may hope will now take a part in protesting against any British imitation of German methods of warfare. A strong and influential stand in Parliament against this new policy would probably be best and most effective, but the outside public can also do much, and silence on this grave matter might seem to imply acquiescence. The Fight for Right Movement has nobly sustained the highest ideals, and given inspiration through these years of serious danger—danger not only material but moral—and perhaps its leaders would be among those most likely to inaugurate or support a public protest against the lowering of British traditions and the degradation of British warfare by any futile and cruel imitation of Prussian methods, which the righteousness of our cause should be sufficient to prohibit.—Yours, &c.,

Agatha Russell.

Rozeldene, Hindhead, Surrey.
April 25, 1917.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—May I be allowed to thank you for your note in last week's Inquirer condemning the policy of reprisals instituted by the Government? Reprisals against Germany are useless as well as wrong. Their only possible justification would be their success, and how the killing of some civilians in Freiburg is likely to induce the Germans to alter or to curb their criminal intentions is difficult to see.

Dr. Estlin Carpenter uttered a warning note a few months ago against our forgetting the high ideals with which we entered the war, and even so "unsentimental" a person as Mr. Arnold Bennett condemns reprisals as being "a quack remedy for savagery" (see Daily News, 25th inst.). No, reprisals are wrong and useless.—Yours, &c.,

R. Maurice Rands.

30 Auckland Road,
Upper Norwood, S.E.
April 25, 1917.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

119th List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,733	5	1
J. G. F. (fifth donation) ..	1	0	0
All Souls' Church, Belfast, per the Rev. E. H. Pickering (sixteenth donation) ..	2	8	0
Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. E. A. Yates (twenty-third donation)	1	8	0
Mrs. J. du Vallon (twelfth donation)	4	0	0
Mr. Geo. Banks (twenty-seventh monthly donation)	1	0	0
Nurse Copeman (eleventh donation)	0	10	0
A. J. A., Deal (twenty-sixth donation)	0	5	0
Miss Ada Fricker, Trinidad (fifteenth donation) ..	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hall (monthly donation) ..	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry (sixth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. J. J. Rawsthorn (seventh donation)	5	0	0
	£16,753	16	1

Parcels have been received from: J. S.; Mrs. Wm. Tangye; Miss Shaen; The Misses Thomas; Mrs. A. J. Gimson; Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Miss Short; Miss E. M. Greg; The High Pavement Church

Sewing Society (per Miss M. Guilford); Maidstone Branch of the Women's League (per Miss G. B. Blackett); West Grove, Cardiff, Branch of the Women's League (per Mrs. Fox); Miss Evelegh; Platt Chapel Dorcas Society (per Miss Fryer).

WEEKLY NOTES.

Our readers will be glad to learn that Mrs. Bernard Allen, who was in Calais on the 20th, was uninjured by the bombardment to which the town was subjected on that night by German destroyers. During her visit she has been settling various matters in connection with the Hut, and has also been developing work in other directions. This week she expects to be in the neighbourhood of Paris, where she will help the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry in organising the new French hospital at Port-à-Binson, to which reference was made in The Inquirer of March 10.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 14 by 24 in. with a string run in the neck.
Helpless shirts of flannelette or flannel (not calico).
Pyjamas (urgent).
Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.
Pants, vests.
Towels of all sorts.

For the Maternity Home at Calais :—
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).
Chemises for women.
Warm shawls for babies.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

ANNUAL MEETING AT LIVERPOOL.

Those who took part in the Meetings at Liverpool of the National Conference Union for Social Service (now known as the Union for Social Service of Members of Unitarian, Free Christian, and Kindred Churches), on Wednesday, April 18, under the auspices of the local District Association, could not have returned from them without a feeling of deep thankfulness that the Union had been maintained throughout this time of national stress, and afforded such high promise of well-grounded and effective service in the future. It is hoped to arrange for similar meetings under the auspices of our District Associations throughout the country, and if efforts are as well repaid in other instances as they have been in this one, they will be worth the most devoted energy. Some forty members and friends attended the Business Meeting in the beautiful library of Ullet Road Church, and a more eagerly alert and intensely interested gathering it has never been our lot to be present at. This was due in the main to the fact that there were tabled before the meeting for its consideration two documents, one of which we believe is destined to prove historic—the 'Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction' drawn up by the Inter-Denominational Conference of Social Service Unions, so appreciatively reviewed in The Inquirer on the 14th inst., and the Union's 'Course on Social Questions,' which, we believe, and trust, will prove of real usefulness in our churches. In connection with the abundant correspondence which has reached the Union's Secretary as a result of the article referred to, it is interesting and suggestive to record that several men in training write for a copy of the Scheme, one or two evidencing in what they write how much it means to them that the Christian churches are thus co-operating together, and what new hope and encouragement it gives them to "strive on to finish the work they are in." To quote from the article in The Inquirer: "These are the splendid tasks of justice and chivalry which await us at the end of the war." Surely a scheme which can kindle such enthusiasm, and can so open out the vistas of the future, is not without relation even to the effective prosecution of this war! And those who are ministering at this time to the soul of the nation, sustaining its faith and courage and hope and charity, though they "stand and wait," are not its least faithful servants nor its least victorious warriors! We rejoice to say that this scheme was unanimously adopted in its entirety by the Annual Meeting—we trust it will be also adopted by all the Denominational Social Service Unions—thus supplying the Union with a body of fundamental principles upon which to base its work and outlining a number of urgent immediate measures of social reform to which it should bend its energies. Another matter which interested the meeting deeply was the account of the work of the Evesham Inter-Denominational Social Service Union. The Secretary of the Union was asked to write a brief account of this, to be published as a leaflet, so that action may be encouraged in other localities, and to call attention at the same time to the similar work now being done in Birmingham, Manchester, and Oxford.

The usual business was transacted, the Annual Report and Balance Sheet were adopted, and officers and committee were appointed. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant is the new President, and the retiring President, Miss Catherine Gittins, now a Vice-President, was heartily thanked for her great services, not only as President for the past two years, but for her devotion and energy in the cause from its inception. The Rev. F. H. Jones was re-elected Hon. Treasurer, and the following, in addition to the officers, were appointed an Executive Committee: Miss L. Brooks (Wilmslow), Miss Clephan (Leicester), the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson (Hyde), Miss C. Gittins (Leicester), Miss H. M. Johnson (Liverpool), the Rev. Dr. S. H. Mellone (Manchester), the Rev. Dr. S. A. Mellor (Liverpool), Mr. E. A. Smith (Oxford), and the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas (Birmingham). The name of the Union has been changed: it is henceforward to be known as the Union for Social Service of Members of Unitarian, Free Christian and Kindred Churches. It is long, but it has at least the virtue of explicitness, and we do know now where we are!

In presiding over the Annual Meeting, Miss C. Gittins called attention to a change coming over the thought of the world which is of extreme importance to our work; the change from a belief that man is moulded entirely by external circumstances, and that "reason" is a sufficient motive-power for the business of life—in a word, that "external reality is the only reality"—to a faith in spiritual values, and a conviction of the supreme importance of the "internal reality." It was this "modern sense of values" which all the movements they were connected with were striving to express. The Council for Christian Witness, which had its origin in a Sunday evening meeting at Swanwick, declared in its latest manifesto that the main root of industrial unrest is not material but spiritual, viz.: the non-recognition of the personality of the worker. The same thing was insisted upon in the 'Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction,' and it was also emphasised in the 'Course on Social Questions' just issued by the Union. It was this growing recognition of the spiritual nature of man which people meant when they talked of the revival of religion, and it was a fact full of hope for the future, for it took them back to the central principle of the Christian Gospel. This faith was the "dynamic" they needed for the work they had in hand.

The Public Meeting at night in Hope Street Church Hall, presided over by the Rev. Dr. Mellor, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. R. D. Holt, M.P., was crowded, a number having to stand. Dr. Mellor opened by giving a brief and simple account of the aim and work of the Union and of the Inter-Denominational Conference. The existence of such Unions in all the denominations of the Christian Church showed that the Christian Church as such was not altogether blind to the social problems which demanded consideration, nor altogether deaf to the social appeal. The Christian Churches were moving, and had been moving with a certain rapidity during the last few years. He called attention to the 'Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction' as representing a minimum, if not a maximum, of agreement in all the larger denominations of Christians as to desirable and necessary reforms in our social life, and, more important still, as to the underlying principles upon which, and by the inspiration of which, all such reforms should be undertaken. It had been said that to talk of and work for social reconstruction at this time, and to hold up the banner of social idealism, was to "gamble with destiny." On the contrary, the speaker thought that there was no time like the present, and that far from being a "gamble with destiny" they should regard such action as an act of faith in God. Much of the disaster, chaos, and trouble which had descended upon modern civilisation had its roots in social conditions, false social ideals, and false social valuations. Religion was the dynamic of all real social work, and it was that for which the Union stood. He believed in the eternal value of human souls and persons, in their immortality and in their final destiny. Souls were to be valued above everything else in the world. They had to revolutionise the social order so that it should approximate more and more nearly to the Kingdom of God.

The Rev. Dr. Mellone emphasised the importance of National Service as the vital need of the country not only in time of war but also in time of peace. We should have to rebuild the social life of England as London had to be rebuilt after the Great Fire. A great opportunity had then been lost because an enlightened public opinion had not grappled with a vast town-planning problem, but had left it to an ignorant and selfish private enterprise; only Wren's churches of that period remained as an enduring possession. The speaker pointed out how utterly unprepared we had been for war. He urged that we should not be unprepared for peace. What did it mean to be prepared for peace? It was to answer that question that they had met together that evening. Their failure to prepare for peace would prove their ultimate damnation. National Service in its wider conception now included things which were not directly ministrant to the organisation of military operations, but which ministered to the general life and welfare of the people. He pleaded for a further widening of the idea of National Service until every branch of the social life of the people was directed to that one end. He pointed out some of the awful ravages in the social life which the war had made, and urged the application to our social problems of the eternal Gospel, the ideals of Christ. The infinite worth of every single human soul was now no longer mere revelation; it was a scientific fact, and should be at the heart of all our plans. National Service, in the sense in which he understood it, should be the inspiration of every task from the humblest to the greatest. The child-life of the nation represented the lines of communication between the England of to-day and the England that was to be. All that communications meant to the armies in the field, and infinitely more, that young life meant to the England that was to be. Other empires had been buried in the sands, and ours, too, would be unless we built it on the enduring realities.

The Rev. Dr. Philip H. Wicksteed inquired what was the relation between the essential life of a church and the social problems churches should seek to solve, the social sores they should seek to heal. He defined a church as being essentially a communion, a fellowship for the expression, discipline, and enlightening of the sense of spiritual values: for praise, prayer, and edification. What had the essential and eternal idea of a church to do with social service? He called special attention to the stated object of the Union: "To inspire social service with the religious spirit, and to direct the religious spirit toward social service," describing it as an admirable and wonderful statement. It was obvious that the primary business of the churches as such was with the individual character, ideals, aspirations, self-discipline, and self-realisation. It was from that end that they must approach all questions of the organisation of the social life. But the churches, he thought, had been forced by a clearer perception of the realities of life to understand that if they were to look after the expression and the discipline and enlightening of the spiritual lives and of the sense of spiritual values of their own members, they must also strive to get themselves into some intelligible relation with the great impersonal forces which dominated so much of life. We were all members not only of churches but of industrial, civic, national, and international associations primarily concerned with external and institutional relations and organisations. These two aspects of life thus distinguished should not, however, be really separated, and the various Christian Social Service Unions were an expression of a growing sense of their inter-relation. This was but an expression of a marked tendency in contemporary thought and feeling as contrasted with that of, say, fifty years ago, the growing sense that lines which we once thought could be sharply drawn seemed now to present themselves rather as related tissues of an organism, or as colours that passed into each other in a pattern. The churches had awakened to the sense of collective wrongs for which no individual was responsible, and there was a growing sense that there were things they could not bring home the responsibility for to any one person, because they arose incidentally, not directly, from people being intent on other things and not heeding or caring sufficiently about these. But it was all of them who had to heed them, and, with deliberate attempt, to deal with them. The conscience of churches had been formerly directed to defined institutions, relations or actions, such as slavery, oppression of native races, or the infamous opium traffic. A new awakening was demanded to the more penetrating and less deliberately committed wrongs of the internal industrial organisation on which our civilisation rests. It was extremely important to understand aright the machinery we criticised and wished to improve. The influence of the churches was needed in renovating personal ideals and in watching and supplementing industrial organisations. One thing, at least, the war had taught us. Was it possible that we should ever hear again that some great and vastly important purpose could not be achieved because we could not afford it? If they cared enough about anything that was of real social value, money enough could be obtained for it. The first thing to do was to care enough; to care enough, e.g., as they now cared for maintaining their national existence and all it stood for. If the Christian Churches could inspire 1 per cent of the zeal for social demand which had been felt for the waging of the war, there would be no lack of money and no unemployment. The Church in the large sense was not only one of the sources but the only source of the inspiration and aspiration which would furnish the driving-force if their intelligence could perceive aright the direction in which that force should drive.

H. H. J.

(Copies of the Annual Report, Scheme of Christian Social Reconstruction and Course on Social Questions will be sent free on receipt of a post card by the Rev. H. H. Johnson, Secretary of the Union for Social Service, The Orchards, Croft Road, Evesham.)

THE ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.

The Annual Meeting of the Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society was held on Tuesday, April 24, at the Conference Room, 9 Tothill Street, Westminster, Sir Victor Buxton, President, in the chair. The meeting was of special interest as it is evident that not only have the activities of the society during the past year been carried on with admirable zeal and some excellent results, but great opportunities and some very hard work undoubtedly lie before it when the time for considering peace terms is reached. The future of the native races will be vitally involved in the international agreements then formulated, and there are also grave possibilities affecting their welfare arising out of the proposals for the development of the resources of the Empire which are being brought prominently before the public at the present time. The society has asked the Government that within a definite period after peace has been declared an International Congress shall be called to consider the problems affecting the native races, and to initiate international action for the protection of their rights and welfare, and although Viscount Grey (then Secretary of State) did not think it possible to receive a deputation on the subject at the time, he promised careful consideration to any memorandum submitted. Accordingly a memorial was drawn up which was signed on behalf of the newly established committees in Scotland, as well as by the Society's officers, and an assurance of general sympathy in the proposals outlined has been received from the Anti-Slavery Societies of France and Italy, the latter society promising to co-operate in the endeavour to secure the calling of an International Conference at the proper time.

The Report deals with the action of the society in regard to the conclusions of the Commission appointed by the South African Natives Land Act of 1913, the committee having passed a resolution expressing general approval of the fundamental principle of a separation of areas for the acquisition of exclusive interests in land by natives and Europeans respectively, while resolving to press for such amendments as might remove the apprehensions of the natives and mitigate their hardships; the momentous announcement of the Government that the system of indentured labour from India to the Colonies is to be abolished within a period of five years; the measures taken for ensuring the comfort and well-being of the native labourers from Africa working in France behind the lines; the memorial addressed by the society to the Neutral Powers of Europe and to the United States on the subject of the German deportations from Belgium and Northern France; and the grave menace to native interests throughout the British Dominions and Dependencies arising from the expressed aims of the Empire Resources Development Committee.

The President, in moving the adoption of the Report, reviewed the past year's work, and gave the satisfactory information that the society had been well supported, and that they were nearer than they had ever been before to realising the ideal of making the regular income balance expenditure. Among other causes for satisfaction he mentioned that the memorial presented to the Neutral Powers on the subject of the deportations in Belgium and France had been well received, and was not unwelcome to the Government. It had had a very wide circulation among the neutral countries, and they might hope that it had not been without effect even on the public opinion of Germany.

Lord Henry Bentinck, Chairman of Committee, expressed strong opposition to the policy of the Empire Resources Development Committee, which, in the opinion of the society, contains "every one of the vicious principles of the old Congo régime—State exploitation, monopoly of vegetable products, and the diversion of revenue from the colony, which, if carried out, cannot fail to reduce the native to servitude." In his opinion the question which stood out above all other questions was the possibility of establishing a perpetual peace of the world after the war on the basis of a free federation of communities, but that, he thought, was not possible with a ring fence round the British Empire. Were the natives of South Africa, he asked, to be treated as producers or wage-earners? Were they to be confirmed in their rights and privileges, encouraged to become industrious citizens by education and by instruction in all those arts of civilisation which would tend to increase their wants and so make them industrious members of their community, or were they to be dispossessed of their property and regarded as mere labourers? There was, he was sorry to say, a movement on foot in this country to take away from the natives the rights which had been conferred upon them, and to depart from the honourable principles upon which the British Empire was founded, namely, that the Government should exist for the good of the governed.

Mr. J. H. Harris pointed out that the President of the Rhodesian Chartered Company, which claimed the whole of the land of Rhodesia as the property of the shareholders of that Company, and the Chairman of the Empire Resources Development Committee were one and the same, and that the main principles of the Rhodesian Chartered Company were found in the programme of the committee.

Mr. E. D. Morel read some extracts from the literature published by the Committee, which bore out his statement that the society is faced with the biggest task it has ever tackled in opposing the principles therein laid down. The State was to be in partnership with a financial corporation for the exploitation of the native races, and the profits derived from this huge undertaking were to help to pay the cost of the war and to enrich investors of capital. All the past Colonial tragedies of the world had their root in that system, and if it was carried out, backed as it was by the most powerful interests, and making an insidious appeal to the working classes as a means of paying for the war, it would involve the repudiation of hundreds of agreements and treaties and their conversion into "scraps of paper."

Sir Herbert Sloley, a well-known South African administrator, who has lately visited the native labour camps in France, gave a most satisfactory account of the conditions prevailing there, and his words had all the more weight as he was formerly, on his own statement, opposed to the introduction of native labour into Europe. In spite of the exceptionally severe winter, the health of these men from warm climates has been remarkably good, and the hospitals attached to the camps are nearly empty. The labourers have good clothing, a plentiful food supply, and comfortable sleeping accommodation, and the officers, all of whom are South Africans with a thorough knowledge of native character, are on the best of terms with their men. Evening schools have been started, new schemes are being organised with a view to providing occupations and amusements for the long, light evenings, and facilities are given to chaplains, and others interested in the social, moral, and religious well-being of the battalions for their important work.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS.

The Rev. Henry Gow has in the press twelve sermons selected from those preached by him during the last year or two at Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, or Manchester College, Oxford. The book will be published by the Lindsey Press under the title of 'Out of the Heart of the Storm, and Other Sermons.' It is hoped that the volume will be ready before Whitsuntide.

The Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society will be published in the course of a week or two. Mr. Ronald P. Jones, M.A., has designed a special cover for the Transactions. The editor, the Rev. W. H. Burgess, contributes an informing introductory article on 'Work in the Field of Unitarian History.'

With the exception of the Chairman, Dr. Carpenter, the speakers at the Public Meeting on Wednesday evening, May 30, are all new to the Essex Hall platform. Our own younger ministers will this year be represented by Mr. Anderton and Dr. Rattray. The Master of Balliol takes a large and active interest in public affairs, and an address by him on the 'Reorganisation of the Religious Life of the Country' is sure to prove a helpful and inspiring utterance.

The excellent and wholesome practice of inviting a woman to speak at the most largely attended meeting of the week will again be followed. This year the speaker will be Prof. Caroline Spurgeon, who holds the Doctor's Degree of the University of Paris; she is Professor of English Literature, University of London—Bedford College, where she lectures, being a constituent part of the University. Miss Spurgeon is an attractive and interesting speaker; and in dealing with the 'Reorganisation of the Religious Life of the Country' she will speak from an independent and personal point of view.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Birmingham. — The Rev. Arnold H. Lewis, of Pendleton, has accepted the pastorate of Waverley Road Church, Small Heath, and expects to begin his ministry there after Whitsuntide.

Blackpool: South Shore.—The congregation has suffered a grievous loss in the sudden and unexpected death of Mrs. Lucy Bowles, wife of Mr. J. J. Bowles. The Rev. B. C. Constable officiated at the funeral on April 18, and paid a high tribute to her memory. She was a most useful and helpful member of the church, and won the esteem and affection of all by her gentle ways, and her kindliness to everybody. Her loss will be irreparable.

Bolton and District Sunday School Union.—The spring conference of the Bolton and District Unitarian Sunday School Union was held at Hindley on Saturday, April 21. At the evening meeting Mr. Walter Redfern, of Atherton, occupied the chair, and an address was given by the Rev. J. Jeremy, of St. Paul's Congregational Church, Hindley, on his experiences whilst ministering to the troops last summer on the Somme front. He related many details showing how the Y.M.C.A. and other huts close behind the fighting line supply the various bodily and intellectual needs of the men, and how even a cup of tea has a spiritual value to weary men. He pointed out that in the great majority of cases the effect upon the men's mind when first entering the danger zone, where they might meet death any moment, was to bring a vision of home and all that home meant, and the fear of death was secondary. He spoke with pride of the fine congregations it was possible to obtain for religious worship up the line, and what a revelation it was to see men at their devotions and to hear their thoughtful, reverent, and splendid singing. At the base it was most difficult to get men to attend service. His conclusions as to the effect of this work upon the soldiers may be summarised according to the various types of men. The men who previously attended churches have had their experience deepened, and their religious belief is a nobler thing. They will come back with new ideas about religion, and they will want us to apply our Christianity more than we have done before, and to show that we really believe the religious truths we profess to possess. They will require us to show a daring and heroic spirit in our religion, and to carry the principles into the various spheres of life. Many of the men who were out of touch with the Church and critical of all savouring of Christianity will become less critical, and whilst their entry into the Church may be delayed, they have received another ideal. A very great number will be just as indifferent to religion as before the war, the latter having done nothing to better their religious thoughts or outlook. He regretted to say that a great number would come back in a worse form, having succumbed to the many temptations of a military and Continental life. He described as sheer humbug the statement of Mr. Arthur Henderson that men would meet no new temptations in joining the Army. There was very little real drunkenness, but men had come into touch with the worldly side of life such as they had never seen at home, and great numbers had succumbed. Although he saw nothing like a revival or new movement towards religion, the thought of great hope lay with the men who had gone from our churches and schools.

London Sunday School Society.—The twenty-second Annual Musical Festival was held at Essex Hall on Saturday, April 21, presided over by the President, Mr. Harold Titford. There were competitions among four junior choirs and six senior choirs, the former for the possession of the Society's shield and the latter for the banner. In the junior section, the competitors were Ilford, Mansford Street (Bethnal Green), Newington Green, and Bell Street. The adjudicator, Mr. W. Seemer Betts, chose as a test piece 'Baby's Asleep,' and each choir also sang a piece of its own selection. The competition was very keen, and there was a difference of only one or two marks between the various choirs when arranged in order of merit. The shield was awarded to Newington Green (Conductress, Miss L. Whitbread) with 149 marks, and the second place to Bell Street (Conductress, Miss E. Harris), with 140 marks. This latter choir was last year's winner. In the senior section, the selected piece was 'The Song of the Summer Wind,' and each choir again selected its own piece. The choirs competing were Newington Green, Mansford Street, Highgate, Stratford, Dingley Place, and Ilford. There was again keen competition, and out of a total of 200 marks there was a difference of 40 between the first and the last choir. Highgate (Conductress, Miss V. G. Withall) was awarded first place and the banner, with 186 marks, and Stratford (Conductress, Miss Williams) second place with 169 marks. A concert, consisting of items contributed from various schools, was held during the evening.

North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The Annual Conversazione was held at Oldham on Saturday last, and, taking into consideration the present difficulties of travelling, was very well attended, about 130 persons being present at tea from the various schools of the Union. A meeting of the Committee for the transaction of business was held in the afternoon, the President, the Rev. A. Thornhill, taking the chair at this and at the evening meeting. At the latter, the President in his address dealt with the Elder Scholar problem, urging that steps should be taken to foster an earlier entry into Church fellowship. The following resolution was enthusiastically passed on the motion of the President, seconded by Mr. A. Slater (hon. secretary), and supported by Mr. R. Firth: "The members of the North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union, meeting on the 50th Anniversary of his first sermon as minister of Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., desire to heartily congratulate him and Mrs. Dowson on the recent celebration of their Golden Wedding, and the completion of fifty years devoted service as minister of Hyde Chapel and Sunday school. They gratefully recall the intense and unfailing interest always taken by Mr. and Mrs. Dowson in the Sunday schools of the Union, of which Mr. Dowson acted as President for twenty-five years, and of which Mrs. Dowson has also been President. They sincerely hope that for many years the members of the Union may have the pleasure of welcoming them at the meetings of the Union, at so many of which they have been a source of inspiration and power." The President offered a hearty welcome to Mrs. Atack, who was present as representative of the Manchester District Sunday School Association, and who delivered an interesting address, speaking more particularly to the young women and girls in our schools. During the evening a programme of songs and recitations was given by the Oldham friends, and at the close hearty votes of thanks were given to the Oldham friends, to Mrs. Atack, and the chairman.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS

President Wilson's Historic Speech to Congress.

President Wilson's speech to Congress, declaring war on Germany, has been reprinted, in response to numerous requests, in red and black letter, with a facsimile of the President's signature and his portrait on the cover, and it is being sold on behalf of the British Committee for the Celebration of the Centenary of Peace between Great Britain and the United States of America. The organisation is allied with several committees in the United States and Canada, and the inauguration of memorials under its auspices will be carried out after the war. Orders should be sent to the Secretary of the British Committee, 1 Central Buildings, Tothill Street, Westminster, S.W.1.

The Author of Esperanto.

Dr. Ludwig Zamenhof, the inventor of Esperanto, who has just died at Warsaw at the comparatively early age of 58, was a Russian, an oculist by profession, and the son of a schoolmaster of Jewish race, who began life at Bialystok—a place where Russian Polish, German, and Yiddish are everyday languages. It is said that he could read and write well at the age of 4, and during his schooldays at Warsaw social problems, especially those concerned with race and nationality, greatly interested him. The unfriendliness between the men of different nationalities which he so often witnessed made a great impression upon him, and he came to believe that the adoption of a language common to them all might be one of the most effectual means of breaking down the barriers between them. At first he thought it might be Yiddish, or a revival of Latin or Greek, but finally he evolved eclectically the auxiliary language now known as Esperanto, and in spite of the adverse counsels of his friends, who gave the sort of advice with which all "impractical idealists" are familiar, he managed to publish his first textbook in 1887, when he was still quite a young man. He took the pseudonym "Dr. Esperanto"—"esperanto" meaning "one who hopes," and that is how the name which is now so well known came to be given to the new international language. The story of the progress of the Esperanto movement is very interesting, and it is satisfactory to know that Dr. Zamenhof reaped the fruit of his labours, and was the recipient, during the later years of his life, of many favours and distinctions at the hands of royalty, municipalities, and educationalists. The little Russian doctor was a singularly modest man with charming manners, and his industry was prodigious.

The Growth of Prohibition.

During the past three months some remarkable victories for Prohibition have been secured, which are recorded in the current International Record. The Government of Denmark, after prohibiting the use of Danish corn and potatoes in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors, have now prohibited the liquor traffic throughout the whole country in order to preserve the food of the people In France and Norway the manufacture and sale of all spirits are now prohibited, and the manufacture of other intoxicants has been greatly reduced. Similar action is reported from Germany, Austria, and other countries. The United States is forging ahead. Congress has passed a number of most important measures against the liquor traffic, one of which enacts prohibition for the District of Columbia, including the Capital city of Washington. Measures have also been taken to protect Prohibition States from the shipment of liquor from Licence States, and from the entry, through the U.S. mails, of all liquor advertising matter, in newspapers, circulars, &c. Utah, Indiana, and Wyoming have adopted Statutory Prohibition, thus making twenty-six Prohibition States, and six or eight other States have decided to take a referendum at the next election on State-wide Prohibition. In addition to this, the members of both Houses of the new Congress are stated to be largely in favour of submitting the question of a National Prohibition Amendment to the several States.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth, S.O.—PAYING GUESTS received.—Particulars from Miss Smith. Telegrams: The Heugh, Askrigg, S.O.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, Thoralby, Aysgarth, S.O.—TO LET, Furnished, 4 bedrooms, 2 sitting-rooms, kitchen, &c.

LADIES' HANDKERCHIEFS. Slightly imperfect, hemstitched Irish Linen. Fine quality. About 13½ ins. Six for 3*s.* 3*d.*; bundle of twelve, 6*s.* 3d. (postage 4*d.*). Write now for free Bargain List.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT. Any condition. 6*d.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite; 2*s.* on silver; 3*s.* on gold; 8*s.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted, teeth returned post free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Bankers: Parrs.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return. —I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel. 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 6*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, April 28, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3905. New Series, No. 1008.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WHIT-WEEK MEETINGS, 1917.

President: Rev. Dr. CARPENTER.

Tuesday Evening, May 29.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE.

Essex Church, Notting Hill Gate, 7.30.
Devotional Service:
Rev. C. M. Wright, M.A.
Preacher: Rev. W. H. Drummond, B.A.

Collection for Funds of the Association.

Wednesday Morning, May 30.

ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, 11 A.M.
The Report; Election of Officers and Committee; Resolutions and other Business.
The President, Dr. Carpenter, in the Chair.

Wednesday Evening, May 30.

PUBLIC MEETING.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, 7 P.M.
Addresses on
'The Need and the Opportunity for the Reorganization of the Religious Life of the Country.'
Rev. Dr. Carpenter in the Chair.
Speakers: The Master of Balliol (A. L. Smith, Esq., M.A.), Prof. Caroline Spurgeon, Doc. Univ. Paris (Bedford College, University of London), Rev. Neander Anderton, B.A. (Monton), Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D. (Hindley).

Thursday Evening, May 31.

CONVERSAZIONE.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, 8 P.M.
The President will receive from 8 to 8.30.
Tea and Coffee, Small Hall, from 8.30.
Tickets 1/- each, may be had at the Book Room.

London:
ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.2.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May.

6. Rev. FREDERICK HANKINSON, of Kentish Town.
13. Rev. A. W. FOX, M.A., of Todmorden.
20. Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, of Tenterden.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

THE EIGHTY-SECOND ANNUAL MEETING will be held at LINDSEY HALL, THE MALL, KENSINGTON (nearest station Notting Hill Gate), on TUESDAY, MAY 8, at 8 o'clock.

Chairman: Mr. Charles Martineau. Dr. Philip Wicksteed, Mrs. Wallace Bruce, Mrs. Sydney Martineau, the Rev. H. Gow, and Mr. Philip Roscoe will address the Meeting.

FRANK K. FREESTON,
Hon Sec.

Tea and Coffee at 7.30.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING at ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, on MONDAY, MAY 14, 1917. Speakers: The President, Dr. C. HERBERT-SMITH, Mrs. SYDNEY MARTINEAU, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P., Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, and others.

Your presence and support is cordially invited.

7 p.m. Tea. 7.30 Meeting.

ALAN FORBES, Acting Secretary.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

The MANAGERS meet annually in October for the purpose of making grants. APPLICATIONS must, however, be in hand NOT LATER than MONDAY, JUNE 4, and must be on a form to be obtained from the Secretary, CHAS. E. MARSHALL, 38 Barton Arcade, Manchester.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.—LECTURES IN RHETORIC will be delivered by Prof. FOSTER WATSON, D.Lit., M.A. Subject, 'Colonial Literature.'

Tues., May 8. Earliest Colonial Literature.
Wed., May 9. Growth of Colonial Literature.
Thurs., May 10. Colonial Character-Study.
Fri., May 11. Colonial and Imperial Literature.

The Lectures are free, and begin at 6 P.M.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:

H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, May 6.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. W. Copeland Bowie; 7, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. Begg.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. B. Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Wood.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. D. Delta Evans; 7, Rev. J. Vint Laughland.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Miss Maud M. Burtt.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. Frank G. Fincham.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. P. Rosling; 6.30, Miss Theodora Wilson Wilson.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Frederick Hankinson.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Cambridge, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. Cottier,

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45, Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Lieut.-Col. C. Seymour Bullock.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. Lee.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Stephens.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Douglas Walmsley, B.A.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. W. H. Lambelle.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. H. Gow.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11, Miss L. G. Ackroyd.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATHS.

Hirsch.—On April 24, killed in action, Captain D. Philip Hirsch, Yorkshire Regiment, elder son of Harry and Edith Hirsch, of The Grove, Westwood, Leeds.

Isaacs.—On April 26, at Rosemount, Branksome Park, Bournemouth, Charles Isaacs, J.P., aged 74 years.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Rev. J. W. BISHOP, late of Manchester and Preston, to OAK BANK, BEACH ROAD, OLD COLWYN. Will be open for occasional Pulpit supply.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—Rev. D. DAVIS, 32 Windermere Road, Muswell Hill, London, N.10.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

WANTED, by May 22, useful MOTHERS' HELP for one little girl, aged five. Must be healthy and ready to assist in light house duties.—Apply first by letter to E. M. C., Fernwood, North Hill, Highgate, N.6.

LADY (Shropshire, husband in France) wishes to share her home with another lady or two friends. Every convenience. Terms moderate. Highest references. Lovely country,—Y., Inquirer Office, 13 Bream's Buildings. London, E.C.4.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, Cannon Street, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

Directors.

Chairman—Sir Alexander Waldemar Lawrence, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman—F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I.

Leslie T. Burnett. | Miss Cecil Gradwell

Humphrey G. Russell.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3, endorsed "Inquirer."

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 207
WOMAN AND THE CHURCH 209
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . . 210
THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD: II. . . . 210
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 212
PRACTICAL STUDIES FOR CHURCHES . . 212
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The London Domestic Mission . . . 212
Ruthless Zeal 213
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
Mr. Charles Isaacs, J.P. 213
Capt. Colin Turner Young 213
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 213
East Cheshire Christian Union . . . 214
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 215

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

DR. HELFERICH, addressing the Reichstag, has declared that these are "the decisive weeks" of the war. Of course he put a good face on it, but we know enough by this time to discount all boastings on one side or the other. The vital point is whether we have now really approached the supreme crisis of this struggle. By all the signs that we can discern, it would appear so. The extreme violence of the fighting on the Western front, the feverish energy thrown into the submarine attack on our commerce, and the repeated urgency of the appeals to their people by German leaders to hold out but a little while longer, for all will soon be over and victory secured, combine with many other tokens, less obvious but no less significant, to indicate that the hour is probably close upon us when the fate, not of empires only, but of mankind's future, will be decided. We do well to brace all our powers to meet such an hour as becomes a manly people. When the soldiers line up on a mined ship, steadfast, even cheery, we praise them as heroes. Something of heroism is now called for, in our daily life and bearing. Above and through all our work and civil arrangements and tireless invention, a valorous mood becomes us all, the mood that makes of effort, however strenuous, a welcome thing, that accepts privation as but a small price to pay compared with the aim in view, and that bears bravely and submissively, if still with sorrow unspeakable, the sacrificial blows that fall upon the heart.

* * *

MEANWHILE, as a refreshing example of a confidence that advancing years have, happily, no power to quench, we may quote here Lord Channing's note to the newspapers this week:—

> The motto of all patriots of all parties to-day should be: Unity, toleration, an open mind, unshakable faith, unhesitating loyalty, devotion, endurance. We now have all America, North and South, united from Pole to Pole, whole-heartedly resolved that the world shall win this world-war for liberty and civilisation. That should dispel fretful doubts here and everywhere. We shall win through on submarines. We shall win through on food. We shall win through on Ireland. This is no time for disintegrating criticism. It is a time for every brain and will to help.

* * *

WORDS also from Dr. William Ellery Channing, great-uncle of Lord Channing, come to mind; we have little doubt they have already been recalled by our American brethren; they are well worth recalling by us all:—

> If, however, after long, forbearing, and unavailing applications to justice and humanity, the friends of freedom should be summoned, by the voice of God within, and by His providence abroad, to vindicate their rights with other arms, to do a sterner work, to repel despotic force by force, may they not forget, even in this hour of provocation, the spirit which their high calling demands. Let them take the sword with awe, as those on whom a holy function is devolved. Let them regard themselves as ministers and delegates of Him whose dearest attribute is mercy. Let them not stain their sacred cause by one cruel deed, by the infliction of one needless pang, by shedding without cause one drop of human blood.

* * *

HIS MAJESTY THE KING has issued an appeal, stately, but urgent, calling upon all faithful and loving subjects to restrict themselves voluntarily in the amount of their daily grain food; and we are assured on the highest authority that, in this matter, King George is already practising personally the restriction for which he asks. By way of reaching the attention of the widest possible number of his subjects he has taken the step, unprecedented we believe, of directing that this royal proclamation be read in all churches and chapels in his kingdom on the four ensuing Sundays. The effect of such iteration may perhaps be a little trying—to those who attend service every Sunday; but, seeing that apparently there still exists a vast amount of ignorance as to the gravity of the situation and the need for rigid self-control, we cannot doubt there will be a ready compliance with this unusual royal request, and a diligent diffusion after the services of this part, at least, of what has been said at them.

* * *

THERE were sure to be mistakes in the attempts made to organise the supply and distribution of food in this country; it is certainly no use fretting about them. Most of us, we suppose, could relate experiences and observations illustrative of the odd results of some of these efforts. Unfortunately, the comic element is far from the only one. Our various controllers should really be sufficiently educated by now in regard to the main factors in the problem which has elicited such various experiments, and all decent citizens should be willing to comply with duly considered regulations made in the national interest. A good many of us, evidently, are largely incapable of thinking out the matter for ourselves, or we have not the facts ; the least we can do is to abstain from hindering progress by a spirit of foolish levity. Perhaps some of our readers have heard more than enough on "food economy" to last them to the end of the war, however distant it may be ; but it is certain that a large proportion of our people have much to learn on the subject, and it is the duty of those who know to enlighten those who are ignorant.

* * *

As a step, belated enough some of us think, toward a sane use of our resources, the Government has just ruled out race meetings, and put the race-horses on rations. Of course, there are people who will suffer by the change ; and one may regret the fate of Newmarket without repressing a feeling of satisfaction that raucous hosts of betting men will no longer invade the railway stations, or flaunt defiance of the petrol restrictions, on their way to the sports by which alone, it is said, the breed and stamina of the noble animal can be secured in this country. Oats being thus dealt with, what about barley ? Will brewers and distillers manage still to hold their entrenched position against the arguments, not of mere fanatics and faddists, but of the matter-of-fact economists ? It is, no doubt, a somewhat puerile and mischievous thing to say, as we hear now and again : "When the Government stop the waste on beer and whisky, I shall believe there is reason to economise ; till then I shall have everything I can get as usual." Silly as we may deem that sort of thing, is not the silliness of a "control" that still permits so much perversion of food material vastly greater ?

* * *

In this connection, we have been asked to call special attention to the "London Rally" in support of the "Strength of Britain Movement," the immediate object of which is to demand war-time prohibition of alcoholic drinks. A series of meetings, beginning May 3 and ending May 19, has been arranged to be held in different parts of the metropolis, the concluding meeting to be at the Albert Hall, when speakers so diverse as the Bishop of London and Mr. Harry Lauder will support the appeal for this measure of national self-defence. Full particulars as to dates and places of meeting may be obtained from the Secretary, Room 27A, 15 and 16 Farringdon Street, E.C. 4, where also tickets, in any numbers, can be had for the Albert Hall meeting. We heartily commend this agitation to the support of all who are convinced that the adoption of a policy which has been so beneficial and honourable to our ally, Russia, is overdue at home. Those who are not yet convinced, even at this crisis in the food problem, had better send to the office indicated for its leaflet, 'The Greatest of the Three.'

* * *

The visit of Dr. A. C. Benson to the City Temple was a notable incident in the enterprising and broad-minded interim programme arranged for the congregation until the arrival (for Whit Sunday) of the minister-elect, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Fort Newton. The Christian Commonwealth states that people had to be turned away for want of room last Sunday morning. Those who are familiar with Dr. Benson's books—and who is not ?—will hardly need to be told that his theme was the strengthening of the inner life and its persistence under many forms, or that, in his own quiet way, he spoke comfortably to disturbed souls. He declared his conviction that, far from the war having demonstrated the weakness of religion, it had proved what an immense amount of religion there is among us—duty, self-sacrifice, kindness—only that we do not recognise it as religion.

* * *

On the one hand, said Dr. Benson, we have men mournfully clinging to old elaborate forms of faith, and saying sadly that the life seems to have departed from them, and that they are little regarded ; on the other hand we have men acting and living eagerly by what is true Christian principle, and yet disclaiming the name of Christians, or only claiming it shamefacedly. "Yet what matters is the thing and not the name ; and the great movement of English hearts, here and across the sea, is to resist unrighteousness, and to sacrifice everything, comfort, health, and life itself, in that one cause. If that is not Christianity, I do not know where it is to be found."

* * *

India, South Africa, and Newfoundland were ceremonially received by London in the persons of distinguished representatives on Tuesday, when the freedom of the City was conferred upon them. Gratifying and reassuring as it may be to hear from such representatives expressions of cordial adhesion to the Mother Country in her present great struggle, the important thing is always to recognise and enforce the principles by which, and by which alone, such loyalty has been won and is to be retained. The Maharajah of Bikanir in an eloquent speech, after referring to the common dangers, efforts, and sacrifices shared in the war by India and Great Britain, repudiated the view, once generally expressed, that India was "held by the sword." "We should all be sorry to hold that view," he said. "No ; British rule in India rests on much firmer foundations than force. It is based on principles of justice and equity, humanity and fair play."

* * *

Lieut.-General Smuts, the celebrated South African officer, for whom, it is said, a high military post is now waiting in the very thick of the conflict, referred to the progress already made in South Africa under General Botha towards building up a new nation in that land, freed from the difficulties and antagonisms of the past. He said no doubt the enemy, in forming his plans, calculated on the aversion of the great daughter nations of the Empire to be mixed up with the feuds and disputes of ancient Europe. But they had without hesitation come forward, not simply to help the Mother Country, but to defend the cause of liberty throughout the world. He had perfect confidence in the victory of that cause, though weeks and months of difficulty and anxiety might yet be before us. Even Germany herself, he believed, would "have to be redeemed in this great struggle....He had seen freedom go under, but he had also seen it rise again. He had seen a small and beaten people like his own rise and fight for the same freedom again ; but no longer for themselves alone, but for the whole of the races of the world. He hoped freedom would be the ruling light which would guide us to victory ahead."

* * *

At the meeting of Convocation this week, the Archbishop of Canterbury said the number of clergy who had been sent to do service of a moral and religious kind in the forces and other national services was over five thousand. Many had volunteered also for various industrial posts, thus liberating men for the army. With regard to the question of "reprisals," the House set aside the plea of the Bishop of Exeter, who, while disapproving of reprisals on non-combatants —"they were a horrible and detestable remedy"—was "loth to hamper the Government in the matter." After a brief discussion it was decided, on the motion of the Bishop of Ely, to reaffirm solemnly the resolution passed over a year ago, expressing the conviction that the adoption of reprisals as a mode of retaliation, even for barbarous outrages, would permanently lower the standard of honourable conduct between nation and nation. Good !—but, indeed, what other could decent men say ?

WOMAN AND THE CHURCH.

It is surely an amazing thing that at the very moment when women were giving incontestable proof of their capacity for full citizenship and for an equal share in the realm of Government as well as in the realm of the home, the women members of the Church of England should have received a decided rebuff from our ecclesiastical authorities. The "National Mission of Repentance and Hope," started with a good deal of parade and much advertising, seemed a movement in which women might exercise considerable influence. Services and meetings addressed by men for men only were plentifully arranged. But there are many subjects which specially touch the life of women demanding the most serious attention. It was therefore arranged that there should be services and meetings addressed by women and for women only. But not in church—not in a consecrated building! Yet on all hands it is confessed that women are the backbone of the Church, its most loyal disciples, its most active workers, its most generous supporters. And the remarkable gifts of speech and organisation which women in recent years have developed pointed them out as eminently fitted to take a leading part in a religious crusade. Still, not in church, not in a consecrated building. At the mere suggestion an outcry and hubbub of angry protest filled the air. Women speak in church! How unscriptural, how disorderly, how unheard of! St. Paul was brought in by a section of the clergy to rout the poor bishops who had already given their sanction to the proposals. The bishops meekly succumbed to the clamour and offered a compromise. Yes, women might speak to women even in the parish church, but not from the pulpit, nor the lectern, nor the chancel, nor the chancel steps! In some dark corner of one of the transepts, or away near the door, a woman might be allowed to address her sisters, but the specially sacred places of the church must be preserved for man. Needless to say, many women fully qualified for this service regarded the offer as an insult. When one thinks of Mrs. Creighton, or Mrs. Humphrey Ward, or Miss Maude Royden, or Miss Underhill, and many other equally cultured women, excluded from places where raw young curates unblushingly exhibit their rawness every Sunday, one can understand the smile of derision on the outsider's face, and the feeling of pain and dismay in the heart of many a well-wisher, both within and without her borders.

Moved by some such feeling Canon Streeter and Miss Picton-Turbervill have joined in the publication of a little book of essays entitled 'Woman and the Church,'* in which they plead for a reconsideration of the position of women in the Church, and especially for their admission to a recognised and active share in its preaching and pastoral work. The book consists of four essays, two by each writer, and is an ably conducted argument and plea for a much needed enlargement of the ministerial office. The writers are extremely moderate in their proposals. For the present, at any rate, they exclude any idea of admitting women to the priesthood. They do not even ask that women should be ordained as deacons. The chancel is still

> A little garden walled around
> Chosen and peculiar ground.

It is the pulpit alone which is to be opened to women—and then only to women duly licensed to preach by a bishop. The Church is asked, in a Foreword by the Bishop of Durham, to give this modest claim "respectful attention." Episcopal caution could scarcely go farther. Yet when we give a glance backward it would seem that this is not such a strange innovation as at first appears. The Church has had its distinguished abbesses, like St. Hilda of Whitby and St. Juliana of Norwich; its distinguished revivalists and statesmen, like St. Teresa and Catherine of Sienna. In England, two of our religious societies have enriched to no small extent the spiritual life of the whole community by the preaching of women. In the Society of Friends women have from the first taken an equal share with men in religious exhortation. The Salvation Army owes its birth very largely to the spiritual fervour and gifts of speech of a remarkable woman, Catherine Booth; its ministry has been all along very largely that of women. At this time of day he would be a bold man who held that the spirit of God is given according to the sex of the recipient. This is not a question of women's "rights." Men and women do not preach the Gospel to vindicate their personal rights. "It is rather," writes Canon Streeter, "whether the fullness and many-sidedness of the Christian message is ever likely to be adequately presented to the world by a Church in which women are excluded from pastoral and preaching activity." It is an unfortunate sign of the times that women with gifts of service which might be devoted to realising great ideals find no place for the exercise of their gifts within the Church. Our educated young women are drifting away from the Church even as their brothers left it. They are drawn away from the Church not only for reasons which they share with their brothers, but by a further reason, i.e., that the exclusion of women from the higher offices of the Church implies that the personality of woman is a thing of inferior value to that of man. The younger women of gifts and education are not content to be the hewers of wood and drawers of water for the clergy as were their grandmothers. Some of them feel the fire in their bones, and if their gift is one of speech they will leave a Church which denies them a sphere. The Church cannot afford to silence any who have the gift of persuasive speech. Were an order of women preachers established the pulpit would certainly be strengthened. Many of the men who occupy it now are quite destitute of the necessary gift for preaching. They may be priests; they are certainly not prophets. The feebleness of the pulpit is not only a byword, it is often beneath contempt. A man is not ordained because he has for one of his qualifications preaching power. But in a distinct "preaching order," as advocated by Canon Streeter, preaching power will be an absolute essential. So the plea for opening the pulpit to women is really for the sake of the Church and what the Church is losing of genius, power, inspiration, by woman's exclusion, since the Church needs her for the fullness of its message.

How far all this applies to our own little fellowship of churches we need not now discuss. There is certainly a good deal of prejudice among us on this matter, although we have never closed the pulpit door against women. But when on two or three occasions we have ventured to say "Come in," it has been with a certain reluctance and hesitation. It has been felt, rightly or wrongly, that a woman as the minister of a given church is placed in a difficult position, a position requiring gifts of quite a different order from that of preaching. What would seem desirable is a "preaching order" for women, somewhat on the lines suggested by Canon Streeter, who should not be planted down as ministers of churches but should be set apart by the whole community of churches wherever their special gifts can best be of service. The ministry of men alone has not been so conspicuously successful as to claim no need of reinforcement. Nor as Free Churches are we so wedded to past practices and methods as to turn a deaf ear to the new opportunities and the new gifts of service of a new time. We are free to make experiments, and it would be difficult to conceive a more hopeful experiment than the founding of a "preaching order" for women.

* 'Woman and the Church.' T. Fisher Unwin, 3*s.* 6*d.*

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

Though Christ a thousand times in Bethlehem be born,
If He's not born in thee, thy heart is still forlorn.

The cross on Golgotha will never save thy soul:
The cross in thine own heart alone can make thee whole.

Angelus Silesius.

The germs of an immortal growth are within us now, and will spring up, not by the bruising and crushing of our nature, but by its glorious opening out. We are here to try and train our faculties for great achievements and harmonious residence within the will of God. Nor is the theatre unworthy of our best endeavours. Only let us not, in action or in suffering, sink down upon the present moment, as if that were all. Amid the strife and sorrow that await us, let us remember that the ills of life are not here on their own account, but are the divine challenge and godlike wrestling in the night with our too reluctant wills; and since, thus regarded, they are truly evil no more, let us embrace the conflict manfully, and fear no defeat to any faithful will.

James Martineau.

O LORD most High, who hast thy faithful servants in all generations, and savest some memories of the just for everlasting remembrance, we give thee fervent thanks for all thy saints departed, and for the hope of union with them in a life of higher and securer sanctity. We thank thee for all faithful men who have suffered and died at the post of duty, for the fearless and the compassionate, men and women together, who have given their lives in willing service and self-forgetting love. Through all the storm and horror of this time we thank thee for the ultimate peace which yet remains, thy peace, which is over all, into which they have now entered. May it touch our hearts already with a deeper trust in this time of trial, and with new hope, that with patience and steadfast courage we may do our part, and finally in thy heavenly presence be united with the spirits of the just made perfect.

Amen.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

II.

The result of the inquiry into the general principles of Church organisation and its attitude to the world has led to the conclusion that there is something wanting in the merely formal ideas of Extension and Intension. It is no good for a movement to merely aim at extension, or at intension, without a clear vision of something—a teaching, a type of life—which it seeks to cultivate, and for the sake of which it exists and works. The object is, after all, more vital than the method. The most scientific and correct method in the world can never establish or make useful a barren hypothesis. A Church equipped with the most thoroughgoing psychological and social insight cannot do anything for the world unless it has something to communicate or do over and above displaying its machinery and practising its method. It will be widely admitted as one of the root weaknesses of the Church to-day that it is tending to overlook the objective of its efforts while concentrating on its various methods and machinery. It was Lotze who very aptly said, in regard to the problem of ontology, that the constant whetting of a knife was tedious if it was not intended to cut anything; that the tuning up of an orchestra was more than trying if there was no concert to follow. If I may apply these figures, I should say that the many knives of the Church are in danger of being ground away in the process of sharpening them one upon another; that the discords of the tuning up of the various instruments is beginning so to affect the nerves of the audience who came to hear a concert that they are rapidly leaving the concert hall in despair of ever hearing music. In the process of whetting the knife the fact that it exists to cut things with is being lost sight of; in the jangling noise of various instruments tuning up, the piece to be played is not very clearly remembered by the performers. The questions whether the Church ought to aim at world conquest or whether they should aim at intense individual spirituality are after all of little importance compared with the question: what definite object or objects are the churches equipped for, and do they intend, to achieve?

I should imagine that Jesus was a man peculiarly free from formalism and abstract ideas. I speak thus tentatively because I stand as one amazed before the legion of incompatible Christs which Christianity, Secularism, and independent theorisers have discovered or created. There is, indeed, diversity in the presentations of Jesus in the New Testament, and from these germs what a wonderful growth there has been! I wonder if Jesus had any of this luxuriant growth of rediscoveries of himself in mind when he talked about false Christs! In such a jungle of interpretations, demonstrations, contentions, theories, rehabilitations and hypotheses I have come to the humble conclusion that God helps him who helps himself, and so, even as others, I reserve to myself the right of believing that Jesus was the person whose life and teaching, mixed up with some error and confusion inevitable from the character and prejudices of his biographers, are recorded with a high degree of credibility in the gospels. In the light of that inspiration I have made the rediscovery that Jesus was responsible for one of the most remarkable and penetrating bodies of teaching that has ever been gathered into a synthesis by one teacher, or expressed with such full-blooded human vigour in social relationships as by this man: and I have begun to suspect that the teaching and its application as delivered by him was of so profound, revolutionary and scientific a nature that the early disciples themselves hardly understood much of it, and that it is one of the most authentic miracles in connection with him that so much of it should have been intelligibly recorded. That much of it is unintelligible as reported by these narrators comes to me as a confirmation of my assurance. I seem to suspect further that the impulse of the early disciples directed the further stream of organised Christianity, and that the Church became interested in metaphysical speculations about the person because they did not understand the explosive nature of the teaching. Vaguely conscious, if I may use a crude illustration, that a bomb had been placed in their hands, they did not realise that it was to be hurled upon the ramparts of superstition and the fortifications of selfishness; but they fell to discussing the source and nature of a potential energy which they knew not how to employ. Meanwhile, they placed the bomb in a glass case and used it as a talisman, excommunicating and damning any heretic who said a bomb should be thrown and not displayed in a glass case.

Consequently, my reply to the question as to the Church's business is that it should study and understand the teach- of Jesus: study with real independence and impartiality the conditions of the modern world, and then it should start throwing bombs. By throwing bombs I mean actually practising those precepts and principles of social and spiritual life which have a clear, obvious and vital application to present selfishness and confusion.

In saying this I am quite well aware that Jesus was not the only prophet, teacher, and seer. I regret as much as any one the mistaken efforts, as I deem them, to induce people to profess a sentimental loyalty to Jesus above all human beings, and especially above God. I am as little interested myself on the question as to whether in a list of prophets Jesus should be first, second, third, or fourth as I am in the question as to whether women should be allowed to touch the holy wafer with their naked hands or not. What I contend is that whether we place him first or fourth, or whether we do not even concern ourselves to place him in a list at all, we should overcome all our own prejudices and put aside all personal stunts and hobbies, and make the discovery that in the four gospels there is, partly distorted, much confused, but extraordinarily vivid and vital, a body of scientific spiritual and moral truths the faithful application of which would transform the individual in his own life, and lead directly to a tremendous destruction and reconstruction of our social, national and international life. These truths are fortified and our appreciation is intensified by showing how other prophets in other times and places have also proclaimed many, if not all, of them; but to argue about who was first, and which prophet is greatest, and whether we should call ourselves Christians is simply holding up a great concert for the sake of tuning up an insignificant instrument which introduces jarring discords, when the concert might have gone on unimpaired without it.

Consequently, the more I ponder over this question the more convinced I become that the most urgent need is to remember that a policy or a method is not an end, but a means to an end: and that absorption in a policy is a sure way of missing the mark. As it is a general fact that he is happy who does not devote his energies to seeking happiness, but to the achievement of objects, so it is the truth that the Church can only be successful when it does not aim primarily at success, whether expansive or intensive, but when it aims at a target. As I understand it the target is the health and happiness of human beings, spiritually and physically: the development of manhood and womanhood and childhood in their full and harmonious proportions. I understand the teaching of Jesus as being directed entirely to this. To leave children wallowing in the gutters and rejoicing in physical filfth; men and women destroying their souls in brothels and beer houses, and the community becoming enslaved by a vicious greed politely called commercialism; while the Church sends out missionaries to argue with Hindus that Christ is greater than Vishnu, or the Holy Ghost of more importance than Brahma,—with Buddhists that Gotama was a fraud or a pagan and Jesus a man-god—in the belief that in that way the Church is conquering the world and the Kingdom of God being extended, seems to me to be a monstrous perversion of the Church's function and a failure to grasp its opportunity. Why it upsets us to think of healthy savages living a life of natural simplicity, combined withal with some superstitions and practices which are distasteful to us, largely because they are different from our own superstitious practices, while we can refrain from seizing a whip with which to castigate and drive out from the temple of our national and local life the vampires who reap huge profits from prostituting public morals in beer houses, music halls, cinema theatres, brothels, and the like, I do not know. Why it matters more whether an Indian should worship God under the name of Allah or Brahma, or under a multitude of names and forms, than that a vast number of people in our midst should be worshippers of mammon, Beelzebub, and all the devils of human lust, greed, selfishness and iniquity, and be ignorant of or indifferent to God under any name at all, again I do not know. I do know, or believe I know, that it concerned Jesus more that the Scribes and Pharisees were killing the soul of religion in the Jews, that injustice, cruelty, and sin were rampant among his own people, than that Persians might be worshippers of fire, and his mission was to light the fire of religion where he was, and trust to its spreading in God's good time and way.

We need hardly remind ourselves that habits and customs, as well as essential social and national conditions, have changed since the time of Jesus, and accordingly activities which were then normal and appropriate, and above all effective, would not be so now. Itinerant preaching of the kind Jesus undertook, and the conscious and deliberate adoption of minor unconventionalities as to forms of service in Church and the like are almost inevitably artificial and ineffective, if not merely absurd. It is no time for imitation of bygone customs in an age in which they are neither understood nor wanted. If we have new wine, new bottles must be forthcoming. If we have no new wine it is unnecessary to store up either old bottles or new—we had better dispose of them to those who have something, wine or water, to put into them. In other words, if the Church has not the vitality and inspiration which will bring it into living and concrete relation with the world of to day, its machinery should de disposed of to others who would make use of it to some real effect.

Now a Church which is in vital relation to the world is not an abstract thing, but a concrete fellowship, with a definite building, organisation and membership. The Church in the abstract, the confraternity of churches, will be reborn in the rebirth or resurrection of the individual churches. Nothing will be done by the manipulations of union or association officials. In my opinion the Free Church union scheme will succeed only in proportion as the individual churches realise a new life, recognise a new solidarity with the other denominations and with the world: and because that is so largely lacking, being hindered by the many vested interests of the denominations, I doubt whether the scheme will effect anything of importance. An effective union will arise from within: when churches in Manchester, Oldham, Bolton are moved by a common spirit to co-operate and unite for concrete objects, and to do so ever more frequently and effectively, and when this spirit spreads from place to place, then will a really united Free Church of England begin to be possible. I record with profound thankfulness that in my own town there are unmistakable and increasing signs of such a spirit. We are becoming increasingly less interested in our particularisms, more and more concerned for specific objects of public moral and spiritual concern, and we are meeting, lion and lamb together, to take counsel and united action.

What I look forward to is the particular Church beginning to take a definite and intelligent interest in real life and those affairs which make for the health and happiness or disease and misery of men and women. As it is the special duty and privilege of the minister to proclaim and make clear the fundamental moral and spiritual truths upon which the integrity of the individual and the harmony of the social life is alone based, so I conceive it to be the duty of the members of the Church, with the help and leadership of the minister, so far as possible, to form themselves into active inquirers, explorers, and experimenters in regard to the conditions of personal and social life, health and happiness. I look forward to the establishment of vigorous circles of alert and eager men and women, not so much to read and study books, though this might be a subsidiary and supplementary part of their task, but to observe at first hand, investigate evidence, and obtain first hand experience of the working of various parts of personal and social life. There might be a social study circle—not to discuss endless theories and rub one another up the wrong way—but to undertake specific lines of inquiry into the actual workings of the present economic system in trades and industries which they know about, and to test their findings fearlessly and honestly in the light of the scientific spiritual teaching of Jesus. There might be the psychical study circle, to undertake so far as possible first hand work regarding the hidden forces of human personality, such as the sub-conscious, telepathy, and so forth. There might be a study circle engaged upon the problems of sex and marriage and the rearing of children. I mention these as samples of the kind of activities and explorations which it seems to me ought to be undertaken and vigorously prosecuted by men and women in the light of the ideals of the Church and the teaching of Jesus. Their co-ordination one with another and with other similar circles in other churches is a matter which could easily be arranged, and indeed would inevitably follow from the vital enthusiasm and devotion of a Church in earnest about understanding and effectively dealing with the radical problems of human life and fellowship.

I am quite sure that what we do not want are any of those forms of spurious spontaneity such as one sometimes hears seriously discussed by parsons who are distressed at the smallness of their congregations and the apathy of the world. How any one can seriously expect to bring the Church into effective and uplifting relation to the world by an arrangement whereby the minister is to preach a sermon instead of announcing the opening hymn, or exhort his congregation to engage in silent prayer instead of reading a lesson according to the mood he happens to be in, I cannot conceive: yet I have listened to elaborate expositions of this method as a universal remedy for all the ills that the Church is heir to. What we do need is an intelligent and scientific directing of the energies of mind, heart, and soul of the members of churches so that they can be brought to bear upon real things. If the Church had a living programme it would have the right to make a much greater demand upon the loyalty and co-operation of its members. As it is the energies of religious people are drawn off by a variety of contending and inchoate activities of a semi-philanthropic kind, and they naturally say they have not much time for Church meetings and functions. They would have time if the Church engaged itself seriously and scientifically upon the realities of actual life instead of allowing itself to become a sort of spiritual hot house in which a few rare and beautiful blossoms flourish.

I do not think it is too late for the Church thus to recover the territory it has gradually lost. On the contrary I believe there is a supreme opportunity for it to make a great advance: and I am confident that it would be backed by a great following of men and women eager for a way out of the villanies and miseries, blunders and incompetencies of the present disorder which we euphemistically call a social order. At least I think it would be worth trying.

John Cyril Flower.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Cambridge University Press.—The Psychology of Religion: George Albert Coe. 6*s.* net.

Messrs T. & T. Clark.—In the Day of the Ordeal: Sermons by W, P. Paterson, D.D. 4*s.* 6*d.* net.

Messrs. Constable & Co.—With the Turks in Palestine: Alexander Aaronsohn. 2*s.* net. Queed: Henry Sydnor Harrison. 1*s.* net.

Messrs. Headley Bros.—Ideals, True and False: Florence Edgar Hobson. 1*s.* net.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—Shantiniketan: The Bolpur School of Rabindranath Tagore: W. W. Pearson. 4*s.* 6*d.* net.

Oxford University Press.—Epictetus: The Discourses and Manual: P. E. Matheson. Vols. I. and II. 3*s.* 6*d.* net each.

PRACTICAL STUDIES FOR CHURCHES.*

More than forty years ago William Rathbone Greg wrote: "It may be said, with little exaggeration, that in this world a large part of the business of the wise is to counteract the efforts of the good." To judge by the incisive words of some vigorous writers to-day there is still a feeling that the "good" are a pottering lot; and, indeed, among the heartfelt utterances wrung from many leaders of the Churches since the war broke out have been confessions that the case has been too much so with them and their flocks. We need not bandy compliments with one another; let him who would be good try also to be wise, and let him who knows he is wise try his best, God helping him, to be good.

As a modest, yet very promising, offer of help to all in our churches, or in any other, or in none, who earnestly desire to give this huge world what Huxley called a "push" in the right direction, we have in the pamphlet named below a really remarkable bundle of practical suggestions. Twelve subjects are dealt with in as many well-ordered outlines, written anonymously—though no writer, assuredly, need be ashamed of any of the contributions. The scope of the syllabus will be best indicated by giving in full the heads of the sections: 'The Responsibility of Surviving,' 'The Principles of the New World,' 'The Meaning and Value of the State,' 'National Service,' 'Peace and War: International Relations,' 'Capital and Labour,' 'The Internationalising of Trade and Commerce,' 'Land and Housing,' 'Women's Part in the National Life,' 'Child-Life and the Future of Society,' 'Education,' 'The Use and Abuse of Leisure.' Each section is paragraphed in clearly articulated order, and though the space assigned to the writers evidently precluded the use of illustration, no serious perusal of these pages can possibly seem a dull business. The matters discussed are of such immediate and vital interest that teachers, preachers, and others who by duty or inclination are impelled to lessen, if possible, the sum of ignorance in the world, will readily feel the stir of mind that fructifies knowledge already possessed by a man, but too long lying dormant. By way of supplying a full equipment, however, there is appended to each section a list of books and other publications, which may especially serve the needs of younger and less developed minds.

Any alert observer, it is certain, will soon become aware, as he gets along with his unknown guides, that he is in no colourless stream of tendency, though the colours are somewhat various. If he is capable of alarm—in spite of the hardening we have all received in the rapid changes of these years of war—he may wonder whither exactly the prospective students of these subjects are to be led. We have known days when excellent people would have taken fright at the very sight of some of these pages. But neither the bogey of "Socialism," nor the fear of "Utopianism," can—or should—avail to deter religious people from resolutely facing these problems. It is not simply "no use" trying to avoid them It is quite that; for even now they knock at the door and will not leave without an answer. But, if we may assume the reader to be a religious person, is it not clear that to shrink from these studies, lest perchance they may lead us "too far," is to incur a guilt which is alike shameful in its cowardice and appalling in its results? The people are literally being "destroyed for lack of knowledge." We are our brother's keeper. The responsibility involved is real and pressing in the case of every mere citizen who has any share in the benefits of social order and any power to discern where that order is lacking. But upon the lover of mankind, the follower of Christ, the worshipper of God, the responsibility to arise and be at work is the most solemn that can come to a man.

Does it not strike us that henceforth, more than ever in the past, our lives are not our own? They have been secured for us by sacrifices of many a brave man, many a beloved son and brother. The whole land in which we live, its towns and villages, and the fair country-side—now almost breaking our hearts with the beauty that dear eyes we loved will never see again—all has become sacred, sacramental. What can we do for the freedom, the welfare, the true life of England? That is the question every band of earnest spirits should put again and again; and these pages cannot fail to suggest something to do. Used intelligently, they should make a difference in many a community. We can dispense with the question of the benefit realisable by the studying circles themselves.

W. G. Tarrant.

* The Churches and Social Problems. A Syllabus for use in Religious Addresses, Social Problem Circles, Adult Schools, Study Circles, Elder Scholars of Sunday Schools, &c. Issued by the National Conference Union for Social Service. To be had of the Secretary, the Rev. H. H. Johnson, B.A., The Orchards, Croft Road, Evesham; price 2d., 1s. 6d. per doz.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—Would you kindly grant the courtesy of your columns for a brief appeal to the members of our London churches on behalf of the London Domestic Mission Society, which holds its eighty-second Annual Meeting at Lindsey Hall next Tuesday (vide advertisement)?

The "Domestic" Mission founded by Dr. Tuckerman received from its inception the whole-hearted support and sympathy of our London ministry and laity. It holds an honoured tradition and has a truly Christian work to perform. But it cannot live on tradition alone, and a new generation has arisen to some of whom this Mission work may not seem equally urgent. To-day especially do the claims of countless war charities tend to draw away attention from a quiet work in the homes of the poor, which is yet needed not less, but more, because of the war! It is absolutely necessary that the Society should receive increased financial support if our three Mission stations in City Road, Edgware Road, and Kentish Town are all to go on.

The Annual Meeting will afford an opportunity of considering definitely the best means of raising money. Increased subscriptions and donations from present members will be very acceptable, of course, but a long list of new subscribers from the younger members of our churches would widen the basis of interest and prove that the Missions still hold their confidence. Those who cannot possibly be present but would like a copy of the Report should write to me.—Yours, &c.,

FRANK K. FREESTON, Hon. Sec.
Headland Cottage, Limpsfield.

RUTHLESS ZEAL.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Referring to the recent letter in THE INQUIRER headed 'Ruthless Zeal,' I am pleased to state that neither the Cheshire County Council nor its Education Committee has offered the school children in Cheshire any sum for sparrows' heads or eggs, and further that yesterday the Elementary Schools Committee declined to distribute to the schools in the county pamphlets advocating the formation of sparrow clubs.—Yours, &c.,

THOS. H. GORDON, C.A.
Tarporley, Cheshire.
April 24, 1917.

MISS L. GARDINER, Secretary of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, informs us that, in the interests of the country's food supplies, the Royal Society have issued a special leaflet, 'Birds, Insects, and Crops,' giving authoritative information as to the work and value of insect-eating birds. "Enormous numbers of our resident insectivorous birds have been killed by the long frost," Miss Gardiner points out, "the turning up of much new land will probably lead to an increase of insect pests; hand-labour is scarce, insecticides costly and unsatisfactory. We shall need the aid of every insect-eating bird, resident or migrant, to save the crops from disastrous plagues of caterpillar, grub, weevil, and fly. In face of these facts, it is startling to find that—while almost every other great nation bases its Bird Protection law on the inestimable value to agriculture of insectivorous and vermin-destroying birds—the people of Great Britain are ignorantly calling for the destruction of the very creatures upon which we depend to protect our precious food supplies. The formation of so-called 'Sparrow' clubs among untaught villagers, and the employment or encouragement of children to kill birds and nestlings and to take eggs, cannot be too greatly deprecated. In the name of common humanity children should be forbidden to kill and steal; while the results of their achievements in catapulting, stoning, crushing, and beheading small birds would be futile and mischievous for the purpose for which it is suggested, since children would ravage the hedges, where house-sparrows do not nest. Copies of the leaflet would be gladly sent gratis to any interested readers for distribution in schools or churches, or among agriculturists and allotment-holders, if they will write to the Secretary, Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, 23 Queen Anne's Gate, S.W. 1."

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. CHARLES ISAACS, J.P.

THE congregation of the Bournemouth Unitarian Church has suffered a grievous loss in the death, on April 26, of Mr. Charles Isaacs, in his 74th year. His house was on the Dorset side of the border, in the borough of Poole, of which he was a magistrate, but since settling in Bournemouth some seventeen years ago he had been closely identified with the congregation in West Hill Road, and for the last twelve years served as its devoted Treasurer. He was a Vice-President of the Southern Unitarian Association. Interest in the welfare of our churches was with him constant from very early years. A native of Cheltenham, his business life was spent at Kidderminster in association with his elder brother, Mr. George Isaacs, now of Torquay, and he was for years Treasurer of the New Meeting congregation. Later, while living in Birmingham, he was connected with the Church of the Messiah, and took a deep interest also in the Fazeley Street Mission. Since his residence in Bournemouth he had been tried by a long and very painful illness, borne with characteristic courage and patience. Latterly his health had somewhat improved, and so far as strength allowed he fulfilled his duties as a magistrate with conscientious thoroughness, manifesting in this, as in all the other relations of his life, a true generosity of nature, quick sympathy for misfortune and suffering, great kindliness of heart, a shrewd wisdom and a wholesome humour, which made him a delightful companion and a much valued friend. After a few weeks of renewed illness the summons came for him with a merciful swiftness.

The funeral service on Tuesday at the Parkstone Cemetery, in radiant sunshine and the first glory of the spring, was conducted by the Rev. V. D. Davis. Among the friends who gathered with the family for that last office were the Revs. C. C. Coe and Henry Gow. In the course of the service, concluding a brief address, Mr. Davis said: "Our farewell is to a true man, a faithful friend, whose home was rich in pure affection and gracious kindliness, whose life was given to honourable service with unstained integrity, with deep and tender human sympathies, glad always to be helpful, with quiet, generous beneficence, a humble man of reverent heart, desiring always to be loyal to the truth, a good citizen, earnest in the cause of freedom, justice, and humanity. The memory of such a man is blessed. What God has given us in him cannot be taken away. It is our Father's will that is done, and we must give thanks that upon one whom we love and honour there now rests the Divine benediction of peace."

CAPT. COLIN TURNER YOUNG.

WE regret to announce that Capt. Colin Turner Young, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Young of 52 Highbury Park, London, and a grandson of Mr. F. W. Turner, was killed in action on Wednesday, April 25, at the head of his company, when he was leading an attack upon an enemy position. His cousin, Second Lieut. H. W. Spurrell, another grandson of Mr. F. W. Turner's, was in the machine gun section protecting the attack. He says that his cousin's company advanced splendidly until they reached the last piece of barbed wire. HERE Capt. Young was stopped, and while he was trying to get through was killed instantaneously. He was born in January, 1891. He had passed all his examinations as a solicitor, having served his articles with his uncle (his father's partner in the firm of Young & Sons), Mr. T. Pallister Young. He was also LL.B. of the London University. When war broke out he had been six years in the Inns of Court Officers' Training Corps. He at once offered himself for active service, and was given a commission in the Duke of Wellington's (West Riding) Regiment. He went to the front in December, 1914, and became Bombing Officer of his battalion. He was severely wounded at Hill 60. After recovering, he became Bombing Instructor in the 41st Division, and volunteered to go to the front with that Division. He was then attached to the Welch Regiment, and given his captaincy. When the present great movement commenced he took charge of a company, and his cousin says that "the company got on splendidly under him and carried out their job in quite the best way possible. His men were very proud of him. They are all very cut up about it, and in any case it was a splendid end, right at the head of the whole lot." He is buried in a village cemetery some miles from the line of battle. His three brothers are now all in the army, one of them being at home after being wounded in the fighting on the Somme. Second Lieut. V. C. H. Young, of the Essex Regiment, another cousin and a son of Mr. Walter Young, LL.B., J.P., has been missing for some weeks.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

120TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,753	16	1
Mr. and Miss Hirst (seventeenth donation)	2	2	0

Mr. Henry Sharpe (twenty-eighth donation)	10	0	0
Miss K. E. Youngman (second donation)	1	0	0
Mr. J. Wigley	2	2	0
West Grove Women's League, Cardiff, per Mrs. Fox (twenty-second donation)	0	12	0
L. O. M. (sixteenth donation)	1	0	0
C. T. H.	1	10	0
Miss Rawson (twelfth donation)	2	2	0
Mr. Hyndford Rawlins (seventh donation)	1	0	0
Miss Blake (fifteenth donation)	2	0	0
	£16,777	4	1

Parcels have been received from: Mrs. Johnson; The Mill Hill Sewing League (per Miss E. M. Buckley); The Plymouth Branch of the Women's League (per Miss E. K. Bond); Mrs. A. W. Whitehead; Miss Olga Walters; Miss E. H. Leigh; Mrs. Helsby; Miss J. Whitfield; The Clapham Ladies' War Relief Committee (per Miss E. B. Cooper); Mrs. Long; Mrs. W. Tangye; The Ringwood Sewing Circle (per Mrs. Conway); The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); Bank Street War Workers' Circle (per Mrs. Flower); G. P.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Unbleached calico bags, 14 by 24 in. with a string run in the neck.

Helpless shirts of flannelette or flannel (not calico).

Pyjamas (urgent).

Shirts, socks, slippers, handkerchiefs.

Pants, vests.

Towels of all sorts.

For the Maternity Home at Calais :—

Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns to be obtained here).

Chemises for women.

Warm shawls for babies.

In reply to an inquiry that has been made, Mrs. Allen desires to say that she would be glad to receive a gift of soap, brown paper, or thick string. She would also be glad of articles of men's civilian clothing and of boots if they are in good enough condition for outdoor wear.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

EAST CHESHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION.

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. H. E. DOWSON.

On Thursday, April 26, the members of the East Cheshire Christian Union held their Quarterly Meeting at the Memorial Hall, Manchester. Prior to the meeting they were generously provided with tea and refreshments by the Memorial Hall Trustees. At the meeting subsequently (Mr. J. Hall Brooks in the chair) there were present the Rev. H. E. Dowson, Mrs. Dowson, and members of their family, Messrs. John Dendy, G. H. Leigh, Gilbert Beard, A. E. Steinthal, D. A. Little, G. W. R. Wood, G. Murray, Stanley Pearson, Egbert Steinthal, Chas. E. Marshall, and H. P. Greg (representing Trustees of the Memorial Hall), and a good attendance of the officers and committee of the Union.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said they had met to do honour to the Rev. H. E. Dowson in appreciation of his fifty years of service as minister of Hyde Chapel, Gee Cross, and his generous labours for the welfare, during that period, of the churches of the East Cheshire Christian Union. They desired to present to Mr. Dowson an illuminated address which contained an expression of their loyalty and devotion, and to the Trustees of the Memorial Hall an enlarged portrait framed in oak.

The Rev. G. A. Payne, as Senior Minister next to Mr. Dowson, presented the address. As a committee, he said, they had always valued their dear friend's guidance in matters of policy, his rich experience, his business capacity, his persuasive powers, and other valued gifts which had been unsparingly devoted to the East Cheshire Christian Union. His influence in the constituent churches had been considerable, and the assistance he had been able to render had been most gratefully received from time to time throughout the years. And when they turned to himself, they remembered his cheery optimism, his gracious presence, his sympathetic voice, his emotional nature, his silver tongue. All these they had valued, and they made this small presentation the outward expression of the gratitude they felt. Fifty years was a long way to look back, and Mr. Dowson had lost many of his old friends and colleagues; but he still had large troops of friends everywhere, who were also well-wishers, who appreciated his worth and valued his friendship.

The address, bearing the signatures of the officers and committee of the East Cheshire Christian Union, contains the following passages :—

"We rejoice with you and your family that under Divine Providence you have been privileged by reason of your great vigour of body and your still greater vigour of mind to serve faithfully and uninterruptedly the churches of the East Cheshire Christian Union for the long period of fifty years, a service happily not yet closed, but destined, we hope and pray, to be prolonged for many years.

"To these churches you have given most abundantly of your time, of your counsel, and of your support both spiritual and material. If not in a strict ecclesiastical sense yet in a truly Christian sense, you have been to our churches a reverend Bishop, a kindly and fatherly overseer of our spiritual interests. In our hours of faintheartedness your virile optimism and buoyant faith have many a time opened for us a door of hope, your resplendent courage, your eloquence of speech, your impregnable strength of conviction, your tolerance of mind, and your catholic comprehensiveness of spirit, have ever been to the churches a prophecy and an evangel....

"The fruit of your exalted character and nobly sustained effort has especially to be observed in the growth and prosperity of the churches in our Union, which were established under your kindling inspiration and fostered by your loving care. And so at this hour we thank God for the wonderful gift of your personality to us, and we pray God that for many more years it may be permitted you as President of our Union of Churches in East Cheshire, an office you have adorned for so long a time, to continue your great and good work among us.

"Assured of our filial affection and ever-growing gratitude, you will go marching on 'ever a fighter' while health and strength are yours, cheered and fortified by the knowledge that the world of your influence holds a host of men and women and little children who in your face have seen reflected the tenderness and kindliness and love of their Father in Heaven."

The Rev. H. E. Perry then presented the beautifully finished portrait to the Trustees of the Memorial Hall, with a request that it should be hung on a wall of the room where the Quarterly Meetings of the Committee are usually held. He said they desired to express by that act how deeply they felt themselves to be indebted to Mr. Dowson for all he had done for the churches of the East Cheshire Christian Union, and for the body of the churches in general. They wanted to show to all who should come after and look upon that portrait that that was the man they loved, because he was great-souled and tender-hearted.

Mr. John Dendy, in receiving the portrait, offered regret and apologies for the absence, through illness, of their Chairman, Mr. Woolley, and read letters from Sir W. Talbot, Mr. H. Lupton, Mr. C. S. Jones, and other Trustees. He said the Trustees viewed it as a great honour to have handed to them that which would become one of their most cherished possessions. There would be none of the many portraits which adorned those walls more highly prized than that one. Mr. Dowson would be ever remembered as: (1) a lover of liberty and justice—ever broadminded, generous, and a supporter of all good causes; (2) for the services he has rendered to our churches and our colleges—his patient work, valued advice, and substantial help given in committee in countless ways; (3) as an ideal of kindliness and sympathy; and (4) for an abounding goodwill, which issues in the good life. The portrait would be a constant reminder to them that they were to be the possessors of goodwill and the kindly spirit. It was a great joy to them that Mr. Dowson was still with them, and he hoped he would be spared long to sit under his own portrait.

The Rev. H. E. Dowson, in acknowledging the gifts, said he had never been so overwhelmed as he had been during the last week with the kindness of troops of friends. He found it difficult to speak after the words that had fallen. He knew they meant it but could not recognise himself in the picture painted. He had a shock the other day when he received a letter from a neighbouring church saying that they regretted that increasing infirmities of age had prevented him visiting their church as in former years. He did not recognise himself in that letter. He still felt himself young when he thought of his reverend seniors: William Gaskell, Alfred Steinthal, Dr.

J. R. Beard, T. E. Poynting, and Dr. Charles Beard. After referring to the way in which Mrs. Dowson had helped him, Mr. Dowson said no man in the ministry had ever had a higher, more devoted admiration than he for the noble laity. Men like Thomas Ashton and Robert Shipman were those who greatly influenced his early career. He was in his young manhood enthusiastic for Church work on sectarian lines. Thomas Ashton said: "No. Go out in a great humanitarian spirit." His freemanship of Hyde was the result of carrying out Thomas Ashton's advice. He bore testimony to joy in the ministry of the Free Churches. He was Christian without limitation. He lived for Truth, Religion, Liberty. Never had he been interfered with by his people. He had gone into politics and never made an enemy, although a strong party man. He had always been good friends with opponents in politics and church. He had found it possible to go into politics because he remembered that he was first a Christian minister. He would dearly like his portrait to hang on the wall in company with that of Travers Madge, who was the inspirer of his youth.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES

Astley.—The annual school sermons were preached to crowded congregations on Sunday by the Rev. Herbert Barnes, of Manchester. Special hymns and anthems were sung by the choir, assisted by members of the Chowbent choir, Mr. Bevan and Mrs. Baxter contributing solos. The collections and donations amount to £30, the highest for thirty-five years.

Bolton.—A successful Sale of Work was held last week at Halliwell Road, Free Church. On Wednesday, April 18, the Sale was opened by the Mayor, Alderman Knowles Edge, J.P., and Mr. J. Percy Taylor, J.P., occupied the chair. On Saturday, the 21st, the Sale was re-opened by Mr. J. B. Gass, J.P. (in the unavoidable absence of Mrs. Gass) and Mrs. Bradshaw, Greenmount, presided. The total receipts amount to upwards of £147.

Brisbane.—We regret to hear of the death, on December 16 last, of the Rev. Douglas Price, M.A., the much esteemed minister of the Modernist Movement, Brisbane. A man of genuine scholarship and fine mind, he had gathered together a promising company of liberals in religion, who, we fear, now left without any leader, will have great difficulty in continuing their organisation. Mr. Price was a graduate of Durham, and was in the Anglican ministry from 1898 till 1911, when he began work on independent lines.

Congleton.—The School Anniversary in connection with the Unitarian Church, was held on April 29. The afternoon service was conducted by the minister, and the evening service by the Rev. R. H. Quick (Primitive Methodist), who settled in the town last August. Since then he has been on the most friendly terms with the Unitarian congregation, and has pleaded that they should be invited into a Council of Anglicans and Nonconformists which was formed as a result of the National Mission. He was supported in his appeal by the Nonconformists and the Catholic priest, but the Anglicans took a solid stand against the proposal. Mr. Quick's visit to Congleton evoked general interest in the town, and a good congregation attended the service. On the previous Wednesday (Cromwell's birthday) he had delivered, in the schoolroom, a lecture on 'Cromwell and his Message to our Times.' The chair was taken by Ald. Maskery, a Congregationalist, who is well known in this part of Cheshire. There was a good attendance.

Dudley.—A large congregation assembled at the Old Meeting House, Dudley, last Sunday morning to honour the war declaration of our latest Ally, and to rejoice over the final reconciliation of the two great English-speaking peoples of the earth. Appropriate American hymns by Russell Lowell, Longfellow, and Whittier, were sung during the service. For the first lesson the 46th Psalm was read, which contains the special passage: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble," with the kissing of which the President of the United States seals his oath of office before the Justices of the Supreme Court. As an illustration of America's great tradition of noble thought, the portions read of Emerson's Essay on the 'Fortunes of the Republic' made a most appropriate second lesson. Mrs. Glyn Evans sang with great feeling, as a soprano solo, the great Battle Hymn of the American Republic, written by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe during the American Civil War, which has superseded the better known 'John Brown's Body.' All the special music and voluntaries, so effectively rendered by the organist, Mr. F. J. C. Poole, were American. The sidesmen for the occasion were Lieutenants J. L. Swanson and T. Hanson, who are home on short leave from the front. The s rvice closed with the playing of the American National Anthem, 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' after which the congregation sang one verse of our own National Anthem. The service throughout was conducted by the Rev. E. Glyn Evans, and his special address was reported verbatim in the local press.

Exeter.—At the Annual Meeting of the congregation of George's Meeting held on Monday evening, April 30, a resolution was passed: "That this meeting of the congregation desires that Mr. Bloor be approached with a view of ascertaining if he can see his way to withdraw his resignation, and in the event of his doing so the congregation assure him of their continued and hearty support as their minister." Mr. Bloor has replied to this that, while he has quite made up his mind that it will be best for him to leave Exeter now, he is deeply touched by this evidence of the congregation's appreciation after a ministry of nearly ten years.

Gee Cross.—On Sunday, April 22, the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson preached his jubilee sermon in Hyde Chapel to a crowded congregation, among those attending being Lord Ashton of Hyde, and Miss Margaret Ashton, as well as many who have been intimately associated with the chapel for one or two generations. The service, which was conducted by Mr. Dowson and the Rev. F. H. Vaughan, included special hymns, and an anthem, 'God is a Spirit,' by the Chapel quartette, the soloist being Madame Stuart Cummins. Mr. Dowson's address was full of personal feeling, and the spirit of thankfulness characterised it from beginning to end. In the course of his remarks, he said: "My prayer this day, my gaze in spirit are directed on the future of this beloved chapel. I beseech you come up to worship here Sunday after Sunday, keep burning on the altar of your hearts the living sacrifice of your love to this house as the sanctuary of your lives. If there was ever a call for living churches in this devoted land it is to-day. It is said that the voice of the church is not heard amid the demoniac outburst of barbaric force and the wildness of devastation in the fairest homes of civilisation. It is in such a time that we who have a devoted affection for this beloved chapel, and those of us specially whose own evening of life is closing in, look on to its future with hearts aching with anxiety for it. With the great hymn of thanksgiving that arises from within as you gather round me at this blessed jubilee, mingles thought on the tremendous future calls upon this congregation and all the churches in the land; but my heart is here, and the most earnest of my prayers ascend to God that from here the light of pure and undefiled religion may shine on the darkness of the time, and that from these walls will go out from the hour of worship devout men and women, and that here will be reared children to become living stones of this church in future." Before the close of the service an album containing an illuminated address, beautifully bound, was presented to Mr. Dowson by Mr. Alfred H. Barlow, Chairman of the Jubilee Committee and Warden of the Chapel, as a tribute from the congregation and the Sunday school. The address was read by Councillor Percy Hibbert, secretary of the committee and of the Chapel, and in a brief response Mr. Dowson expressed the deep gratitude of himself and family in accepting the gift.

Kendal.—On Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 2.30 P.M., the Rev. Charles E. Mercer was inducted to the pastorate of the Unitarian Chapel. The service was opened by the Rev. Dendy Agate, and the welcome into the ministry was given by the Rev. Dr. Mellone, Principal of the Home Missionary College, Manchester, who in well chosen words defined the ideal relationship which ought to exist between a minister and his congregation. The Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, of Gee Cross, also addressed the meeting. After the ministers present had extended the right hand of fellowship to Mr. Mercer, he in responsel said that it would be his constant endeavour to preach the loving-kindness of God and the brotherhood of man. Special music was rendered by the choir. At both morning and evening service the Chapel was almost filled, and at the afternoon service there was a crowded cougregation. During the time Mr. Mercer has been at Kendal, the attendance both at Church and Sunday school has considerably improved, and several new members have joined.

Leeds.—The pulpit of Mill Hill Chapel was occupied at both services last Sunday by Lieut.-Col. Bullock. In the course of his morning sermon, the preacher suggested the adoption in this country of a custom which prevails in the United States. On May 30 every year—the date has been selected because the spring flowers are then at their best, and is known as National Decoration Day—the Veterans of the Civil War, accompanied by their children and grandchildren, visit all the graves of men who fell in the war, and are interred in the vicinity, placing flowers on them. To commemorate those who died at sea for their country, roses are thrown into the rivers, whose waters will eventually carry them to the ocean.

Lye : Stourbridge.—The Annual Sunday School services were held on Sunday, April 22, when sermons were preached in the afternoon and evening by the Rev. Thomas Graham, of Birmingham. There were good congregations, the chapel being crowded in the evening. The collections were larger than for many years past, amounting to £15 in all.

Pontypridd.—The church at Pontypridd mourns the loss of another of its members in the person of Mr. Dauncey of Pontllanfraith, who passed away with startling suddenness on Sunday, April 15, and was buried at Mynyddislwyn on the following Thursday. Mr. Dauncey was brought into contact with Unitarianism through the Postal Mission. He lived in places remote from any Unitarian Churches—Abertillery and latterly Pontllanfraith—and was only able occasionally to attend a service. His last appearance was at a meeting of the South-East Wales Unitarian Society, when he supported the proposed effort to try a series of services at Abertillery. Some four years ago he was enrolled a member of the church at Pontypridd. The funeral, which was largely attended, testified to the respect in which Mr. Dauncey was held in the district. His former pastor, a Baptist minister, under whom he served as a deacon, officiated at the graveside, while the Rev. T. Eric Davies, minister of the Unitarian Church at Pontypridd, conducted a devotional service at the house.

South East Wales Unitarian Society.—The 27th Annual Meeting of the Society was held in the Unitarian Church, Merthyr Tydvil, on Monday, April 30. Notwithstanding the restricted train service and enhanced fares for travelling the splendid attendances at all the meetings justified the decision of the Executive to hold their meetings as in past years. Ministers and delegates from the following affiliated churches were present: Aberdare (Old Meeting House and Highland Place), Cardiff, Carmarthen, Cefn Coed, Dowlais, Merthyr, Mountain Ash, Nottage, Pontypridd, and Swansea. Mr. D. R. Llewellyn, M.E. (President of the Society) presided over the proceedings throughout the day. The Executive Committee met in the morning to consider the report to be presented to the meeting of subscribers which was held later in the day. Reference was made at the outset of the report to the loss sustained by our churches through the departure of so many of our young men to take up service for their country, and sympathy was offered to the relatives of those who had made the great sacrifice. Sympathy was also expressed to those who had been wounded, and to all who were serving the committee offered a tribute of gratitude and pride. The report showed that the Society had been able during the year to render considerable help to churches without settled ministers, by aiding them in finding pulpit supplies. Appreciative reference was also made to the very successful Autumnal Meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association which were held in Swansea and Cardiganshire, and to the fact that the Society had been fortunate in securing three visits during the year from two of the Presidents of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, viz., Mr. J. F. L. Brunner, M.P., and Dr. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. The Rev. T. P. Spedding had also visited the district during the year and delivered, in several of the churches, an interesting lecture on his work among our soldiers in Home Camps. Mention was made of the loss sustained by the Society through the death of Mrs. Edith Reid, Swansea, a former President of the Society, and for many years a faithful member of its executive. A pleasing feature of the report was the announcement that the Committee had been able to make arrangements whereby the chapel at Cwmbach, which has been closed for some time, would shortly be re-opened for fortnightly services. The Committee, too, is making arrangements by which a closer touch may be kept with the Pentre Church, which is still without a minister. Both these schemes will be made easier to carry out for some time by the help of Miss E. Rosalind Lee, of Birmingham, has who very kindly placed her services at the disposal of the Committee for preaching work during the greater part of the coming summer. The Annual Meeting of Subscribers was held in the afternoon, when the Committee's report was adopted. The Treasurer (Mr. Gomer L. Thomas) presented the financial statement, which was of an extremely satisfactory nature, he being able to report a considerable balance in hand at the end of the financial year. This is all the more satisfactory as it was not due to any unnecessary cutting down of expenditure, but to an increase in the amounts collected from subscribers. The report of the District Minister, which contained a record of much useful work, was also adopted, and the meeting expressed its gratitude for and appreciation of the excellent work done by the officers during the year. The President accorded a welcome to Miss E. R. Lee, who was present, and Miss Lee in responding spoke of the good work done by the Fellowship Branch of the Women's League, and urged upon all the Churches, which had not already done so, to foster this side of the League's work. Several of the churches reported on their year's work, and considering the exceptional circumstances of these difficult times, the reports were on the whole quite satisfactory. A religious service was held in the evening conducted by the Rev. A. Cunliffe Fox, of Bath, who delivered an impressive address, in the course of which he said the question was often asked to-day, "Is the Church worth preserving?" It was asked by outsiders, so many of whom regarded the Church with indifference, and its influence for good upon the world as practically negligible. For this the Church was partly to blame, for the reason that sometimes it had offered people stones while they clamoured for bread. Even in the Church itself there was a crying out for a new outpouring of the Spirit, and it was getting to be more and more realised that there must be a conversion within the Church before there could be any conversion without. The Church, if it was to justify its existence, and deepen its influence upon the life of the world, must adapt itself to the changing conditions of the age. Transitions were going on in every department of life, and all thinking people realised that the world to-day was not the same as it was when they were children. Transformations and revolutions marked its history; and there were more and greater to follow. It could not be thought possible that the churches alone would remain unaffected by the great upheavals which were going on all around to-day. Already there were signs of an opening door, leading to greater opportunities and vaster responsibilities; there were signs, too, of reaction against the materialistic views of life which had so long prevailed. The times were ripe for a mission of the spirit, and the day of the churches was still in front, and not behind. It was for each individually to realise that he could help on the Church's mission, by recognising the supreme fact that if we place ourselves along the tracks whence it proceedeth, the Holy Spirit will come to us to aid us in our work." The delegates and visitors were hospitably entertained to luncheon and tea by the Merthyr friends.

Warrington.—The Rev. Irvine Lister, minister of Cairo Street Chapel, has just been elected to the Warrington Board of Guardians, being the successor to the late Mr. A. J. Tolby, a well-known figure in social, philanthropic, and literary circles in the town. Mr. Lister is the indefatigable hon. secretary of the South Lancashire Regimental Care Committee. He is also a worker on one of the committees of the Guild of Help and holds a position on the Council of the Literary and Philosophical Society. It is only two and a half years since he went to Warrington, but his useful work in the town has made an impression on all with whom he has come into contact. His appointment to the vacancy on the Board of Guardians has met with general and wide approval, and great benefit to the Board is anticipated.

Cast-off Army Horses.

Mr. Sidney Trist, Hon. Secretary of the Animals' Guardian Guild, has been protesting against the continued sale of cast-off horses on the Western front, in spite of an undertaking given by Mr. Lloyd George, as Minister for War, last October, that only really sound horses should be disposed of in this way. The undertaking was given in reply to Col. Lockwood, who complained of the action of the War Office in selling by auction horses which had become unfit for further service in the army. As he pointed out, the authorities did not know what became of the animals afterwards, or what torture they might suffer, especially those which were sold in the East. He claimed that the horses we had bred in this country, reared on our own farms, and impressed into the army for the service of the war should be shot when they became unfit for use. These poor creatures are still being sold—"under certain restrictions," which are said not to be of much value—and Mr. Trist appeals to all animal lovers to protest against this cruel business.

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. Cumberland.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth, S.O.—PAYING GUESTS received.—Particulars from Miss Smith. Telegrams: The Heugh, Askrigg, S.O.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, Thoralby, Aysgarth, S.O.—TO LET, Furnished, 4 bedrooms, 2 sitting-rooms, kitchen, &c.

IRISH LINEN TABLECLOTHS. Superior Double Damask. Very slightly imperfect. Size, 2 by 2 yds. 10*s.* 6*d.*, usual price, 19*s.* 6*d.* (postage 5*d.*). Bargain List sent post free.—Write to-day, Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT.—We positively pay highest prices. Up to 7*s.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 12*s.* on silver, 15*s.* on gold, 2*l.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed by the reliable genuine firm.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine; cash by return. —I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester. Tel: 5030 City.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 6*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 5, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3906. NEW SERIES, No. 1009.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

THE ATHENÆUM

THE JOURNAL OF RECONSTRUCTION

THE CONTENTS OF THE MAY ISSUE INCLUDE

The International Future

A Workman's View of the Reconstruction of Industry

America and Freedom (Special Supplement)

Reviews

Scholastic Appointments, etc.

Monthly, 1s.; Annual Subscription, 14s. post free.

Published at "The Athenæum" Office, 11 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May.

13. Rev. A. W. FOX, M.A., of Todmorden.
20. Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, of Tenterden.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS FOR THE NONCONFORMIST MINISTRY.

DR. WILLIAMS'S TRUSTEES offer for open competition, TWO DIVINITY SCHOLARSHIPS for Graduates, tenable in any approved School of Theology or University. The Scholarships are open to students of all Denominations preparing for the Nonconformist Ministry.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, DR. WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY, Gordon Square, London, W.C.1, before May 31.

UNITARIAN CHURCH,

South Shore, Blackpool.

SALE OF WORK,

MAY 16, 3.0 p.m.

Opener, The Mayoress.

Great effort to pay off Building Debt of £165.

Contributions gratefully received by Rev. B. C. CONSTABLE, 4 Green Avenue.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING at ESSEX HALL, Essex Street, Strand, on MONDAY, MAY 14, 1917. Speakers: The President, Dr. C. HERBERT-SMITH, Mrs. SYDNEY MARTINEAU, Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P., Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON, Rev. R. TRAVERS HERFORD, and others.

Your presence and support is cordially invited.

7 p.m. Tea. 7.30 Meeting.

ALAN FORBES, Acting Secretary.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

The MANAGERS meet annually in October for the purpose of making grants. APPLICATIONS must, however, be in hand NOT LATER than MONDAY, JUNE 4, and must be on a form to be obtained from the Secretary, CHAS. E. MARSHALL, 38 Barton Arcade, Manchester.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. HILL
40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead, London, N.W.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY May 13.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. Piggott.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. F. Hankinson; 7, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Cyril Flower, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. Frank G. Fincham; 6.30, Mr. J. H. Smith.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. B. Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11, Miss G. A. Brackenberry, "Food Economy from a religious point of view"; 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. Vint Laughland; 7, Rev. Robt. Kerr Lambert, Chaplain C.E.F.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. John Kinsman.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 3.15 and 6.30, Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A. (Sunday School Anniversary).

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Rev. J. H. Smith.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. Harry Smith; 6.30, Mr. Joseph P. Rosling.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Arthur W. Fox, M.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Cambridge Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. W. Copeland Bowie.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. Cottier,

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Coleman.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Simon Jones.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11, Mr. C. Sydney Jones, M.A., J.P.; 6.30, Mr. H. Faulkner.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. H. Taylor; 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. McLachlan.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. J. E. Odgers.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11, Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.; 6.30, Rev. J. W. Lee.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Jellie, B.A.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATH.

Addiscott.—May 8, at Elsworthy, Kearsney, Mabel, the fifth daughter of the late William Addiscott of Hackney.

Pulpit Supply.—Rev. D. Davis, 32 Windermere Road, Muswell Hill, London, N.10.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

Wanted, by May 22, useful Mothers' Help for one little girl, aged five. Must be healthy and ready to assist in light house duties.—Apply first by letter to E. M. C., Fernwood, North Hill, Highgate, N.6.

Lady (Shropshire, husband in France) wishes to share her home with another lady or two friends. Every convenience. Terms moderate. Highest references. Lovely country,—Y., Inquirer Office, 13 Bream's Buildings. London, E.C.4.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 219
"NEARING THE PLACE" 221
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 221
WITH THE Y.M.C.A. IN FRANCE AND FLANDERS 222
THE ROYAL ACADEMY 223
CORRESPONDENCE:—
WAR MEMORIALS IN OUR CHURCHES . 223
NATIONAL SERVICE 224
PROHIBITION DURING THE WAR . . 224
THE MINISTERS' MEETING AND WHIT-WEEK 224
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
MR. GEORGE GOOLD WARD . . . 224
CAPT. D. P. HIRSCH 225
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND . . . 225
AMERICAN UNITARIANS AND THE WAR . 226
LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY . . 226
LAWRENCE HOUSE 227
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 227

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

IN Dr. Jacks's article in the current Hibbert Journal dealing with the subject of 'Punishment and Reconstruction,' a powerful, and to our thinking a conclusive argument is presented against any peace settlement which would leave unremoved and unpenalised the men who have been guilty of those outrages against the common law of nations which have stained the present war so deeply. This argument, of course, entirely accords with repeated declarations made by Mr. Asquith and other British leaders, and received with general assent; but people's memories are apt to be short, and in the intense longing for peace which we all share we may somewhat lose sight of the stern, the inescapable duty, of vindicating justice in the earth. It is therefore with grave satisfaction that we welcome the words of the French Premier, M. Ribot, addressed to the Inter-Parliamentary representatives at Paris last week. He said:—

> Certainly we want peace as much as any people, but we will have nothing to do with a peace which leaves us confronted with the problems which brought about this war and which this war must solve. We do not dream of oppressing any people, or any nation, even that of the enemy. But we cannot be reproached for wishing to destroy the oppression, which has so long weighed upon the world, or for wishing to obtain guarantees, restitution, and compensations, and punishment for the authors of the crimes against the common law which are the disgrace of this war.

* * *

THE event of Mr. Balfour's address to the United States House of Representatives last Saturday is one of outstanding importance. Appreciating his welcome by the House as "a rare and valued honour," Mr. Balfour said it was not a moment for the mere interchange of courtesies, however sincere. He continued:—

> We all, I think, feel instinctively that this is one of the great moments in the history of the world, and that what is now happening on both sides of the Atlantic represents a drawing together of great and free peoples for mutual protection against the aggression of military despotism. I am not one of those—none of you are among those—who are such bad democrats as to say that democracies make no mistakes. All free Assemblies have made blunders, and sometimes have committed crimes. Why is it, then, that we look forward to the spirit of free institutions, especially among our present enemies, as one of the greatest guarantees of the future peace of the world? I shall tell you, gentlemen, how it seems to me. It is quite true that a people and that representatives of a people may be betrayed by some momentary gust of passion into a policy which they ultimately deplore, but it is only a military despotism of the German type that can, through generations if need be, pursue steadily, remorselessly, unscrupulously, and appallingly the object of dominating civilisation and mankind.

* * *

IN conclusion, Mr. Balfour once again uttered the warning, and expressed the trust, which together correct ungrounded optimism and faithless pessimism:—

> When I was young [he said] we used to flatter ourselves that progress inevitably meant peace, and that growth of knowledge was always accompanied as its natural fruit by the growth of goodwill among the nations of the earth. Unhappily, we know better now. We know there is such a thing in the world as a Power which can with unwearying persistence focus all the resources of knowledge and of civilisation into the one great task of making itself the moral and material master of the world. It is against that danger that the free peoples of the Western civilisation have bound themselves together. It is in that great cause that we are going to fight, and are fighting at this very moment, side by side. In that cause we shall surely conquer, and our children will look back on this fateful date as the one from which democracies can feel secure. Their progress, their civilisation, and their rivalry, if need be, will be conducted, not on German lines, but in the free and friendly spirit which really befits the age in which we live.

Addressing the Senate on Tuesday, Mr. Balfour expressed similar sentiments, confident that the unions of America, Great Britain, and France mark "a new epoch in which all the civilised nations bound themselves in unity to deal with one of their number which had forgotten its responsibilities, forgotten its duties, and in unscrupulous lust for universal dominion brought the greatest of known calamities upon the world."

* * *

WHATEVER may be the opinion of high authorities or the public as to the practical worth of clerical and ministerial activities in ordinary times or now, we understand that the two departments concerned have officially recognised the labours of the Domestic Missionary as a work of "special national importance." If that is the case now, and we have no doubt of it, how much more true it must be after the war! The need for men and women who will carry on an enlightened religious work in slums and mean streets will surely rise to its maximum when the reaction sets in, when there will be inevitable crises of unemployment, and when the stricken and maimed in their full numbers seek shelter and sustenance where they may. It is such considerations as these that immensely add to the responsibility resting upon us as a religious fellowship to keep our Domestic Missions in a thoroughly satisfactory and efficient condition. The urgency of other claims must not drive out of the field these agencies of proved value in the task of rescuing and upbuilding human lives. The report given in our columns this week of the London Domestic Mission Society, demands close and earnest attention; and we know that similar societies elsewhere are in much the same perplexing condition, and merit the same cordial and practical sympathy.

* * *

As we said last week, the odd side will at times present itself even in connection with matters so important, for example, as the food problem. The reading of the King's Proclamation affords an instance. We have heard strange tales of the way in which this fairly simple duty has been performed—or not, for in some cases the ministers appear to have either wilfully or accidentally omitted to do what they were all charged and enjoined to do by the highest authority in the State. But the difficulty has been just where to introduce this very practical piece of exhortation, and how to herald it. It is obviously rather long to insert among the usual miscellaneous "notices," and besides it would appear of quite too special a character to be crowded in at that point. Some ministers read it, we hear, before the sermon, some after; but the experience of a clergyman who boldly decided to read it as part of his sermon was rather unhappy. It was very well, of course, to embellish the Royal words with advice and comment of his own; but when at the end of reading it he came to the phrase "God save the King" the organist thought this to be a cue for him, and struck up the National Anthem. Which being duly sung, the people settled down again; and the preacher, having with difficulty mastered his surprise, went on with his sermon.

* * *

THE serious side of the problem is clearly as much with us as ever, and we are all called upon to attend to it, not only in self-protection but in the interest of the nation, including those people who have but little capacity for self-discipline, and are prone to excess and waste. According to the latest report on the subject a small reduction has been made already in the consumption of wheaten food, and this is promising, especially as this week's removal of the order for meatless days will relieve the pressure on bread. Another good sign is that, by tightening the restrictions on brewers, there is to be considerably less sugar diverted to their trade, while a very large quantity of barley (two million quarters is the estimate) is to be reclaimed for use in bread. Some curious science exists in the world, it appears. The Government spokesmen in the House of Commons have repeatedly urged, in deprecation of a too radical policy with the breweries, that if it were not for their products bread could not be made for lack of yeast. But, as Mr. Athelstan Riley points out in Wednesday's Times, yeast is one thing, and leaven is another. We have been mostly depending on the former since the Germans supplied it so dexterously, but our Allies across the Channel have stuck to leaven, and it seems quite as practicable for us to use this as it is for the French people.

* * *

WHILE the men (and women especially) are just now busy on allotments, even to the sifting out of cartloads of brickbats from the soil of commons and other vacant land, we may usefully consider whether something might not be done to stimulate gardening interest among our young people. One of our good Canadian Unitarians, Mr. R. B. Whyte, of Ottawa, a business man but an enthusiastic gardener, succeeded five years ago in starting potato growing contests for boys, followed by gardening and canning competitions for girls, in adjacent counties. The plots for the boys were about one-tenth or one-twentieth of an acre each; instructions were given as to method and facilities for obtaining seed, &c. Despite a very unfavourable season last year, one boy raised 420 bushels to the acre, and for the whole five years the average yield secured by all the competitors was 264 bushels to the acre; the average profit for the five years has been about £26 per acre. The girls seem to have made an excellent start also. The competitors are required to fill up a very detailed schedule as to stages of the work done, nature and condition of soil, manures used, and so forth; and one cannot peruse the statements thus drawn up without realising that it is a real and highly profitable education that is going on. If any one is disposed to follow the excellent example of our friend Mr. Whyte (with such adaptations as would be necessary in this country) he may get reports and full information from the Secretary, Canadian Seed Growers' Association, Canadian Building, Ottawa, Ont.

* * *

THERE is evidently considerable difference of opinion on the question of the increase or otherwise of drinking habits among working women. According to the report of the London City missionaries the increase has been certain and deplorable; but other observers are not convinced of this, and some go so far as to deny it entirely. The testimony of a special committee dealing with the Birmingham area is to the effect that there is undeniably more frequenting of public-houses by women than there was before the war; but, even so, it is doubted if this implies more drunkenness. It is suggested that the closer approximation of women's work to that of men in these months has led to a closer parallel in their daily habits; and while this has led to some behaviour and much language that could be wished otherwise, there is less reason than is at first apparent to draw the worse conclusions. One thing amidst all these hazy surmises is perfectly clear—if the trade in alcoholic drink were prohibited for the period of the war an open door to many evils would be effectually closed.

* * *

To the chorus of congratulation and admiring esteem which has recently risen in such ample volume around our venerable friend, the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, and to which our columns have borne full witness, we should like to add an echoing word on behalf of our readers, and—may we say—on behalf of our community at large. Mr. Dowson was born, not for a province, but for the whole Church, and there is no man in our brotherhood who is more universally known and beloved than he. For full fifty years he has given himself to his ministry, bearing on his vigorous shoulders a big load of responsibility and care for others, and proving how little fear there need be of hard work hurting a man who starts sound in body and healthful in spirit. And happily he is still able to give a lead to many of his juniors. A chivalrous fighter, a faithful ally, a warm-hearted comrade, a sagacious adviser, a "manly man" as Chaucer would say, we are all proud of him, grateful to have him ours. He has always played the game, he is not out yet; and the worst we can say of him is that his own abundant energy and his too generous estimate of the powers and merits of the younger members of his side make it a hard task to keep our end up worthily while he goes on scoring. But in his honour, we must try.

"NEARING THE PLACE."

We are in the throes of the gravest crisis in our country's history. It may well be that before many weeks are over something will have happened which will hereafter be recognised as the event which finally decided our fate. We think of Browning's lines :—

When the snows begin, and the blasts denote
I am nearing the place,
The power of the night, the press of the storm
The port of the foe.

We are all "nearing the place," and, alas! how many strong men have yet "to go"; but do we all recognise fully the tremendous facts and adjust our individual lives to them? Are we "nearing the place" in the right spirit and temper? Do we realise that each one of us ought to be ready and willing "to go" in "this one fight more," which may be "the best and the last?" We expect such willingness from our soldiers. It is no less incumbent on us civilians. As they fight for our great cause abroad so let us in the same spirit and with the same determination fight at home, fight against all forms of selfishness, against fatigue, against cowardice, against despair—all of which so easily beset and tempt us.

Morituri te salutant. These words, addressed not, indeed, to an Imperial despot, but to a country that we love and a God whom we believe we are serving in this great war, should be on our lips and reflect the temper of our hearts, civilians though we are. Unless something of that spirit is in us our soldiers will give their lives in vain.

On the whole, and with reservations, it may be said that we are entering on the great crisis in the right spirit; that as a people we are rising to the height of the great occasion; but there are still too many exceptions. Shirkers there still are, and selfishness still keeps cropping out and putting dangerous obstacles in our way. The plain fact that the man who is putting his personal interests before his country's good and the supreme claims of our great cause stands classed with the soldier who deserts is not always sufficiently recognised. There is also in some quarters too much of an easy-going optimism, a vague belief that somehow the country will pull through, although we do not put very much effort into the pull. We know that our country can only win through death and loss and pain. Are we all as ready to take a share in the death and loss and pain as we shall be to appropriate a share in the victory that is to be? Let us search our hearts and ask ourselves very honestly how far we are still expecting to be saved by vicarious suffering.

In one sense it is even more difficult for the civilian than for the soldier to play a worthy part to-day. The soldier is sustained by discipline and comradeship in a way in which the civilian is not. Death at the hand of the enemy may be waiting for the soldier if he goes forward. Death at the hand of justice may perhaps more certainly be waiting for him if he runs away. No such dire alternative confronts the civilian and compels him to his best manhood. Yet the demand upon him for his best manhood and his greatest efforts is no less. How is he to keep himself up to that high level which the time requires? Most of us, with excellent intentions, are constantly failing. It is too easy to be filled with high resolves one day and on the next to slip back to that lower level of life which has been habitual with us in the past, and where no immediate penalty awaits us. Our old selfish claims, ambitions, and desires keep thrusting themselves upon us. They are only temporarily scotched, not dead. We need constantly to be on our guard against them. It is their death which is required of us, and if we will not give it, how can we ask our soldiers to give their lives?

Who is sufficient for these things? Few, indeed, of us. It is almost inevitable that, being what we are, we should at times fail, at times "break from the van and the freemen," at times "sink to the rear and the slaves." But if we do so sink we need not remain there. The grace of God and the strength which He can give may be sought even by the temporarily defeated, while the memory of dear ones whom we have seen pass through the Valley of the Shadow without flinching may be to some of us a strong and abiding inspiration. Their eyes are upon us. Let us quit ourselves as the men and women they would have us be.

Let us also remember this. With all the pain and loss which this war is bringing to us, and which we are called upon to make our own, even as St. Francis embraced poverty, it is at the same time bringing us a great opportunity of lasting gain. It is offering us a unique opportunity of escaping from that worst form of slavery, the slavery to self. Many who were never really free men before will be set free by it, for they will have learned under its stern teaching to subordinate their private to the public good, and to realise the beauty and satisfaction of self-sacrifice in a great cause.

Ignotus.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

What are we set on earth for? Say, to toil;
Nor seek to leave thy tending of the vines,
For all the heat o' the day, till it declines,
And death's mild curfew shall from work assoil.
God did anoint thee with his odorous oil,
To wrestle, not to reign; and He assigns
All thy tears over, like pure crystallines,
For younger fellow-workers of the soil
To wear for amulets. So others shall Take patience, labour, to their heart and hand,
From thy hand, and thy heart, and thy brave cheer,
And God's grace fructify through thee to all.
The least flower, with a brimming cup, may stand,
And share its dew-drop with another near.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

As Moses was learned in the wisdom of the Egyptians, so was Zoroaster in the wisdom of India. He taught that God is light, and that in Him dwelleth no darkness at all. But the darkness, he said, warreth against light, and evil against good. But God bringeth light out of darkness, and giveth to good the victory over evil. The sun is the messenger of the invisible God, and carrieth light which the only Wise deviseth for the children of men. Storm and earthquake, pestilence and darkness, make war on the realms of light, and men dread the prince of the power of the air. The wicked are always fearful, and the sin of earth sees anger in heaven. But the goodness of God abounds more and more, until all evil is put under His feet. He maketh the storm his angel, and the earthquake to serve Him. Out of pestilence He bringeth health, and giveth the darkness a rest for labour. To do His will in goodness is to enter into His kingdom, and His soldiers against the power of darkness win a perpetual crown. Before His throne are seven angels, and from His mouth goeth forth the living word. In three worlds He abides, ever living, and thinking, and life-giving; and by three things He shows Himself to man—in goodness, and in truth, and in loveliness. His word goeth through all nations, and by His brightness the stars shine, and the worlds stand fast by His will.

Rowland Williams.

ETERNAL and ever-blessed Ruler, in whose hands are the hearts of kings and princes, and who hearest the cry of the lowly; we humbly beseech thee to bless our Sovereign the King and all his house, and to multiply on him thy excellent gifts. Be with those who bear the heavy burden at this time of the government of our country, the direction of its forces, for the maintenance of justice, to resist unrighteousness and make an end of evil aggression and cruelty. Be with all those who give themselves with steadfastness and courage to the service of their country. Through the wisdom and self-sacrifice of faithful men and women grant to us once more the blessings of peace, in truth and honour. And so may this kingdom, and all the kingdoms of the world, be thine to the end of time. Amen.

WITH THE Y.M.C.A. IN FRANCE AND FLANDERS.

By the Rev. John Ellis.

Since my return from France, a question that has been frequently asked is: "What was your rank out there?" And I have replied: "Judging by the deference showed by officers and men, the cheery 'good morning, Sir,' of the former, the correct salute of the latter, as one has met them on the road or moved among them in camp, or at headquarters behind the line, it might have been 'general,' certainly it could not have been less than 'colonel.'" One's age and appearance had some part in producing this result; but the greater part, doubtless, had some connection with Carlyle's "clothes philosophy." The uniform and trench-coat make a difference.

Being greeted in such a way, wherever one goes, certainly induces a feeling of exaltation. The corrective is often supplied, however, as one hears the derisive comment by a group of passing soldiers on their comrade's action in making the proper salute—"he's only a ——y Y.M. worker." That's the rank—simply a Y.M.C.A. worker, leaving out the adjective indicated by the blank. It is as honourable as any office in the army, and, making allowance for occasional mistakes due to appearance, uniform, &c., the respect shown everywhere is a grateful recognition of the valuable and beneficent services rendered under the sign of the "red triangle." Indeed, the Y.M.C.A. worker is often the envy of the Army Chaplain, who, in many cases, would be glad to divest himself of his official rank in order to be able to enjoy that frank and unembarrassed comradeship with the men on active service which is the precious privilege of the Y.M.C.A. worker in every station.

Of what sort are these workers? A few are retired business men over military age, some Oxford and Cambridge graduates and theological students, but most of them are clergy and ministers who have been set free by their churches for short periods of service. In the district where my work lay it was the custom to hold a workers' meeting every Sunday morning. It was held at one of the Huts well behind the line, but the devotions were often accompanied by the boom of cannon or the sharp reports of anti-aircraft guns. Thither came the Hut leaders and helpers from stations at distances of two or three miles, 'Varsity men, theological students, Anglican clergy, Wesleyan, Methodist, Congregational, Baptist, Presbyterian, Scotch Free Church, and Unitarian ministers, all in happy comradeship.

The genial and indefatigable District Secretary, a son of a Congregational minister in Australia, usually presided and conducted the devotions. Hymns, reading, prayer, address, in which all at one time or another took part, formed the programme of proceedings. The president gave a brotherly welcome to newcomers, and sped, with hearty goodwill, the departing workers; reported on matters of organisation; told the story of the heroic efforts and services of our comrades in positions of peril; and besought prayers on behalf of the workers and the work. The reward for any exertion and inconvenience in attending these meetings was always an uplift of soul. Our differences in intellectual outlook were as nothing compared with the unity of spirit experienced in these informal meetings. We got down to the basic facts of religious life—brotherhood, sympathy, service, and the practice of the presence of God.

And the work? The Hut where I was stationed for the greater part of my time out there was built on a mud-swamp by the roadside, at a distance of about two miles from the battle-front. In the rear were the living and sleeping apartments. The principal features of the main Hut were the counter and its appurtenances, tables, and platform. We were attached to a company whose camp was just on the other side of the road. We drew army rations, and, to the advantage of the palate, cooked them ourselves. Within a mile, half-a-dozen other regiments were encamped. From the hill-side just beyond the Hut one got an expansive view of the line of battle.

The Hut was daily and nightly at the disposal of any soldiers from the camps in the immediate neighbourhood. Men on their way to or from the trenches used it freely for rest and refreshment. Working parties, in the intervals of duty, dropped in to satisfy their needs. In the evenings concerts and entertainments were abundantly provided—the talent, for the most part, being provided by the troops. On more than one occasion we had Queen's Hall talent—pianist, violinist, and vocalist, now privates in the army, had formerly entertained the élite at Queen's Hall, London. Facilities are offered for letter writing, and it was often pathetic to see the war-stained men earnestly filling their sheets of note-paper with such information as they are allowed to communicate to their loved ones as to their condition. Each evening the gramophone, or concert, or hilarious banter was stopped, at about 8 o'clock, for a few moments, while a passage of Scripture was read and family prayer was offered. Some of the most precious memories I bring back are those of the response to religious appeal expressed in prayer and heart to heart address at these and the Sunday services.

The worker cannot complain of lack of variety in work. In one day he may fill the rôle of chambermaid, cook, kitchenmaid, mechanic, carpenter, painter, counter-hand, accountant, stage-manager, spiritual adviser, and leader in the soul's devotions. He feels the force of George Herbert's familiar lines:—

A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for thy laws
Makes that and the action fine.

"Do you see that private with the mules and the watercart?" said my co-worker to me one day as we stood at the door of the Hut; "In civil life he is the organist at Ely Cathedral." One day I went down to headquarters for stores, and as I approached saw two brawny middle aged men unloading heavy cases from a Motor Transport lorry. They were not only brawny but brainy. One was a clergyman, the son of the distinguished Dean Farrar, the other was Headmaster of the Guiseboro' Grammar School. Needless to say, with such fine examples, the minister of Stalybridge willingly made a third.

The workers, with rare exceptions, experience the joy that comes from comradeship in service. Their eyes behold daily what our brave lads are doing and enduring, for our sakes; they know the perils and dangers they are cheerfully facing day by day; and they feel that the best they have of thought, religious assurance, and physical strength is all too poor to bestow in ministration to their need. Wherever our soldiers are congregated—at the bases, near the rest camps, and in the trenches along the far-flung battle-line—the Y.M.C.A. Hut or dug-out, with its staff of voluntary workers, offers facilities for comfort and cheer. There the lads find a link with home, rest from the effects of their wearying, nerve-exhausting and perilous toil, recreation of mind and body, inspiration and strength for persistence in duty. Never have I had part in such soul-stirring services as with the men on the eve of action. The hymns—'O, love that will not let me go,' 'Nearer my God to Thee,' 'Peace, perfect peace,' and such as these—general favourites—sung with wonderful heartiness, had for them deeper and intenser meaning than ever before. Barrage fire from the great guns surrounding the Hut often broke in upon our prayers with terrific fierceness, and then we thought of our comrades who were at that moment "going over," many of them to face death.

Our soldiers will have cause, in the after-time, to associate some of their most solemn moments with their fellowship in these rude Huts, for they have been to them as "the house of God and the gate of heaven." Even now, wherever one goes, in the dug-outs, in the trenches, in casualty clearing stations, one hears grateful recognition by officers and men of the work of the Y.M.C.A. To have held the responsible position of Leader in this work, to have enjoyed the experience of comradeship with noble men holding different theological views, but at one in the spirit of service, to have been permitted to see and appreciate the moral of our men in action in this tremendous struggle for democracy and liberty, is accounted as one of the greatest privileges of my life, and it fills me with memories of high emprise which will remain as long as memory lasts.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

The great events which are happening in the world seem to have no message for our artists, and apart from numerous khaki portraits, a few battle scenes, and some uninspired and painstaking allegorical studies which can only be recalled with a shudder, there is practically no indication at the Royal Academy in the fourth year of the war that the world is in a state of upheaval such as has never been experienced before in the history of mankind. That being so, it is impossible to regard the Exhibition as anything more than a collection of more or less agreeable pictures, some of them pretty enough, many of them interesting because they are portraits of notabilities about whom we all talk a good deal, but none of them capable of quickening the imagination or thrilling the soul with the rapture of high vision and immaterial ideals.

Some of the landscapes, of course, are charming, notably those by Bertram Priestman, with their fresh, breezy atmosphere; and David Murray's two pictures of Ullswater bring back dreams of long, quiet, summer days amidst the lakes and fells where Wordsworth's great spirit was nurtured and taught. Miss Hilda Fearon's 'The Road Across the Downs'; 'The Kite,' by Harold Harvey; and several other pictures of the same genre, are full of brilliant sunshine, and it is clear that the passion for a hard, bright light which leaves nothing unrevealed has captivated a certain school of clever painters, to the exclusion of that mystery of half-lights which Corot, who found no inspiration even in the glades of his beloved Fontainébleau in the hot glare of noon, knew so well how to interpret. The shimmering light in 'Australian December,' by Arthur Streeton, has a rather different quality, and the great stretch of country, stifled with heat, seen through a cleft in the rocks, is wrapped in the soft blue haze of distance. Mr. Tom Mostyn's 'Garden of Memories,' too, is pleasantly mellow in tone, and conveys a note of restfulness—should we rather say, pensiveness?—in spite of its masses of brilliant flowers and its somewhat theatrical style of composition. Frankly, it is difficult to know what to make of Mr. William Strang's 'Youth and Age,' which also suffers from hardness, and violates our sense of the fitness of things in a very cruel way. "Youth" is just a successful young business man in a silk hat (you can see the roofs and towers of the city, surely in America, where he is pursuing his career, in the background); "Age" is a bent old man in a green dressing-gown; and between them stands a red-winged angel of most austere countenance, who watches their meeting with interest. A clever but unattractive piece of work!

Many people will be arrested by the picture of Christ looking over a stretch of snow-covered country, set thick with wooden crosses (J. C. A. Dollman), and by the more ambitious study, 'The Silent Witness,' representing the interior of a fine old church in France or Flanders, the ruined nave of which is given up to wounded men who lie in the straw along its whole length. Here, again, the chief interest centres in the unearthly figure, clothed in light, passing down between the two lines of recumbent men, and if it has little power to deeply stir us it cannot be said that this is due to any lack of conscientious effort on the part of the painter, Mr. Herbert Schmalz. The picture of young John Cornwell, V.C., painted for the Admiralty by Mr. Frank O. Salisbury, is obviously interesting by reason of the heroic deed which it commemorates, and occupies a large central position in Gallery No. III.

Among the portraits 'The Right Hon. Winston Churchill, M.P.,' 'Col. Elkington, D.S.O.,' and Viscount Bryce, by William Orpen; Mr. John Lavery's fine 'Mrs. Morrison-Bell,' and Christopher Williams's portrait of the Premier, are perhaps the most notable. There are, of course, any number of military men in uniform, but not quite so many women in wonderful gowns as usual. Mr. F. Cadogan Cowper's decorative work, 'Our Lady of the Fruits of the Earth,' deserves some mention for its sumptuous treatment of colour, its crowding kine, and garlands of apples; and it is not possible to overlook Lavery's ambitious triptych, 'The Madonna of the Lakes,' although the central figure, with the big shadowy eyes and curious air of a modern woman of the world posing, does not quite convey the religious emotions associated with the worship of Our Lady.

Among names in the catalogue specially familiar to our readers are Mr. H. J. R. Herford, who contributes a spirited picture representing the 'Ironsides at Basing, 1645,' and Miss Frances Drummond, whose dainty 'Garden in Sussex' and 'The Clearing in the Wood,' in the Water-Colour Room, are both full of spring freshness and the blossoms of April.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

WAR MEMORIALS IN OUR CHURCHES.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Our congregations are rightly giving thought to numerous "after-war" problems touching on their life and activity in the future; may I call attention to one which, for good or ill, will have a deep effect on those who worship in our churches for generations to come?

No congregation remains unaffected by the war, and in almost every case there have been or will be members of the church or school who have given their lives in the service of the country, and whose sacrifice will call for worthy commemoration in their place of worship. Such memorials will be of two kinds—those given in honour of individuals by their family or relatives, and those referring to several members of a church, given by the congregation as a whole (that is, the Church "Roll of Honour" in its original and restricted meaning). It is desirable to consider how we have dealt with similar matters in the past, and whether there is any means of ensuring that, as far as possible, our churches shall gain and not lose in their outward effect and in their power of creating a worshipful atmosphere.

The collective memorial is usually raised through the committee of the congregation, or, at any rate, comes before it in detail and may receive prolonged attention; but the individual case is a more difficult and delicate matter. We may assume that the committee is always informed of a proposed memorial by the donor, and permission is asked for placing it in the building; but it may often happen that the scheme or design is never submitted for approval, and there is no opportunity for discussion or criticism, while even if the opportunity is given criticism may be left unspoken from a natural feeling that the only right and sympathetic attitude to such a gift is one of unquestioning acceptance—the more unquestioning in proportion to the influence of the donor and the elaboration of the memorial. Consequently, owing to our inveterate independence as self-governing congregations, mere want of knowledge has wrought much harm in our churches, which might have been avoided with the aid of some outside advice and experience; and too often work which demands the highest standard of artistic skill and craftsmanship is entrusted to a local decorator, or to the ecclesiastical furnisher who provides Gothic choir-stalls at so much a yard from a catalogue.

Consider, for example, the stained-glass window, always a favourite form of memorial: during the Gothic revival of the last century, no method of decoration produced such disastrous results in every type of cathedral or church, our own included, because it was not realised that stained-glass design is one of the most difficult of the arts, demanding not only the powers of drawing and colouring which the painter must possess, but also a special knowledge of technical methods and limitations, due to the construction of a window, and to its function as a means of admitting light and not merely as a piece of decoration. Even to-day the masters of this art (with Henry Holiday at their head) may almost be counted on one hand, but their names are quite well known to those of us whose occupations or interests have to do with the arts, and some of their best work can be seen here and there in our churches throughout the country.

The same may be said of any other form which a memorial might take, from the simple inscribed wall tablet to a complete organ, or an addition to the structure of the building; whether woodwork, metal work, or marble is in question, admirable design and craftsmanship are now available, but many of our church members and committees simply do not know where to look for them. It may, perhaps, be objected that work of such high quality is expensive, or again that local talent should be encouraged rather than remote celebrity. As to expense, if it is a matter that is surely a reason for limiting the quantity rather than the quality of the memorial; while the mere fact of being "local" does not confer merit on work which is not good in itself, and all that can be claimed on this point is that if other qualifications are equal, the local man will probably throw a greater personal interest into his work.

Of nicely calculated less or more,

What we seem to need is some recognised source of guidance to which individuals or congregations could apply if they wished for suggestions as to the choice of artist or the treatment of a building. In particular the older chapels of the Meeting-House type require very careful consideration, because they have suffered so greatly in the last century from misguided attempts to infuse some Gothic character into them. Fortunately, their real beauty and historical value are now better appreciated, but some of the obvious forms of memorial are here unsuitable, and usually the best method of adornment would be to restore their original design and arrangement so far as it is consistent with the requirements of modern worship.

Some years ago the National Conference established a Board which provides information and advice, when requested to do so, in regard to vacant pulpits and ministerial changes; it appears to carry out these functions without undermining our congregational independence, and its help has been sought and welcomed in a large number of cases. I think that the Conference might render a great service to its churches by appointing an Advisory Committee on War Memorials, with similar methods of action, which should draw together those who have experience on this side of church life, and make their advice and assistance available for all.—Yours, &c.,

Ronald P. Jones.

–th Division, Retford.

NATIONAL SERVICE.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—I notice that an attempt is being made to enlist the services of men over military age for part-time national usefulness. This movement ought to succeed. It should appeal to many who have genuinely regretted their inability to take their share in the national service. The success of this voluntary movement will, I think, largely depend upon the methods employed. National service from the very nature of the case covers an exceedingly wide ground. It should take into account the national needs with the necessary wide vision of interpretation. I suggest that the man or woman who assists in a soldiers' canteen is doing national service. Other services relating to the comfort of the soldiers must also surely come under the same heading.

Apart from this class of work, national service should be open to the inquirer who is willing to give most of the evenings of the week to the practical assistance of some tradesman who has had to leave his business and go into the army. A local committee should be in full possession of all the facts. Clerical work at public offices might well be shared. Local War Saving Associations also offer an opportunity for usefulness In many similar ways the man or woman who really wishes to devote leisure hours to the cause of national service will find work to do. It is all a question of wise direction.

I have one last suggestion to make. There must be many members of our churches capable of rendering good and useful service in Church, Sunday school, or some associated movement. Ministers are in some cases away on active service; some churches are without the necessary staff for Sunday school or choir. Here, then, is an opportunity for real service, and whether we call it local or national it will be at least an earnest of good intention.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. Jacobsen.

Liverpool, May 2, 1917.

PROHIBITION DURING THE WAR.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me through your columns to suggest that an opportunity has been given the Church to unite in a definite act for the good of our country, and of humanity in general? On one at least of the Sundays on which the King's Food Economy Proclamation is enjoined to be read aloud in all the churches and chapels of the land, the minister and congregation at the close of the service should pass a resolution urging the Prime Minister to secure Prohibition during the period of the war and of demobilisation. Here is an occasion when the Church is asked by the State to give support to one necessary way of helping our country in her great need, and hereby is thrown in the way of the Church an opportunity not only of fulfilling a patriotic duty, but of extending that duty to our country by giving a lead to the Government in enforcing another most obvious and urgent economy. Hereby an opportunity is also given for "all who profess and call themselves Christians," instead of talking and writing so much about religion, and the desire for Christian unity, to do a religious deed, and a real act of Christianity, which will have very far-reaching practical and spiritual results.—Yours, &c.,

Emily H. Smith.

24 Langdale Road,
Victoria Park,
Manchester.

May 7, 1917.

THE MINISTERS' MEETING AND WHIT-WEEK.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—The members of the London Unitarian Ministers' Meeting invite their brethren from the country to a Conference to be held at Essex Hall on the Thursday morning of Whit-week (May 31), at 11 o'clock, when Dr. Jacks, Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, will speak on 'What ought we, as Ministers, to do After the War?' As the Whit-week meetings offer special opportunities of ministerial intercourse and help, may I suggest that members of our churches might kindly take into consideration the question of the increased railway fares, and in sending their ministers to London might this year render assistance in defraying these extra travelling expenses?—Yours, &c.,

Frederick Summers,
Hon. Secretary of the London Unitarian Ministers' Meeting.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

MR. G. GOOLD WARD.

The death of Mr. George Goold Ward of Belfast, which occurred on April 23, at his residence, Iva-craig, Craigavad, co. Down, came as a shock to his many friends. Only 56 years of age, he appeared in his usual health up to a few hours before a sudden heart attack proved fatal. The eldest surviving son of the late Mr. F. D. Ward, J.P., of the well-known firm of Marcus Ward & Co., he began his business career with the latter, and attained therein a prominent position. He joined the Sirocco Works, Belfast, twenty-one years ago, and was appointed a director when the company became a limited concern in 1898. The deceased was connected by family and by close personal ties with the First Presbyterian Church, Belfast, serving most efficiently on its General and Music Committees, and ever manifesting the keenest interest in all that ministered to its success. Possessed of a kindly, genial character, most people found Mr. Ward easily approached, and he made many friends. He was a good business man, and had a fresh, vivid interest in life which had been widened and strengthened by foreign travel, of which he was very fond, and concerning which he could speak in a most fascinating way. His sudden death was the cause of wide and deep regret, and heartfelt sympathy was expressed for Mrs. Ward in her bereavement. The funeral took place on April 26, the service in the house and at the graveside being conducted by the Rev. H. J. Rossington, minister of the First Presbyterian Church. The latter also made sympathetic allusion to Mr. Ward's death at morning service on April 29.

CAPT. D. P. HIRSCH.

The loss of Philip Hirsch, whose death was announced in The Inquirer last week, is yet another grievous blow to Willaston. He was a member of the school from May, 1908, to December, 1914. During that time he made his mark in every department of the school life. Of intellectual powers much above the ordinary, he did well in almost every subject; and special study in Modern History resulted in his winning an open exhibition at Worcester College, Oxford, when he was only 18. He was a good all-round athlete, his favourite game being cricket. And in his last year he was a most energetic and efficient Head of the School. Under normal circumstances he would have stayed on at school for another year; but he felt that he was needed elsewhere. He joined the Leeds University O.T.C. in January, 1915, and was gazetted in April. After nearly a year's training, in which he attained high efficiency as a machine gun officer, he went out to France with his battalion early in 1916. He was wounded on the Somme in September, was promoted, and shortly before his death was gazetted captain. He fell leading his men with the utmost gallantry, under circumstances which must have resulted in further recognition had he survived.

What his loss means to his regiment is very evident from the letters which have been received. But it is much more than that. One who clearly knew him well writes: "I think he was the most modest man I have ever met, as he certainly was the bravest. You had to know him some time before you discovered how very much above the common level of the rest of us he was, and then every day in his company, and every fresh talk with him, revealed a new and more delightful aspect. He was full of enthusiasms, he never touched or took up a subject without giving it his whole self.... I do not know, and never inquired, what he purposed to be in after life. Whatever the profession or calling was, it is hopelessly impoverished by his death. He would have introduced into it all that he essentially was and would be: unflinching, true, and straight-dealing, with a vehement passion for abstract justice." It is hardly necessary to add that such a nature was a happy one; and we may believe that no moments in his life were happier than the last.

Willastonians will like to know that he has bequeathed to the school his pictures and a large part of his library. They will be a cherished possession; but no such help was needed to keep green his memory. H. L. J.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

121st List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,777	4	1
Highgate Unitarian Church (seventeenth monthly donation)	5	18	10
Miss Winkworth (eighth donation)	5	0	0
X. (twenty-seventh donation)	1	0	0
Miss Edith C. Harvey (tenth donation)	3	0	0
Mr. John Sale (sixth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Chitty (thirty-third donation) ..	8	0	0
Miss Grace Holmes, Calais (fourth donation)	1	1	0
Miss L. Colton and the Misses Gillespie (twenty-third donation)	0	7	6
Mrs. Fellows Pearson (eleventh donation)	7	10	0
Miss Fellows Pearson (eighth donation)	4	10	0
Miss Gairdner (fifth donation)	2	2	0
Miss Mary B. Lamb (tenth donation)	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Nanson (eighth donation)	10	0	0
Mr. L. N. Williams (twelfth donation)	1	1	0
	£16,833	14	5

Parcels have been received from: Miss Warren; Miss E. D. Higginson; A Friend in Oxford; Mrs. Blake; Mrs. Dent; Miss Mary B. Lamb; Miss Lawford; Messrs. Frank Green & Co.; Mrs. Rayner Wood; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas); West Grove Women's League, Cardiff (per Mrs. A. C. Fox); Miss Short.

WEEKLY NOTES.

I have just returned home after nearly six weeks in France. I spent some time in Calais, chiefly concerned in arrangements for the development of the work in our Hut. In spite of the extensions made about Christmas-time (and paid for out of the profits), we were very cramped for room, and the educational side of the work was especially limited by lack of space. The difficulty has now been happily solved. Some American friends built a fine hut (not much smaller than ours) some months ago on a portion of the ground we had, intending to have a dormitory for the men coming on leave to England and passing the night in Calais. It was not, however, large enough to accommodate all, as it only contained about a hundred beds, and the Belgian army in the meantime erected several huts, also on the same piece of land, capable of sleeping four hundred men. The owners of the American hut kindly came to Calais from Paris and went into the whole matter with me, and the result has been that this splendid hut has been given over to form part of our Club until the end of the war. It is an immense boon for us. The library and reading-room will be placed there. There will be space now for rehearsals by the orchestra (which is becoming famous and in great request in the neighbourhood), for the dramatic societies, French and Flemish, and for the choral society. There will be space for the educational classes, and to these we hope now to add gymnastic and fencing classes. This Hut cost about £1,000 to build (the labour was by the army, so this sum only includes the price of materials used), so it is really a princely gift and worthy of the great American nation.

We have just arranged that once a month the wives and children of soldiers may come to a free entertainment at the Hut. They have special tickets for entrance and have to show their identity papers before these are issued to them. It is a great pleasure to these poor people to come and the men are delighted that their wives should be allowed to accompany them. As the Hut is under strict military rule, it was a little difficult to arrange this, but the first entertainment of the sort was given before I left and was a great success.

While in Calais I visited the Belgian front and saw some of the hospitals nearest to the trenches. These are situated in Belgium near the Yser, and it is impossible not to see how happy the men are to be in their own land, and how much they dislike being sent away into a foreign country. Of course, they must go, as room must be made for the next batch of wounded, but it made me long for the day when being sent back need not mean being sent out of their country. Hopes have been very high lately, and with good reason, but before that happy day comes there will be sad work in the hospitals. The latest field hospital which the Belgian army has established, just behind the lines, is a model of all a hospital should be. It is, of course, in huts, but they are all connected by corridors, so that patients and nurses are not obliged to go outside when passing from one hut to another. The Queen of the Belgians takes a keen interest in this hospital, and had visited it the day before I did. It is largely owing to her gifts that it is so well installed. The Director is a doctor we have known since the beginning of this Fund, as we were able to aid him when he was struggling with great difficulties and trying to do his surgical work in a house in a little street in Dunkirk under most depressing conditions. It is delightful to see him now, where he is able to perform his surgical miracles under conditions which give the patients the best possible chance of making a good recovery.

After leaving Calais, I saw a little of the French front near Rheims, and then visited Rouen and Le Havre.

Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Helpless shirts in thin flannel or flannelette.
Pyjamas.
Shirts and socks.
Slippers, handkerchiefs, towels.
Games of all sorts, especially cards.
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns sent free).
Chemises for women and girls.
Treasure bags (10 by 12 in.), in coloured washing materials.

I have now a new consignment of grey wool, suitable for socks, &c. I shall be glad to sell it for 4*s.* 6*d.* a lb., carriage free.

Subscribers who supported Robert Behëyt, the little cripple boy, at Berck for a year's treatment, will be glad to know that he is much better and able to walk about. He is now at the Belgian Colonie Scolaire at La Chartreuse, and is no further expense to us.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

AMERICAN UNITARIANS AND THE WAR.

The following letter has been sent on behalf of the American Unitarian Association to the Unitarian Churches in the United States :—

To the Ministers and Congregation of the Unitarian Fellowship.

In the name of our Fellowship of Free Churches we greet you and welcome you to the new responsibilities and the unparalleled opportunity of spiritual leadership to which the times are summoning us all. You feel and understand better than any words of ours can express that this great war for freedom and humanity, into which we have entered, is to be won not only by the development and organisation of the material and military powers of our land, but also by the spiritual forces which are cherished and upbuilt within the churches.

Shall it not be our high privilege not only to prepare ourselves for the stout defence of human rights, but also to quicken the larger sympathies, to reinforce character, to perpetuate the chivalric spirit with which America takes up arms, and to proclaim the spiritual significance of the ideals that animate us ?

The old meeting-houses of our forefathers in New England were shrines of patriotism as well as houses of prayer and praise. We believe that in the present crisis you will maintain that tradition and prove that our churches are still the places where the people can find the enduring inspirations of courage and faith.

We trust that the flag will be honourably displayed in every church. We hope that no service of public worship will be completed without prayer that the counsels of the nation may be guided by wisdom and so directed as to promote the reign of righteousness and secure a just and lasting peace. We are well assured that the validity and compulsion of the moral issues of the great conflict will be emphasised from the pulpit, that we may all be firmly persuaded that it is our duty to bear all burdens and endure all risks for the principles which are our best inheritance and which we cannot sacrifice without dishonour to ourselves and infinite and irreparable loss to mankind.

"With malice toward none ; with charity for all ; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right," let us enter upon these great adventures because we are still highly resolved that "government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

William Howard Taft,
President of the General Conference.

Samuel A. Eliot,
President of the American Unitarian Association.

Anna M. Bancroft,
President of the Alliance of Unitarian Women.

Boston, Mass.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The eighty-second Annual Meeting of the London Domestic Mission Society was held at Lindsey Hall, on Tuesday evening, May 8, the chair being occupied by Mr. Charles Martineau, Chairman of Committee. Owing to the fact that it was urgently desired that the best ways of increasing the financial resources of the Society should be discussed as fully as possible by the meeting, in view of the grave possibility of being obliged to curtail the work before very long if the situation does not improve, the reading of the annual report and the motion for its adoption were deferred until after Dr. Philip Wicksteed, Mrs. Wallace Bruce, Mr. Philip Roscoe, and the three Missionaries—the Revs. F. Summers, W. H. Rose, and A. Golland—had spoken.

After the introductory remarks of the chairman, who explained the reason for changing the order of proceedings, Dr. Wicksteed moved the first resolution, expressing the confidence of the meeting in the principles of the Society, and recording its appreciation of the earnest and faithful labours of the missionaries and their wives and helpers. It was not to be expected, he said, that they were about to hear anything new. They had to go back to the commonplaces, but to understand the commonplaces, and be able to convert truisms into realised truths, was really to live. Our age is one in which the highly organised division of labour is a central fact, and owing to this many of the personal ties which used to hold society together, and which humanised the relations between men working in different grades, were being loosened. Many beautiful things were always lost in the transition from one stage of society to another, but it was vain to look back to the past, the beauty of which they were apt to exaggerate in retrospect, though they could be sure that all that was good in it would not be destroyed. The immortality of good was certain, its effect was cumulative, and more good was added to it. With this apparent breaking up of the industrial world and the specialisation of labour, however, there was a growing detritus, a dust of humanity that belonged to no coherent whole, and which no organisations really touched. A diffused sense of collective responsibility and understanding was also growing, and we were learning to realise that what was nobody's business was everybody's business, even though we had no heroic remedies, and could not meet the needs of these people by merely saying that we must get rid of this or that social condition. We were developing a sense of responsibility in regard to the failures, or apparent failures, of the competitive system, so that every one who had won in the battle, or the lottery, whichever term they used, was beginning to understand what his duty was towards those who had drawn blanks. They must get rid of the idea that failure should be treated penally. If failure was met with humanity and tenderness, as it would be in our own families, we should see more and more how enormous the divergence really was between merit and success, and between folly and failure, in the relentless working of the great social and industrial machine. As an instance of the way in which this collective sense of responsibility could be used to lighten the lot of those who, through no fault of their own, had to face a cruel struggle for existence, Dr. Wicksteed referred to the difference which old age pensions had made in the lives of the poor, a difference to which any one who lived in a village, and knew something of the desperate efforts which were made to hold on and keep out of the workhouse till the pension became available, could testify. Amidst all the horrors of the present time, there were some things which would be of value to them in the future. For instance, it would never again be possible to say, when a measure had been agreed upon as urgent and desirable, that they could not afford it. They might make mistakes, but never again could they admit that the people were perishing and going astray, and that, knowing how to stop all this, they could not face the expense. They had mortgaged their future, they had given up their pleasures, they had cut down their supplies, and had even learnt for the first time in their lives to get up from a meal with a hearty appetite, in order to hound men into the blood and mire ; would they be able to say that they "could not afford" to get them out of it ?

But all this organisation, however wisely carried out, said Dr. Wicksteed, did not dispense with the offices of personal friendship, or make up for the beautifying of life by the development of intimacy with those with whom we are not brought into regular personal contact through similarity of tastes or interests. We have such contracted notions of the things that matter when we live entirely among the people who have the catchword of the club to which we belong, who use the same expressions, and have the same habits as ourselves. If we got into contact with people whose conventions and scale of ethical values were different from our own—people, perhaps, who think less of getting drunk and more of letting a neighbour starve while they had a good meal, a point of view which we often reverse—we should find that downright character is just about evenly distributed, we should come to realise its significance, and get a straight view of humanity. A friend of his, a fine, sensitive man, who had been greasing engines in a mine-sweeping trawler, and had a good deal of intercourse with people whose habits were offensive and whose language was horrible, had told him that the thing that overwhelmed him most was the humanity of it all. It was because we so seldom had a chance of discovering this humanity that many a man who had missed his opportunities, and suffered hardships he did not deserve, lost his clue, simply for want of someone with real knowledge of him who would watch over him, help him round a corner, and give him thoughts to cheer him in his depression. This was the sort of help that the missions provided, and where there were men who had the gift of making themselves the friends of those who most needed friendship, others who had not similar opportunities could receive a little direction in their efforts to do the same thing, and could try to keep these beneficial activities going in the dark places of the world. Here they came to the question of money. People sometimes spoke disparagingly of money—he had done it himself—as if it took the gloss off acts of friendship and intercourse. But he had learnt to respect money now, he even loved the tax-gatherer, and the more tax-gatherers they could put on to the job of taking over money for humane purposes the better. Money was the symbol of the machinery by which people could convert the power or the talent which they possessed into the thing they desired, and by which they procured for themselves or others that which they could not obtain without it—whether it was a missionary for South Africa or the London slums, a beautiful picture, or lessons in Greek. It was a wonderful instrument, and what it accomplished was nothing less than magical. They must not despise money, nor hold it cheaply, but remember that it gave them this power to achieve their purpose, whatever that purpose might be.

Mrs. Wallace Bruce, in seconding the resolution, said that the same power of imagination which had made us realise the horrors we are going through now should help us to clear away the arrears into which we had got through social neglect, and to take advantage of the opportunities which offered of making those friendships of which Dr. Wicksteed had spoken. We had come closer to suffering humanity of late than we had ever done before, and we ought to feel that nothing was too much to give, either in money or in work, to help the men who were keeping the missions going.

The Missionaries gave very encouraging reports of their work, the need for ; which has, of course, increased owing to the difficulties of the time, and Mr. Golland took the opportunity of warmly defending the women—at all events, of the district with which he is best acquainted—from the wholesale charges of drunkenness which had lately been brought against them. The resolution was adopted.

The Report of the Committee was read by the Hon. Secretary, the Rev. F. K. Freeston. It was very short, as the necessity for economy of paper and print had to be taken into consideration, and for the same reason the Missionaries' statements were exceedingly brief. Although the expenditure for the past year had been the very lowest possible, no painting or extensive repairs having been carried on at any of the three Missions, it nevertheless exceeded the income—setting legacies aside—by £450, and it is pointed out that if the reserve fund is drawn upon in the next three years to the same extent as in recent years, the prospect of reducing the work of the society must be faced. The following suggestions were submitted for discussion, with a view to increasing the funds: (1) the appointment of local treasurers; (2) the offer of a special preacher on the occasion of a mission collection; (3) the printing of explanatory leaflets to place in the pews; (4) the publication of a History of the Society; (5) the increase of amounts by present donors and subscribers. The resignation, through war pressure, of the Treasurer, Mr. Philip Roscoe, has been received with great regret, and Miss C. R. Holland has been appointed Treasurer for the year. Miss Holland read the Treasurer's report, and spoke of the seriousness of the financial position. In the course of the evening it was announced that several subscribers had expressed their willingness to increase their subscription.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Reports, said that it had been decided by the Committee that the present was not a suitable time to make a special appeal, but that it was a good opportunity for considering most carefully and anxiously what methods could be adopted to ease the situation. He himself approved of the appointment of local treasurers, who could find many opportunities of influencing the right people and getting the money that was needed, and he also strongly advocated that the younger members of families which, in the past, had been noted for their public spirit should be represented on the executive. If the rising generation was not captured betimes a golden opportunity would be lost, and the young people would find an outlet for their energies elsewhere. At present the youthful element was not sufficiently represented on their committees or in the circle of voluntary helpers. The motion was seconded by Mr. Philip Roscoe, who said that the work of the society would always have his warm sympathy, and carried.

A helpful discussion followed, in which Miss Brooke Herford, Mr. Withall, the Rev. Travers Herford, Mr. Roscoe, Mr. Gimson, Mr. A. A. Tayler, Mrs. Herford, the Rev. J. H. Weatherall, and others took part. A resolution of thanks to the committee and officers for their services, moved by Mr. Withall, and seconded by Mr. Tayler, was passed, and the meeting ended with a vote of thanks to the committee of Lindsey Hall and the Essex Street congregation for their hospitality, moved by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, and seconded by the Rev. H. Horsley.

LAWRENCE HOUSE.

The Hostel at Lawrence House will be ready for the accommodation of men on active service on and after Monday, May 21. There are six bedrooms; and the Committee will be glad if ministers and secretaries of congregations will inform any soldiers or sailors who are likely to be passing through, or visiting London, and who desire accommodation to apply, as long beforehand as possible, to the Matron, Lawrence House, 1 Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C.2.

An entertainment in aid of the Royal Red Cross and the Highgate V.A.D. War Hospital Supply Depot, will be given by the pupils of Channing House School in the Spears Memorial Hall, Highgate Hill, on Saturday, May 19, at 8 p.m. The programme includes 'A Pageant of Poetry' and 'Tableaux and Songs from Nursery Rhymes.' Tickets, price 2*s.* 2*d.* (reserved) and 1*s.* 2*d.*, may be obtained from Miss H. Miskin at the school.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES

Bedfield.—On Friday, April 20, an Entertainment of songs, recitations, &c., was given in the Unitarian Chapel by scholars of the Sunday school and friends from other denominations, presided over by the minister, the Rev. W. H. Sands. The room was filled with an appreciative audience from Bedfield and neighbouring villages. Miss Beatrice Smith, who had previously given up her scanty leisure to help in the practising of songs, &c., was at the piano.

Hackney.—A large congregation assembled on Sunday evening, May 6, at the New Gravel Pit Church, to commemorate the life and death of Rifleman W. V. Adlam, Rifle Brigade, who was killed in action on April 4. Mr. Adlam, who had been attached to the New Gravel Pit Church for the past four or five years, had served on the Church committee, and was the secretary of the Dramatic Society. His quiet, unassuming manner, integrity of character, and attractive personality had won for him the respect and affection of all who knew him. His foreman and many of those associated with him in his work were present at the service.

The winter's programme comes to an end to-day, with a concert by members of the choir, which is now almost entirely composed of teachers and scholars of the school, who are doing exceedingly well. The events of the season have included a Winter Fête, which cleared £50; two Jumble Sales which realised £25; Sunday evening Lantern Services after the usual evening service; and a course of lectures by the Rev. Bertram Lister on 'Phases of the English Drama,' with a supplementary lecture on Brieux's play 'Damaged Goods.'

Liverpool.—The Rev. Harman Taylor, colleague of the Rev. J. C. Odgers at Ullet Road Church, with the sanction of the Church Council has offered his services as house-surgeon at the Children's Infirmary in Myrtle Street for the months of May and June, and his help has been gratefully accepted. Mr. Taylor hopes to be able to continue his usual duties on Sundays, both in the Church and Sunday school.

Llandyssul.—The Rev. T. Arthur Thomas, minister of the churches at Pantydefaid and Llandyssul, has been elected chairman of the Cardiganshire County Council. For the past seventeen years he has acted as editor of Yr Ymofynydd, and for ten years as secretary of the South Wales Unitarian Association. Ten years ago Mr. Thomas was elected a member of Cardiganshire County Council and has held the position of alderman for several years. He has also been a member of Newcastle Emlyn Board of Guardians and of the District Council, a governor of Llandyssul County School, being chairman for three years, and a member of the Board of Visitors of the Joint Counties Asylum where he has also occupied the chair.

London: Peckham.—Many friends connected with the congregations at Wandsworth, Stepney Green, and Peckham will hear with great regret that Second Lieut. A. C. Montford, Machine Gun Corps, brother-in-law of the Rev. Herbert Hawkins, was killed in action on May 4, under circumstances of great gallantry. His childhood was spent at Wandsworth, and after school days were over he entered the Banking Department of Messrs. Thos. Cook and Son, Ludgate Hill, and later joined the staff of the London and Westminster Bank at Charing Cross. In 1915 he joined the army as a private in the Welsh Fusiliers, and saw over six months' trench fighting in France. Returning to England, he studied for his Army Examination at Trinity College, Cambridge, and, passing successfully, spent some time training his men in the Machine Gun Corps. He left again for the front in March of this year, and was killed by a sniper while bandaging his sergeant, who had just been similarly hit. Previous to this he had gone to the assistance of another wounded man who was calling out for help. One of his fellow-officers, writing to Mrs. Hawkins, speaks in warm terms of the splendid work which 2nd Lieut. Montford was doing up to the time of his death, and of his popularity among both officers and men. The latter, he says, whom he trained himself for months in England, are inconsolable. He will be remembered at the three churches named above as a scholar, teacher, and church worker of frank, courageous, and cheerful disposition, with a genius for making friends, and a great love of children and animals. His eldest brother is now on active service in France, a second is expecting to be sent abroad shortly, after acting as orderly in a hospital near London, and a third, who was formerly a Continental representative of a London firm of accountants, and in Germany or Austria when war broke out, has not been heard of since 1914, and it is presumed that he is a prisoner.

London: Stratford.—The Sunday School Anniversary and Flower Services were held at the Unitarian Christian Church, West Ham Lane, which was prettily decorated for the occasion, on Sunday, May 6. In the morning the service was conducted by the minister (Mr. Joseph P. Rosling), who gave an address on 'The Song of Spring, and the Joy of the Birthday Season.' The 4th West Ham B.P. Boy Scouts, the 1st Stratford B.P. Girl Guides, and the Hackney Company of the Boys' Own Brigade paraded at this service, and there was a large congregation. In the afternoon, a Scholars' Service was held, at which there were present over 170 young people. Mr. John L. Gerrard, of Manchester College, Oxford, conducted the service, and gave an instructive address on 'Cheating One's Self.' Special hymns were sung, and the infant scholars contributed a little song. In the evening, when Miss Theodora Wilson Wilson (author of the 'Last Weapon,' and editor of The New Crusader) was the preacher, there was also a large congregation. Miss Wilson gave an inspiring and helpful sermon on 'Fidelity to the Principles of Christianity in the time of Crisis.' The Minister assisted in conducting the service, and the choir rendered special anthems, Miss Ethel Frisby being the soloist. After the evening service the flowers were sent to the sick, and to the hospitals in the district. The organists for the day were: morning, Mr. W. J. Noel; afternoon, Miss Ada Frisby; evening, Mr. Robert M. Willes. The services were very successful, and marked an epoch in the good work that is being done in the Sunday school by a willing and active band of teachers and workers who labour week by week under the superintendence of Mr. A. Stephen Noel.

Scottish Unitarian Association.—The 57th Annual Meetings of the Association were held at Ross Street Church, Glasgow, on Friday and Saturday, May 4 and 5. The Friday evening meeting took the form of a public discussion on 'Scottish Unitarianism from the Historical, the Present and Future Aspects,' dealt with respectively by Mr. A. MacLaren, J.P., Glasgow, hon. secretary, the Rev. E. T. Russell, Edinburgh, and the Rev. S. T. Pagesmith, Kirkcaldy. The Business Meeting was held on the Saturday afternoon. The reports presented showed that the Association had, despite the war, carried on its various agencies unimpaired, while a slight increase of membership was recorded. Dr. J. K. Wood, Dundee, President, and Mrs. Barlow and Mr. E. S. Thompson, both of Glasgow, Vice-Presidents, were re-elected. Mr. W. A. Hart, Glasgow, was appointed Hon. Treasurer in place of Mr. V. G. Jennings resigned, and the Rev. L. Jenkins Jones, Glasgow, was appointed Hon. Secretary for twelve months in place of Mr. Alexander MacLaren, who has been called up for military service. Mr. H. A. Nesbitt, M.A., was appointed editor of The Scottish Unitarian, also in lieu of Mr. A. MacLaren. General regret was expressed at Mr. MacLaren's withdrawal after eight years' occupancy of the post of hon. secretary. He succeeded in putting new life into the Association, and more than doubled the membership, and the organisation is now responsible for a great many new activities undertaken during his term of office.

Swinton.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services were held at the Swinton Unitarian Church on Sunday last, May 6. The preacher for the morning and evening services was the resident minister, the Rev. J. H. Ewbank. In the afternoon an address to parents, teachers, and scholars was given by the Rev. T. Wigley, Congregational minister. Special hymns and anthems were rendered by the children of the Sunday school and the choir. All three services were very well attended.

The Rev. Harold Bernard Hannah, a Baptist, has been granted a certificate of fitness for the ministry by the Lancashire and Cheshire Advisory Committee.

Indians and their Dead.

The Maharajah of Bikanir, one of the distinguished Indian delegates to the War Cabinet, recently made a statement in regard to certain sensational accounts which have been given in the press of the way in which the Germans are said to utilise human remains. Such practices would be regarded in his own country, he says, with the greatest detestation and loathing, for in India great reverence is paid to the mortal remains of the dead, and among the Hindus and kindred races cremation is generally (though not exclusively) practised for the very purpose of preventing desecration. The religious sentiments of the people, however, will offer to the bereaved two great consolations. "The first is that most of those Indian soldiers who may have suffered this indignity have presumably been stricken down in battle and have breathed their last on the bosom of mother earth. "The second is that due provision was made by our ancient sages for the omission of ceremonies under various emergencies, and not least that of war. European readers are ordinarily aware of the strong belief of the Mohammedan world that death in battle for a righteous cause ensures immediate entry into Paradise. The Hindus have a similar confidence, for, according to their great law-giver, the soldier slain on the battlefield has made the highest sacrifice and his purification is complete. Manu also gives consolation in the following words: 'As a tree leaves the bank of a river, when it falls in, or as a bird leaves a branch of a tree at its pleasure, thus he who leaves his body by necessity or by legal choice is delivered from the ravening shark, or crocodile, of the world.'"

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WEST HILL ROAD.—"HOLLYHURST." High-Class Apartments. S.W. Sea Views. Rooms from 21s. Modern Sanitation. Near Church. Excellent Cooking.—Mrs. S. A. NEWBURY.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth, S.O.—PAYING GUESTS received.—Particulars from Miss Smith. Telegrams: The Heugh, Askrigg, S.O.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, Thoralby, Aysgarth, S.O.—TO LET, Furnished, 4 bedrooms, 2 sitting-rooms, kitchen, &c.

"FLAXZELLA" DRESS LINEN for Overalls, in bundles of 12 yards, 27 ins. wide, 9*s.* 9*d.* per bundle (postage 6*d.*). Supplied in Wedgwood, Saxe and Rose Pink. Write Bargain List, free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT.—We positively pay highest prices. Up to 7*s.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 12*s.* on silver, 15*s.* on gold, 2*l.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed by the reliable genuine firm.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Marke Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH bought; any condition. 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine. Offers for old Jewellery. Cash by return.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 6*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 12, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3907. NEW SERIES, No. 1010.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London.

The ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS of the ASSOCIATION will be held at ESSEX HALL, LONDON, on WHIT-TUESDAY, MAY 29, 1917.

The Programme of Proceedings will be as follows:—

11 a.m. President's Address. Business Meeting for the Reception of the Report and the Election of Officers. All friends welcome. Followed by a Conference on 'The Year's Work with my Class.'

2.30 p.m. Public Meeting. Address by Mr. T. M. Chalmers, M.A., Honorary Secretary of the Association, on 'Child Religion and the Future Sunday School.' To be followed by discussion.

4.30 p.m. Tea in Small Hall.

T. M. CHALMERS, BERTRAM LISTER } Hon. Secs.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE TWENTY-FOURTH

Annual Public Meeting

WILL BE HELD AT

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET,

STRAND, LONDON,

ON

Friday, 1st June, 1917.

The President, Rev. Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER will take the Chair at 7 p.m.

Lieut.-Colonel C. S. BULLOCK

WILL SPEAK ON

'The Progress of Prohibition in other Lands.'

Business Meeting of Members at 4.30. Tea, 6 p.m.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL

HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May.

20. Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, of Tenterden.

27. Rev. DENDY AGATE, B.A.

BRITISH LEAGUE OF UNITARIAN AND OTHER LIBERAL CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

ANNUAL MEETING,

Wednesday, May 30th, at 2.30,

AT

ESSEX HALL.

Short opening Service conducted by Miss Margaret Crook (Manchester College, Oxford).

Mrs. Blake Odgers (President) in the chair, supported by Mrs. Bernard Allen, Mrs. S. Martineau, Miss Johnstone (President Manchester District League), and Miss Clephan.

All friends cordially invited.

Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society.

NOW READY.

Contents :—The Deeds of the Free Christian Church, Horsham, by R. M. Montgomery, K.C.; Records of a Presbyterian Congregation, by John C. Warren, M.A.; Nonconformity at Norton, by C. J. Street, M.A.; An Open Trust; The Old Meeting, Framlingham; Reviews, Notes and Queries, and other matter. Three Plates, one hundred pages. Subscribers to the Society receive a free copy.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, W.C.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The SWARTHMORE LECTURE for 1917

will be delivered at the Friends' Meeting House,

136 Bishopsgate, E.C.,

On TUESDAY, MAY 22nd

BY

WILLIAM LITTLEBOY

Subject:—"THE DAY OF OUR VISITATION."

The Chair will be taken at 7.30 p.m. by Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH,

WORTHING ROAD, HORSHAM.

144th Whit Sunday Anniversary.

SERMONS BY REV. ALEXANDER GORDON, M.A.

Services.—Morning, 11 a.m.; Evening, 6.15 p.m.
Communion after Morning Service.

3.45 p.m., A MUSICAL HOUR.

The Chair will be taken by the Minister.

Collections Morning and Evening for the London and South-Eastern Provincial Assembly, and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. Luncheon, 1*s.* 6*d.*, Tea, 8*d.* Rooms for the accommodation of visitors will be provided at 14 Worthing Road.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

SAMUEL JONES' FUND.

The MANAGERS meet annually in October for the purpose of making grants. APPLICATIONS must, however, be in hand NOT LATER than MONDAY, JUNE 4, and must be on a form to be obtained from the Secretary, CHAS. E. MARSHALL, 38 Barton Arcade, Manchester.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, May 20.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 7, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. J. P. ROSLING; 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. B. LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN. (Sunday School Anniversary.)

Ilford, High Road, 11, Rev. H. MAGUIRE, B.Sc.; 6.30, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND; 7, Rev. ROBT. KERR LAMBERT, Chaplain C.E.F.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Mr. A. STEPHEN NOEL.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. A. J. HOWARD HULME.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER; 7, Mr. SMITH.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. JOHN BEGG; 6.30, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. HALL.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. TUDOR JONES.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. PRINCIPAL MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc.

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11, Rev. J. C. ODGERS, B.A.; 6.30, Rev. H. TAYLOR.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. D. WALMSLEY.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. J. E. CARPENTER.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATHS.

GOTCH.—On July 1, 1916, killed in action (previously reported wounded and missing, now believed killed), Capt. and Adjt. Roby Myddleton Gotch, Sherwood Foresters, aged 26, only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gotch, of Weekley Rise, near Kettering, and grandson of Mrs. J. M. Perry, of Nottingham.

WINSER.—Killed in action in France, on April 23, Second Lieut. Percy Ralph Winser, R.F.A., elder son of the late Percy James Winser of Heath House, Knutsford.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 231
LIFE AND THEORY 232
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 233
WITH A MOTOR-CAR TO THE FRONT . . 234
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Opening of Lawrence House . . . 235
Preaching Orders 235
BOOKS AND REVIEWS :—
Russian Realities and Problems . . 235
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED 236
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS :—
Belgian Hospital Fund 236
National British Women's Temperance Association 236
London District Unitarian Society . . 238
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 239
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 240

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

THE long considered judgment given on Monday last in the House of Lords on the question of the validity of a bequest to the Secular Society, is one of very great importance, especially in the light of the terms employed by some of the judges. The bequest in dispute was originally held to be valid by Mr. Justice Joyce; from his decision appeal was made to the higher Court, where the Master of the Rolls and two other judges also supported the will. Finally, the case was argued before the Lords in January and February last, and now by a majority of four to one the legitimacy of the legacy has been upheld. The Lord Chancellor was the sole dissentient from the opinion of the nine judges in all before whom the point has been raised. It will be well worth the while of readers keen for perfect liberty of thought in regard to theology and religion to read the full report in Tuesday's Times. Lords Dunedin, Parker, Sumner, and Buckmaster were at one in declaring that there was nothing illegal in promoting opinions opposed to Christian doctrines, provided this were done decently; and several of them explicitly dismissed the contention that "Christianity is part of the law of England"; this, said one of them, is "rhetoric, not law." Lord Buckmaster specially referred to Unitarian Christianity as one of several types of teaching opposed to current doctrine, but yet by law perfectly allowable to disseminate; and he had no difficulty in showing that any narrowing practice on the point would be most unjust to millions of British citizens, and, in fact, contrary to long established usage.

* * *

MR. JOSEPH HODGES CHOATE, from 1899 till 1905 the United States Ambassador to this country, who died suddenly on Monday night, was a man of great natural ability, very wide knowledge, and high character. Born at Salem, Massachusetts, in January, 1832, he proceeded, after education at the common school, to Harvard, where he attained much distinction, and during a long career he received many honours. As an advocate, he speedily rose to the first rank; his grip of legal principles added to exceptional oratorical power and genial humour placed him securely among the finest lawyers of his country and age; and his passing, full of years and honours, has taken away a personality of which all who had any share in his friendship might well be proud. Early in his ambassadorial period, Mr. Choate, as may be remembered by some of our readers, readily responded to the invitation of the late Dr. Brooke Herford (who had known him in Unitarian circles in America) and presided at Essex Hall at a meeting held to welcome Mr. Booker Washington to London. It is said that Mr. Choate's intense interest in the decision of his country to enter the war on the side of the Allies hastened his end; certainly it gave him the keenest satisfaction, and so late as the Friday before his death he had spoken in most eloquent and impressive language on a development so dear to his heart.

* * *

ON Monday afternoon a meeting was held at the Central Hall, Westminster, to promote the objects of the League of Nations Society, which has been founded "to advocate an agreement among civilised states which will serve as a basis of permanent peace among them, by providing for the peaceful settlement of disputes, for mutual defence, and for the observance of treaties and international law." Lord Bryce presided, and among those who sent messages of sympathy with the objects of the meeting was Sir R. L. Borden, Prime Minister of Canada. The chief resolution was moved by General Smuts, who deprecated too ambitious a scheme, and advised appointing an Anglo-American committee to go into the whole matter. "But there must be at the back of it some sanction, some basis. Any nation intending to get off the rails must, as a last resort, be forced on to them." The Archbishop of Canterbury, seconding, recalled the meeting held only four years ago, when Dr. Harnack and other German speakers attended. His Grace had at that time utterly disbelieved in the notion that a war could be declared between Germany and England.

* * *

LORD BUCKMASTER supported the resolution. He hailed with satisfaction the laying of one ancient dynasty in the dust, and he trusted that before this war was ended it would have brought down the whole of the Powers who had been responsible for this great wrong. Speaking entirely for himself, he believed that this scheme for a League of Nations would fail unless Germany were admitted into it; if she were excluded he could see no prospect before the world but the unending darkness of night. We had got to separate the German rulers from the German people; we must destroy the one and support the other. Lord Hugh Cecil said what was wanted was not machinery alone, but the sanction of a healthy public opinion. Men felt a boundless devotion to their own country, and had no consideration for any other. He would like to see the ministers of Christianity in all countries gather together to enforce the principle that war was inconsistent with Christianity, and that "nationalism was equally inconsistent with Christianity."

* * *

General Smuts, on Tuesday evening, at a banquet in his honour held in the Royal Gallery of the House of Lords and attended by a very large and representative assembly, gave an important address which deserves to be carefully read in its extended form. These are days of newspaper economy, but we do our people little service in compressing so fine an utterance into the few lines that are nowadays allotted (in many journals) to utterances of the weightiest significance. The points worthy of special notice, as appears to us, are the speaker's insistence on the federalising principle among the members of the "Empire"—a word which he held to be very inadequate to the reality it was meant to indicate; and his emphasis on the utility, even the necessity, of the monarchical institution as a common bond of unity among the far scattered communities of their political family. He trusted that success in organising this group of nations in the British Empire would lead the way to a world-wide success in forming the League of Nations to which they looked forward with hopeful minds.

* * *

The definite inclusion of Woman Franchise in the Government proposals introduced in the House of Commons on Tuesday by Mr. Long is an outstanding event in the story of a great campaign; and though there are sure to be perils ahead for this part of the Bill, we have little doubt that it is fully intended to be passed into law. We observe that the Cabinet has decided upon the earlier, and not the later age for the Franchise, as these were mooted by the Speakers' Committee, and that the proposal is that women of thirty, being otherwise qualified, shall have the vote. It is impossible even dimly to discern what the far-reaching effects will be of such a vital change in the electorate; among the many ways in which it will operate we must certainly expect economic and industrial developments of a very serious nature, and some of these appear to be already clamouring for attention, among other factors in the present very difficult labour problems.

LIFE AND THEORY.

With characteristic vigour, Mr. Lloyd George has recently told the Labour Party to prepare for a "new world," not to contemplate beginning again where they were before the war. He commends courage; being the man he is he goes farther and promises the prize to audacity. Perhaps he did not quite mean all he said when he advised men to sever themselves drastically from the past. For though the war has changed much, roots are still something, and unless roots are respected there will be damage in the orchard. Nature and human nature, the constitution of things as revealed to past experience, cannot be ignored without disaster. What the Prime Minister advises is certainly not less thought, while he demands more energy; it is attention to things as they really are, and not to mere pre-supposition, tradition, and dogma about them, that is imperatively required. We all much need a new access of energy, audacity even, in the varied spheres of our activity; but vigour, though invaluable, is not everything, else the Prussian scheme would lie beyond criticism.

It was Mephistopheles, in the German version of the famous story, who gulled the Student by praising "life" at the expense of "thought." His dictum was: "Grey is theory, green is Life's Golden Tree," therefore, fling away philosophy, dance under the goodly boughs while you may, and take your fill of the fruits they offer. There is an aspect of wisdom in the advice. The tempter's only chance lies in the proffer of an advantage. The suggestion is that we should enjoy more and speculate less. Well, there has been much very profitless speculation. In a world like this, it may be asked, not wholly without reason, where all that the wisest knows of the present is but a fraction, and all that he can hope to know of the past is the merest gleam across the darkness, how can he form any theory of it that will not be utterly inadequate and erroneous? The riddle of existence, who shall solve it, however much he meditates? Consider the numberless guesses, the no less numerous failures, made by generations of philosophers. "Who, by searching," said the ancient, "can find out God?" Something that looks like modesty is here; but it may be really rebellion against the exacting discipline by which our nature is to be led upward.

Our times appear, in some degree, to give force in many minds to this seeming wise and pseudo-practical advice. In times anything like them there have been similar phenomena. At the beginning of the war a widespread religious movement was expected, a re-birth of Christianity. At best, we fear, the signs of it are as yet dubious. Doubtless, men have been more serious, more actively benevolent, more tenderly sympathetic, braver, more diligent, more heroic. These things are, perhaps, better deserving of the title of religious, not to say Christian, than much that bears the name. Mr. A. C. Benson boldly maintains they are of the very substance of Christianity as a religion. For their presence among us we do well to be thankful; we build upon such facts our hopes of a better future. But candour compels the acknowledgment that, if any sort of religiousness has increased in these days, they have been a trying time for apologists and theologians. Such people have been bluntly advised to keep silence, seeing how hard must be the task of squaring any sort of Christian ethics and doctrine with the actualities in which we are all engaged.

Therefore, enter Mephistopheles. He comes, not unattended, and by his company, if by nothing else, he may be judged. Voices depreciatory of "theory" are familiar enough as we listen to the mingled messages of the ages. "Let us eat for to-morrow we die," said Isaiah's fellow-citizens, with the terrors of invasion before them. "Let us crown ourselves with rosebuds ere they be withered," sang the epicures of a later generation; "let our might be our right," they added, according to Wisdom's sage, who discerned pretty clearly whither these "no-theory," so-called "practical" people, were apt to travel. The tribe of Koheleth and the disciples of Omar Khayyám, a very diverse and motley throng, bring up the chorus. "Why trouble?" they ask in tones ranging from the mildly ironic to the jovially scornful, "it will be all one a hundred years hence, or even the day after to-morrow. What does much thinking do but write unlovely wrinkles on the brow! Is there anything better for a man than to enjoy—whether grossly or delicately, or in sheer busyness—all the days of the life of his vanity? Bring the goblet, quaff the wine that cheers, or at least banishes thought, and be merry while we can."

Yes, there is a semblance of sense in it, especially to the man whose appetites are eager. If his humour is satirical he will not lack for illustrations of the folly of being wise overmuch. He knows how often graceless zealots have fought with one another, tearing the gospel to pieces in struggles for the binding. Even a graver mind, attentive to the long list of sects in Whitaker, may lose heart at the prospect. The story of Christian opinion, not to speak of other and surely not inconsiderable schools of thought, is, from the beginning, one of wide differences and strenuous conflicts. The world of thought is an ever-restless world, and between the two horrors—the war of bloodshed and the strife of ignorant presumption and bigotry—what can one wish for better than a sheltered place apart, where he may live the life of—what?

Clearly not that of a Man. If he shrinks from the effort of thinking he will quickly sink into a mere parasite. If, recoiling from that, he thinks he will content himself by living the life of a cleverer sort of brute, he will soon find that some others there are who play that game, brutes of exceeding cleverness, whose strength is the measure of right for them; and he is put upon the problem of outwitting and defeating them. If he does not even aspire to be a Hun, but just drifts along as the days let him, it hardly seems likely, things being as they are, that much of the fruit of "Life's Golden Tree" will fall into his hands. A very little experience teaches one that this world—whatever its Secret—embodies a certain method, and he only who ponders its ways and understands an adequate share of them can win its prizes, whether they be those appealing to the senses or to the mind. And a very little observation supports the view that there is structure in the mental world also, could we but learn its principles. The anti-philosophic rebel, impatient of the pains of thought, may regard all this side of existence as mere fringe and surplusage, and not worth examination. But, even so, he becomes a theoriser in spite of himself, and his negative is also a case that requires argument.

Let us admit that to think honestly and hard is often to be defeated; it is to add fresh possibilities of suffering to the thousand ills that flesh is heir to. But we cannot be Men and leave off thinking. We may well surrender our suppositions when they fail to cover new facts. We may well cultivate a more truly modest temper, and walk more "humbly" with our God. And we may, at the same time, gratefully welcome every wise word that stimulates to the active exercise of all our varied energies, and "live while we live." We are in a world of experience as well as of thought, and it is never likely that we shall know of the doctrine without doing the works. The Man's life is both practical and theoretical, shall we say a kind of applied mathematics. Every one knows that neither mechanics nor art can thrive without thought, and close thought too. It is impossible that conduct, personal or communal, can become, in the highest sense, satisfactory, if men shirk the fatigue and risks of studying out its meaning and principles. But such attention on our part necessarily implies some definite theory, however adventurous it must be, of the meaning and principles of our own existence and the world's.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

EARTH is growing! lay your chains
  Tyrants, as ye list, or can;
Measurement of all your reigns
  Proves the greatening mind of man.

Earth is growing! chain the seas;
  Chain the lightning, chain the wind.
Nation now by nation frees,
  Frees itself in heart and mind.

Fling aside all feudal hate,
  Learn each other's life to love;
  And truth, all other things above,
With godliest virtue cultivate.

Earth is growing! Bound to march,
  Stand ye liberators forth;
Wide as Heaven's God-builded arch,
  Freedom claims her rule on earth.

O never may the Immortal rest,
  Never shall her triumph cease,
  Till with justice, power and peace,
Fair freedom home in every breast.

Earth is growing! let the world
  Hail with joy the advancing time;
War shall into night be hurled;
  Peace shall conquer every clime.

One in faith, in virtue one,
  Man shall yet be good and great;
  Nations form one only state;
Heir of earth, ascend thy throne.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY.

THE apparent good and evil of life constitute a case in which a truer understanding might invert the natural impression. We need not, therefore, be hopeless in presence of the problem of pain. Knowledge might alter its entire aspect. Nay, we are not limited to this general thought. For there is one condition under which all know that pain is not truly an evil, but a good. This is when pain is willingly borne for another's sake. Its entire character is altered then. It not only passes into the category of good things, but it becomes emphatically the good. Our life has nothing else so excellent to show. All kinds of pleasure fall infinitely below it. Measured by self-sacrifice, by heroism, every other good sinks not only into a lower place, but becomes evidently of a lower kind. Nothing else in the same full and perfect sense deserves or receives the name of good. The homage of all hearts unequivocally affirms this title. Even when there is not manhood enough to imitate, when the baser nature within us prefers the meaner course, the verdict of the soul is never doubtful. The pains of martyrs, or the losses of self-sacrificing devotion, are never classed among the evil things of the world. They are its bright places rather, the culminating points at which humanity has displayed its true glory, and reached its perfect level. An irrepressible pride and gladness are the feelings they elicit: a pride which no regret can drown, a gladness no indignation overpower. Conceive all martyrdoms blotted out from the world's history; how blank and barren were the page! JAMES HINTON.

We give thee thanks, O Lord God most holy, for all the graces and virtues thou hast wrought in thy servants who have departed this life in thy faith and fear, and have entered into their rest. We thank thee for all those who in this time, in the darkness and the storm of war, have given their lives for their country, steadfast and heroic. And we bless thee for the thought of the ultimate peace which is theirs. May we have grace to share with them the victory of life over death, and finally be united with them in the fellowship of heaven, in the joy of thy everlasting love.

Amen.

WITH A MOTOR-CAR TO THE FRONT.

It was a piece of luck for me that the car we have just given for the use of a French hospital should have been landed at the port at very nearly the same time as I arrived there myself. It was necessary for the car to make the long journey by road, and I could take a seat in it without feeling that the precious petrol was being used wrongfully. The start was fixed for 8 A.M., and the party was to be the Directrice of the Hospital, a chauffeuse (a girl of 22), and myself, but when we started our party had been augmented by a Belgian doctor on two days' leave and a French officer, whose wife had just presented him with his sixth child, and whose home lay on our route, so he had stayed up all the preceding night to get his papers in order and his leave to accompany us. Five of us, a quantity of luggage, and petrol tins for the whole tour made a heavy load, and a good test for the car on the hills. There were many of these, and very steep and long ones too—in fact, the first hour of our journey was like a switchback, and at each hill we expected to have to "get out and shove," but each time the gallant car brought us triumphantly to the top. It was a lovely sunny morning, though bitterly cold. The country as yet was showing no signs of the coming of spring, which burst upon us so suddenly a few days later. All the time we could see the sea, glittering in the sun, and even catch glimpses across it of the white cliffs of old England.

We dropped our French officer at his home and repacked ourselves and our luggage, and went on much more comfortably. About half past twelve we arrived at the Belgian Civil Hospital of La Chartreuse, where I have many friends, so we called in to see them. Of course they insisted on our staying to lunch, and while the Belgian doctor was conducted over the vast establishment by his confrères, I spent the time with the family of the Director and heard of the new developments and all their latest news. They had received only two days before the boy Robert Behëyt, whom we supported at Berck for over a year. He is able to walk about again and is improving in general health, and is quite able to be with the healthy children again. So he now passes out of our charge into theirs, but we are assured he will be well cared for. There were a number of improvements and additions to see after lunch, as this place is like a living organism and is always growing and extending its usefulness.

The next two hours' run was through beautiful country and was uneventful, but we were none of us sorry to come to a town sufficiently English to provide us with tea. In fact, though the town was French, the streets were thronged with English, and khaki was everywhere. As we all know, wherever the English go, tea-rooms spring up, so we soon had all we wanted. The car was not very willing to go on, but we were, and we again proved the handiness of the British Tommy. I have never met ever so small a group of British soldiers but one of the group turned out to be a mechanician and to know something of the ways of motors. A wonderful run followed in the gathering twilight, through varied country, hilly and wooded, with a gorgeous sunset illuminating everything. I shall not soon forget that crimson sun and marvellous sky, the purple hills and darkly shadowed valleys, with a glimpse of crystal at the bottom. It was quite dark when we reached our stopping-place for the night, and we hunted through the narrow streets for a hotel where we could put up. Having put the car in a garage, we stormed the hotel for food, only to be told that the staff had all gone home and nothing was to be had. Finally the kindly woman in charge found us some bread and cheese, and with this we had to be content.

Next morning we were stirring betimes, but the car evidently resented her slumbers being disturbed, and refused to move. So we pushed her out into the street and soon had quite a fair proportion of the French army assisting us by deeds and words, especially the latter. However, two gentlemen in leather coats came along, army chauffeurs, who soon had their heads in our engine, and did a number of mysterious little jobs inside her. For this reason, or because she had had enough of being obstinate, the car suddenly consented to start, and amidst cheers we were soon off again. We arrived in Paris in the afternoon, and, as we all had business to see to there, we went our separate ways until the evening, and the Belgian doctor had to take the night train back, as his leave was up.

The next morning we left Paris, and ran out east on a long, straight road, paved with stone, and bordered with poplars—a typical French road. We were now among the French army. It was along this road that the French and English armies retreated nearly three years ago One could see the scene—the men unwillingly turning their back on the enemy and yet obliged to withdraw along the road towards Paris. Many fell by the wayside, and were buried where they fell—as frequent mounds and little crosses in the fields testify. Sometimes we came to a bridge which was blown up by the French as they retired, and we had to go out of our way to cross a temporary structure near by. Sometimes we passed farms which had been shattered by shell fire, and sometimes whole streets in the villages were heaps of stones. But no one minds these things—the Germans are retreating now, and France has entered on the last phase before final victory.

Soon we came to feel we were near the Front, for sometimes we were held up while long convoys of heavy motor lorries passed, driven by tired-looking drivers, with men sitting beside them fast asleep. But as they saw us, and especially our young chauffeuse, they started wide awake. All had something cheery to shout at us. We did not understand all the jokes, which flew down their lines in some amazing way, so that while the head of the column was left gasping with astonishment, the men at the end had time to recover from the first shock and shout "Bravo les Anglaises!" Our passes seemed superfluous. The menacing sentry with fixed bayonet saluted politely when he saw who we were, and "Passez, passez" was all he said. It became almost like a nightmare, these columns and columns of troops coming from the trenches into their billets to take their rest, and the others going up to take their places. One cannot avoid wondering how many will return, but such thoughts are bad ones, and it is better to accept all as it comes, as the men do.

At last we came to the end of our journey, and passed through a little village where whole streets are ruins, and every remaining house is labelled with the number of men billeted there. A little away from the village, perched on the hillside, is the Priory, now a hospital, which we had come to visit. Our arrival was unexpected, but we received a warm welcome from the English matron, nurses, and chauffeuses, and the new addition to their equipment—the car we had brought—was greatly admired. After a certain amount of time spent on tea and giving and hearing all the news, I was taken round the hospital. The old Priory, with its large airy rooms, its cloisters, and the huts which have been built to make extra wards, makes a capital installation for two hundred French patients. The staff only took it over in February, when everything was indescribably dirty and there was no equipment. Now the wards are spotless, there are comfortable beds, overflowing storerooms, sufficiently equipped operation theatres, the garage full of ambulances, and, best of all, a trained and enthusiastic staff. Our Fund has had something to do in bringing about this state of things and has every reason to be proud of having been able to do so. It has been a great pleasure to aid, in however small a way, our gallant ally, and also this band of women of the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry who have worked so long for the Belgians, and who are now devoting themselves to the French.

It was difficult to believe that just over the hill yonder men were killing and being killed. At first the incessant roar of the cannons was unpleasant, but after a short time one became accustomed to it, and only remarked it when a specially loud burst came. The patients, many of whom were lying out on a grass slope, enjoying the sun and the lovely view across the valley, seemed unaware of anything disturbing. During the two days I was there, Spring came, —more swiftly, more abundantly than I have ever seen it.

ROSE ALLEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

OPENING OF LAWRENCE HOUSE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Lawrence House, 1 Essex Street, Strand, W.C. 2, will be open for the accommodation of sailors and soldiers on and after Monday next, May 21. The Matron, Miss Beeley, has already taken up her duties, and communications should be addressed to her. The charge for a bedroom is 1*s.* a night, and provision is being made for breakfast and for tea, when necessary, at moderate charges. As a rule meals can be obtained at restaurants within a few yards of the house.

The rooms will be formerly declared open by Lady Durning-Lawrence on Thursday, May 31 (the Thursday in Whit-week), at 4.15 p.m. and all donors to the funds of the Hostel are most cordially invited to give the support of their presence upon that occasion. It is not proposed to send out individual invitations. As there is no room of sufficient size to accommodate a large gathering, it is impossible to give an invitation to those, other than donors, who will be attending the meetings at Essex Hall, but visitors at those meetings can look over the premises during Whit-week.—Yours, &c.

R. M. MONTGOMERY.

May 15, 1917.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Will you allow me, on behalf of the committee of Lawrence House, to ask the many friends who have promised gifts in kind to let us have them as soon as possible, as the Hostel is nearly ready? Amongst the many generous presents is a gramophone, for which "His Master's Voice" records would be very welcome; also games, and promises of illustrated papers and magazines. We hope that some of our country friends will have the opportunity of seeing Lawrence House in working order during Whit-week.—Yours, &c.

EVELYN WOODING.

London, May 16, 1917.

PREACHING ORDERS.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I quite agree with the last sentence of the leading article on 'Women in the Church' in THE INQUIRER of May 5, but I would go one further and apply the same to men. Why should gifted preachers, who are not always strong physically, wear themselves out in what I have heard termed "drudgery"? How we have wasted the talent in our pulpits in past times! I sincerely hope there is a brighter future for us in these matters.—Yours, &c.,

A. E. YATES.

15 Oak Road, Broughton.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

RUSSIAN REALITIES AND PROBLEMS. Edited by J. D. Duff, Fellow of Trinity College. Cambridge: University Press. 5*s.* net.

THE Cambridge University Press has published a selection of the Russian Lectures given at the Cambridge Summer School in 1916; and most valuable and opportune it is. The ideals which have declared themselves during the recent vast happenings received, one may hope, an additional momentum during that fortnight, and we who listened to their exponents were actually present at the heralding of the dawn. One might regret that circumstances do not admit of the inclusion of a larger number of the lectures given, and, not the least, of that by the Editor himself on the (to us) fresh and fascinating subject of Serge Aksákoff. But what is given should be of very great interest to those, and surely they are many, who now look anxiously on while our splendid ally grapples with its problems, and try (or should try) themselves to understand them. The lectures selected are 'The War and Balkan Politics' and 'The Representative System in Russia,' by Paul Milyoukoff, late Professor in the University of Sofia, Member of the Duma, and until a few days ago, Foreign Minister in the Provisional Government; 'Poland, Old and New,' by Roman Dmowski, editor of the Gazeta Warszawska, author of 'La Question Polonaise,' and leader of the Pan-Polish Movement associated with the National Democratic Party; 'Past and Present of Russian Economics,' by Peter Struve, editor of Russian Thought and Professor of Political Economy in the Polytechnic Institute of Petrograd; 'The Development of Science and Learning in Russia,' by Alexander Lappo-Danilevsky, historian, and Fellow of the Imperial Academy of Sciences in Petrograd. The only Englishman honoured by inclusion here is Harold Williams, connected with the School of Russian Studies in Liverpool University, and considered by Russian scholars to have no rival, even among Russians, in his knowledge of the ethnography of the Empire. His vivid addresses are under the title of 'The Nationalities of Russia.'

When these men were lecturing in Cambridge the Germans, despite the brutality and bestiality of their methods, were still speaking of themselves as "civilised" and of the Russians as "barbarian," and picturing to their own people the "Russian menace" to civilisation. At the same time certain among us, and these not only extremist disciples of Germanism under whatever self-given name, saw, or said they saw, little to choose between siding with the Kaiser and siding with the Tsar. These lectures, even if the Revolution had not happened, would have demonstrated the absurdity of this idea in the face of facts. To us listening at Cambridge it was obvious that what could truly be called the Russian mind was antipathetic to the German idea in almost every direction, and especially did it grasp the conflict as being between autocracy and freedom; indeed, a small knowledge of things Russian during the last decades in extra-bureaucratic regions of thought might have assured us of this. The great surprise about the Revolution is that it came so soon and so suddenly. Prof. Vinogradoff had warned us at the beginning of the year that the walls of Jericho would not fall at one blast of the trumpets, yet long before the year was out the latent forces indicated to us at Cambridge rushed together in the most dramatic release of even these dramatic days. M. Milyoukoff has conspicuously assisted in this release, and his account of the struggles of the Duma against enormous odds, and the persistence of the democratic spirit in spite of the dead weight of traditional bureaucracy, will probably take precedence in interest over the rest of the volume. His fresh and cheerful personality, full of bonhomie, and without any pose of the important or the sardonic, was pleasantly symbolic of that mixture of complexity and engaging simplicity which is Russia. He was hopeful; and as events have proved, his hopefulness was prophetic. One could easily imagine this Milyoukov making the protest which should take its place among the historic utterances of the war: "Milyoukov does not matter; it is Russia that matters."

Poland—to most of us a vague idea of an unfamiliar civilisation until German measures for its destruction excited our horror and sympathy—and the Polish question are excellently treated by M. Dmowski. Four-fifths of Polish opinion was on the side of Russia even before the mailed fist crushed its heart, and in spite of Russian oppression; the development of Polish national ideals was felt to lie in alliance with Russia—which has always been M. Dmowski's contention, and in this M. Milyoukoff agreed with him. In Dr. Lappo-Domilevsky's masterly sketch of Russian intellectual development is seen again the emergence of a democratic and nationalist spirit against the "dark forces" striving to imprison it. All who are interested in reconstruction after the war should apprehend the value of Dr. Struve's lectures on Russian economic history and prospects, and his independent agreement with Ruskin in the dictum that "the production of souls of a good quality is the most lucrative national manufacture."

Three zealous beliefs stood out very clearly in these Russian lectures in Cambridge: (1) that the war is for enlightened Russia a most righteous war in a sacred cause; (2) that the Anglo-Russian alliance is to Russia an honourable and precious thing; and (3) that the war had proved the greatest instrument of Russian unity. If certain elements have since broken away from that unity, or were, indeed, always apart from it, it is only to weld together more closely the moral forces which are, as Dr. Williams says, awakening Russia to a new national life, and struggling towards a new and free and spiritually adventurous civilisation. F. ROBERTS.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & UNWIN, LTD.—Proposals for the Prevention of Future Wars: Viscount Bryce and others. 1*s.* net.

MESSRS. BAILLIERE, TINDALL & COX.—Chemistry for Beginners: C. T. Kingzett.

MESSRS. CASSELL & CO., LIMITED.—God the Invisible King: H. G. Wells. 6*s.* net.

MESSRS. GAY & HANCOCK, LIMITED.—Poems of Purpose: Ella Wheeler Wilcox. 1*s.* 3*d.* net.

MESSRS. HEADLEY BROS.—What is Quakerism? Edward Grubb. 2*s.* 6*d.* net. William Penn: John W. Graham. 6*s.* net.

THE LINDSEY PRESS.—Seven Services for Public Worship: Compiled by W. Copeland Bowie. 1*s.* 6*d.* net. New Edition.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.—The Church and the Sacraments: P. T. Forsyth, M.A., D.D. 6*s.* net.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.—Competition: A Study in Human Motive. 3*s.* 6*d.* net. Providence and Faith: William Scott Palmer. 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.—The Idea of God in the Light of Recent Philosophy: The Gifford Lectures: A. Seth Pringle-Pattison. 12*s.* 6*d.* net.

MESSRS. WATTS & CO.—The Principle of Nationalities: Conway Memorial Lecture: Israel Zangwill. 9*d.* net. The Origin of the World: A Book for Children: R. McMillan. 1*s.* net. The Bankruptcy of Religion: Joseph McCabe. 5*s.* net.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cornhill Magazine.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

122ND LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,833	14	5
The Rev. and Mrs. T. Bowen Evans (eighteenth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Swaine (twenty-fifth donation)	2	0	0
Mrs. Winser (twenty-eighth donation)	1	0	0
Northgate End Chapel, Halifax, per Mr. J. Teal (thirteenth donation)	1	14	5
Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson (fifteenth donation) ..	25	0	0
Miss Sarah Jane Gregg (twentieth donation)	1	0	0
Mr. George Banks (twenty-eighth donation)	1	0	0
Dr. and Mrs. Burridge (third donation)	3	3	0
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Green (twelfth donation).. ..	1	0	0
Mrs. Eric Lemmon (fifth donation)	1	0	0
Lewes Branch of the Women's League, per Miss Severs ..	2	2	0
Miss Katharine H. Greg (fourth donation)	5	0	0
	£16,878	13	10

Note.—The donation acknowledged on April 21 as from the American Unitarian Association should have been from the "Alliance of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women, per Mrs. William Noyes."

Parcels have been received from: Miss Orr; Mrs. George Webb; Mrs. Eric Bayley; Mr. J. A. Kenrick; The Ladies of the Unitarian Chapel, Preston (per Miss Smith); Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson; Redlynch House Work Depot (per Mrs. Robinson); Anon., Leamington Spa; Miss E. S. Hollins; The Unitarian Church Sewing Circle, Southport (per Mrs. Harris); Miss Gertrude Martineau; Mrs. F. E. Baines; Miss Wilkinson; Newington Green League of Honour (per Miss Titford); Plymouth Branch of the Women's League (per Miss R. Bond); Miss Catherine Scott; Mr. P. Riess; Mrs. Notcutt; Mrs. Edwin Ellis; Miss Swaine; Miss Jessie Green; The Old Meeting Church, Birmingham (per Mrs. Lloyd Thomas).

WEEKLY NOTES.

IN order to make our position quite clear, I wish to state that although we have aided the French just lately, to some extent, for special reasons, we do not propose to continue this work, as the work for the Belgian Hospitals is as much as we can do with the funds available.

Miss Holmes writes from the Calais Hut:—

"Two very interesting events have just happened. First, our orchestra paid a return visit and gave a concert in a Y.M.C.A. hut at No. 1 Camp. They went in full strength, forty-five of them, with all their big instruments and our hut piano. The Commandant and I went too, he to sit in the front row with British officers, while I perched pleasantly, though with less dignity, on the high counter with my friends in blue overalls at the far end. It is a nice, airy hut, with dark beams, but much smaller than ours. The concert was an unqualified success, and the audience very appreciative of 'William Tell,' 'Faust,' the buoyant concerto, and some vigorous compositions of M. Rousseau, the conductor, and M. Lepage, our pianist. It was delightful to see our Belgians received so enthusiastically; they will certainly have to go again. The second event was last Sunday, when we had a fête to celebrate the coming in of America and the gift of the new hut. The two Americans, Miss Nott and Miss Mitchell, came with their Consul's wife and little boy, and as soon as they had been piloted through the crowd to the front seats the orchestra struck up the American National Anthem, and then all the Belgian school children, massed on the stage, sang 'Hail Columbia,' with much waving of stars and stripes and other flags. The rest of the programme was orchestral and particularly good. The Commandant made a short speech, explaining the occasion and the gratitude he felt. The Consul was unable to come, but his wife made a pretty speech and said that though her country may be great in territory, Belgium is great in honour. I think all the visitors found it a happy occasion. A little girl presented each of them with a pink and white posy as they left."

SPECIAL WANTS.

Helpless shirts in thin flannel or flannelette.
Pyjamas.
Shirts and socks.
Slippers, handkerchiefs, towels.
Games of all sorts, especially cards.
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns sent free).
Chemises for women and girls.
Treasure bags (10 by 12 in.), in coloured washing materials.

I have now a new consignment of grey wool, suitable for socks, &c. I shall be glad to sell it for 4*s.* 6*d.* a lb., carriage free.

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

NATIONAL BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE forty-first Annual Meeting of the National British Women's Temperance Association was held at Kingsway Hall on Tuesday evening, May 15, Miss Agnes Slack presiding. Notable addresses were delivered by the Right Hon. Walter Runciman, M.P., Prof. Gilbert Murray, and Archdeacon Lloyd, D.D., of Canada. The last-named speaker received a very cordial welcome, and the stirring speech he delivered roused the audience to great enthusiasm.

The following resolution was moved from the chair, and carried unanimously: "That this Annual Public Meeting of the N.B.W.T.A. holding firmly to the conviction, greatly strengthened by the recent experiences in other countries, that the only real and complete remedy for the tragedy and waste caused by drink is to be found in Prohibition, strongly urges the Government to bring in a measure for prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors during the war and demobilisation." The question of prohibition was coming more and more to the front at the present time, Miss Slack said, in connection with the food shortage, and her own opinion was that the working people were quite ready to accept it in view of the terrible waste of foodstuffs involved in the manufacture of alcoholic drinks. At a meeting of 1,500 shipbuilders which she had recently addressed at Stockton-on-Tees the feeling in favour of it was unanimous, and she believed that every one present voted for prohibition. They must send from that meeting a message to the Government that they believed in saving the people of the nation, and that they were in earnest. They must make the Government do their will.

MR. RUNCIMAN ON PROHIBITION.

Mr. Runciman said that England had, unfortunately, a sorry record as regards its delay in dealing with the liquor traffic during the war, and from first to last the three Governments which had controlled their destinies (he himself had been a member of two of them) had been much too timid in the matter. He realised from his own experience that they had far better have taken the stronger line from the first. As a teetotaler he had felt it necessary to press the national interests in regard to this question, and he would say again now what he had said as a member of the Government, that the attempt to ration the people of this country on food so long as they used a particle of food for the manufacture of drink was to betray the national cause. Continuing, Mr. Runciman said he feared we had to a great extent failed in our duty to our Canadian and Australian brethren. Many Canadians on landing at Southampton and Plymouth came, for the first time, into a drink area, and learnt that the first thing a British patriot did in order to show his friendliness was to offer him liquor. Some of them, he was sorry to say, had acquired a liking for drink in a British uniform. Soon we should have American soldiers also coming to this country, on their way to France, many of whom, like the Canadians, have always lived in "dry" territory. Surely the best thing we could do for the parents of those boys was to see that they were as well protected in our country as they would be at home. It was always being said that if prohibition were introduced the working classes would not stand it. If this was true, perhaps that was somewhat to the discredit of temperance workers, who clearly must have been lacking in enthusiasm in promoting a cause the arguments for which were unanswerable. But was it true that the working classes were against prohibition? Had their opinion ever been properly ascertained? The statements of the London press in regard to the feeling in the North, for instance, were very unreliable. People in London did not always know what was the state of mind of people in other parts of the country, and some of the newspaper writers did not allow their purview to range outside Fleet Street, which was not a "dry" area! But, putting the whole matter entirely in terms of food, and setting aside for the moment all the moral and social considerations which could be adduced in favour of the abolition of drink, it must be clear that no man would hesitate if the alternative to providing food-stuffs for the brewers was to reserve foodstuffs to keep his wife and children from starvation. After a masterly summary of the whole situation, in the course of which he dealt with the various methods adopted by the Government, the rather curious prophecies as to future measures of control which had appeared in the papers that morning, and the actual figures relating to the quantities of cereals, sugar, and molasses used in the manufacture of beer and whisky (mentioning incidentally that we have probably a stock of alcohol in bond sufficient to last two or three years), Mr. Runciman urged upon his hearers the necessity of going on converting, and converting, and converting public opinion, for the fact remained that if public opinion had been strong enough prohibition would have been adopted. In regard to State Purchase, he was glad to see that the Government had taken one of its "definite steps," and decided to place the whole matter in the hands of a Royal Commission. He hoped the Royal Commission would be a long time over its deliberations, and that it would analyse the subject very exhaustively; in the meantime they must work hard for their cause, so that it would triumph before the Commission published its report.

Prof. Gilbert Murray on the Effects of War.

Prof. Gilbert Murray dealt with the whole atmosphere created by the war, rather than with the drink question in particular, though he showed how the two things were related, and how great was the need for the efforts of associations like the one he was addressing in mitigating the grave evils which always came to the fore when human beings were driven to mutual slaughter. They were fighting for democracy, and for some time to come they must fight—the end was not yet in sight; but their moral tone had suffered deterioration, for day by day they were doing and hearing things which they hated, they were governed in a way they hated, they were getting to think and feel in a way they hated. Some sort of corruption resulting from war was in the air, and the poison was being administered to them all the time. The question was, were they reacting to that poison like a healthy organism to which it might prove a useful medicine, or would it be too much for them? The first evil they had to combat was militarism, the worship of the sword, resulting from the concentration of their thoughts upon fighting power; another thing was the fact that war, throughout history, had always thrown women back. Napoleon, when questioned on a certain occasion as to the place of woman in the world, said she was "the soldier's recreation." That was the pure doctrine of militarism set forth by its greatest exponent. Another grave danger was the association of drink and vice. There never was a war in history which did not increase both. In regard to the drink question, old, unregenerate Russia had shown more courage than our own nation, and a great friend of his, a historian, who was in Petrograd at the time of the revolution, had told him that one of the good things about it was that there had been no massacre, no indiscriminate bloodshed, "because nobody was drunk," adding that he supposed it was the first revolution in the history of the world without drunkenness. Continuing, Prof. Murray said we were in a stage in which we must either go back or forward. We could not stand still and let things happen. Men had been taken out of conditions in which they had lived protected lives, not knowing whether they were brave or cowardly, and put into positions where danger was right in front of them, and where they had to be definitely one thing or the other. They had been uprooted from many of the old ideas of right and wrong which they had once taken for granted, and whereas it used to be considered rhetorical to speak of some things being more precious than life or worse than death, this had now become one of the commonplace facts of everyday experience. Every one in that audience had been bought with a price, and upon them, in consequence, rested an absolutely overwhelming responsibility. They must ask themselves, were they ready for sacrifice in the way in which it was likely to come to them in their ordinary life? Were they true to their faith? Speaking as he did to women, and as a suffragist, he would remind them that in spite of all that women were doing now in the world, for which they had been rightly praised, there were things to which they should hold fast which lay quite outside the sphere of politics or professional triumphs. Was there no place for love and prayer amid all this carnage? It was unfair to ask who were serving their country best. They could not judge by the V.C.s, and titles, and the like. Personally he felt there was no service quite like that of the men who had given their lives for others, but he would put very high indeed another service, which could be exercised by women to the full as well as men, the service of those who through all this pestilence succeeded in keeping life sweet, and did not forget their old ideals, and who were not going to let the world get habituated to war. Katherine Breshkovsky, the little grey-haired woman who recently received such a tremendous reception when she returned to Moscow from exile, once sent this message to her comrades: "Day and night we labour. Instead of meat and drink and hope we have dreams of freedom. This is youth calling to youth through prison walls and across the world." That was something like a message, and if they believed in freedom, purity, and justice they should heed that call. The permanent work of women, rooted in nature, was more important than the material public service called out by any occasion. They could get any one to make shells and run motor-cars so long as they paid high wages, but the great majority of men when facing death or some great danger thought of some woman, and he needed from that woman what could never be obtained by payment, something very simple and ancient, some sort of love, faithfulness, and courage. Those of them who believed that women have very great opportunities before them must remember to stress that aspect of woman's work. "A wounded world," Prof. Murray said in conclusion, "needs all the care that women can give it. The world, brutalised and made savage, and, in some cases, with its standards gone, needs bitterly that women as well as men should be true to themselves."

Archdeacon Lloyd on the Leadership of the Empire.

Archdeacon Lloyd urged those present to make their determination felt, and to give the Government no rest till the resolution they had passed was carried into effect. He would say, as was being said in another connection, "don't accept an inconclusive peace," for if they did, in ten years' time they would have to fight all over again. If they were going to deal with the greatest of all the enemies of the English-speaking race by means of purchase, the old country would never lead the Empire on the other side of the seas. It was not a mere matter of food; the question was:

"Shall England retain her leadership among the Anglo-Saxon nations of the world in all that is right, and good, and noble, or shall she drift back?" As Prof. Murray had said, they could not stand still. They had got to wipe out the impression that was created around the world when the papers recorded a speech of Mr. Lloyd George in which he stated that drastic measures in regard to drink could not be introduced because the Trade came down to the House and shook their fists in his face. What sort of Parliament was that, quailing before the drink traffic, to govern one quarter of the world's surface? If they did not get prohibition before the men were disbanded from the army, what would they have to face when these brave fellows came home, afte enduring what men had never had to endure before, with their nerves on edge and their minds excited, and people ready to treat them wherever they went? They would have some of the sad experiences which occurred after the South African War, when men who had become slaves to the drink habit went over to Canada to get away from the land they were disgracing, and "went under" there, because the same temptation awaited them on the other side. Now, except in one province, this danger did not exist in Canada, and when the boys returned they would find their country "dry." England must give her own boys a chance, too, and sweep the country clean before they returned to it.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the London District Unitarian Society was held on Monday evening, May 14, Mr. Alfred Wilson in the chair, in the unavoidable absence of the President, Dr. C. Herbert-Smith, who was regretfully obliged to fulfil another engagement. Mrs. Sydney Martineau, who was to have spoken, was also prevented from attending owing to illness, and apologies had been received from the Revs. W. G. Tarrant and J. H. Weatherall, who could not attend

The Report was read by Mr Alan Forbes, acting-secretary. The committee are of opinion that in spite of the grave difficulties with which the churches are faced at the present time, the work has been well maintained, and in a spirit of hopefulness. At a conference held with the ministers, officers, and committees of aided churches, a noteworthy sense of the value and necessity of the work which even the smallest of the churches is doing was revealed, and it was insistently urged that such work ought to be recognised as national service of the highest importance. At the same time it was agreed that while this must be the primary consideration, ministers would be justified in giving such time as they could spare from essential duties to other forms of service. A tribute of admiration and gratitude was paid to the young men belonging to the various congregations who had given themselves—some even unto death—for righteousness' sake. Details of the various activities at Kilburn, to which the Missionary Minister, the Rev. J. Arthur Pearson, has been giving a great deal of attention; Peckham, where the Rev. R. Travers Herford has done such acceptable work; Bermondsey, which is under the charge of Mr. Stanley P. Penwarden; Leytonstone, South Norwood, Woolwich, Deptford, and the East End churches were given, and sympathetic reference was made to the death of Mrs. Carlier, who had shared to the full her husband's ministry at Deptford. The courageous way in which the churches are preparing for the future is very noticeable. The Bermondsey congregation has been drained of all its young men, but the position is being faced with good heart and prospects of success. At Woolwich, where the building in which services were originally held has been requisitioned by the military authorities, plans are being made to buy a plot of land, (for which money is now being collected), and erect a building upon it, when normal conditions return. The members of the Stratford congregation are bent on having their church, which has fa len into disrepair, thoroughly renovated, and the committee fully approve of the intention to raise funds for the purpose, provided no appeal is issued to the general public until there is a substantial sum in hand. The report closes with an expression of thanks to the acting-secretary, who, in spite of his military duties, has continued to carry on the work of Capt. Ronald Bartram, now in France.

Mr. T. B. Taylor, treasurer, read the financial statement, which may be considered fairly satisfactory under the circumstances, but it is pointed out that while the Society is very grateful to the generous group of persons whose support is the mainstay of the work it would be much more satisfactory, and a better guarantee of future security, if an income adequate to the needs came from many subscribers of small amounts. The death of two valued subscribers, Mr. Hahnemann Epps and Mr. W. Baily, is deeply regretted.

The Missionary Minister in his Report gave an encouraging account of his work at Kilburn, where there are between fifty and sixty Sunday scholars and where good work is being done in connection with the Girls' and Boys' Clubs. It is hoped that, as a result of this transitional ministry, the congregation has a brighter future before it. Owing to his activities in connection with Kilburn, Mr. Pearson has not been able to devote as much time as usual to general missionary endeavours, but his sympathies are as wide and his enthusiasm as contagious as ever. He is particularly anxious that the young people's meetings shall be resumed in the winter, and that in every way the atmosphere shall be preserved which means so much to the young men from our schools and churches at the front, who will owe it largely to what they have learnt in those schools and churches if they are able to withstand the temptations of both war and peace. Of his fellow workers, the Lay Preachers, the Pioneer Preachers, and the members of the congregations in the various centres maintained by the Society, Mr. Pearson spoke in most cordial terms. The call to service, he said, was insistent, even if the opportunities for expansion were absent, and they must keep their hopes high for greater success in the days to come when democracy would have a better chance of achieving its aims.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the reports, said that although every one of their churches was suffering from a depletion of forces, and some inevitable discouragement, they must gather strength from the fact that they belonged to this larger body, and hearten themselves while the war lasted by keeping their helpful and ennobling gospel before those who came to hear it, trusting that in the future it would attract and hold the people more than it had ever done before.

Mr. H. G. Chancellor, M.P., in seconding, paid a warm tribute to Mr. Pearson for his work, and expressed regret that he had not been able to give as much attention himself during the past few years as he would have liked to the churches. He laid great stress on the necessity for keeping the spiritual homes of those whose thoughts turned back to them in France, or Flanders, or Mesopotamia, or wherever they might be, intact, so that they would find the door open and receive that welcome on their return to which, as their letters showed plainly, they were looking forward. There was a great deal of questioning, while all this carnage was going on, about the goodness of God, and one of the functions of their churches was to keep alive the faith in a good and loving God. The war was not different from other evils; it was only unique in being bigger; and if other evils could go on under an all-wise Providence, then the war was no proof that God did not exist. One thing was being borne in upon everyone, namely, that if men broke the divine law of love, if national and international hatreds were cultivated, if things were done that cut both men and nations off from sympathy with each other, then inevitably the results must follow, just as results always follow, and they must learn to put the blame where it really rests. It was part of the work of their churches, also, to maintain their ideals at a high level, to see that no sordid motives or clamour for reprisals drew them down to a lower moral plane, to keep their hearts pure and their hopes steadfast for the future progress of mankind.

The Rev. A. A. Charlesworth spoke of the value of the Society as a means of bringing the men and women who were interested in the churches together, in order that they might encourage one another. They specially needed at the present time to feel the power of the common faith, and to realise their mutual helpfulness as they stood shoulder to shoulder. In regard to the question which was so often raised, and inevitably so, as to the desirability of keeping the weak churches alive or of linking them on to the strong churches, he felt very strongly indeed that any body of persons organised for a definite religious purpose, to deepen the consciousness of our life in God and of our obligation to serve one another under God, was of supreme importance, for it was contributing to the general spiritual atmosphere. In view of the fact that things are not working harmoniously in the industrial world at the present time, and that, wherever we affix the blame, we are in a state of society where individual action contrary to the common good is far too prevalent, it was of the greatest importance that our sense of oneness in the spiritual life should be strengthened, and that the forces likely to counteract these grave tendencies should be made more powerful. The London District Unitarian Society was a religious ganglion, providing a junction between the nerve of need and the nerve of service, and although the junction was not quite complete, it was a junction, and they were answering to the need for help as well as they could.

The Rev. R. T. Herford gave a sympathetic account of his work at Peckham, and of the successful classes which he has been conducting there among the young people for the discussion of the fundamenta's of religious faith. Mr. F. Maddison made a very earnest plea that the spirit of worship should not be sacrificed in our churches, which existed, and would be needed more and more for this purpose, for the spiritual rather than the intellectual enlightenment of those who attended them. The Reports were adopted, and the officers for the ensuing year were elected on the motion of Mr. F. Allen, seconded by Mr. Rosling. The meeting closed after an expression of sympathy with Mrs. Sydney Martineau in her illness had been voiced which the secretary was requested to forward to her.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Battle.—News has been received of the death of second Lieutenant Eric Burgess, who was killed in action while leading his men in France. He was only 19, a young man of great promise and fine courage. His father, Mr. Sydney H. Burgess, who is now out in the East, was a constant attender at the old Battle Chapel when living in that town.

Bootle. — Second Lieut. W. Short, minister of the Bootle Free Church, writes as follows from "Somewhere in France": "I should like to be allowed through the columns of THE INQUIRER to place on record evidence of the loyalty that obtains in my church. Although it is nearly eighteen months since the congregation was faced with the problem of 'carrying on' without me, the bond of attachment has grown stronger throughout that time. My mail of the last few days fully bears this out. After working in a rear area for three weeks, I had started out on Saturday morning, April 21, with a party of men for the front. Presently word was passed up to halt, as a messenger had a wire for me. My congregation at its Annual Meeting had telegraphed its good wishes for my speedy and safe return. The thing was very dramatic and most opportune, seeing I was moving forward into the danger zone. Last week a big box of chocolates reached me with 'the love and best wishes of the Lonely-ites,' these being eleven women members who have clubbed together for consolation during the absence at the war of their men-folk. A day or two later, my sure friend, Mr. Robert Dibble, Chairman of the Congregation, sent a parcel of tobacco and cigarettes. Next a registered packet came to hand, containing a valuable pair of Carl Zeiss field glasses, bearing the inscription: 'Presented to the Rev. W. Short, B.A., by members of Bootle Free Church as a mark of affection and esteem, April, 1917.' About the same time word reached me that an anonymous member had sent a cheque for £12 to the Church Treasurer so that 'Mr. Short might know the Church started its new year free from debt.' Behind these gifts is the steady service of ministers and laymen who supply the pulpit; also the staunch adhesion of officers and members. Flowers are not very profuse in Bootle, but I should like the Unitarian public to know that the fine flower of loyalty flourishes there."

Chesterfield.—The following extract is from the May issue of the Elder Yard Chapel (Chesterfield) Calendar: "The bronze cross with roundels of green mother-of-pearl that is now placed permanently upon the Communion Table is the gift of Messrs. H., C., and W. Broomhead and Miss Broomhead. It perpetuates the memory of another of those devoted sons of the Church, the late Mr. George Broomhead. It has been both a privilege and a joy for the Minister to design this cross, that has been so well carried out by the Leicester Dryad Company." The late Mr. Broomhead, who for a good number of years was the Borough treasurer for Chesterfield, was for a long period closely identified with the cause at Elder Yard. He was a trustee, and until compelled to resign through advancing years, was an active worker in both church and Sunday school.

Coalville.—The Unitarians at Coalville held a special Service on the afternoon of Saturday, May 12, and a welcome was given to fourteen new members who have joined the congregation during the past few months. Membership cards were presented and an appropriate address was delivered by the Rev. John C. Ballantyne, of Nottingham. The North Midland Association is proud of this congregation—a small band as numbers go, but full of spirit and hopefulness, conducting their services, their school, and their Bible Class by their own efforts and the help of lay preachers. During several years of constant and devoted effort they have met with many difficulties, but "baffled to fight better" has been their motto, and now, for them, the sun of success is shining.

Colne.—Successful Sunday School Anniversary Services were held in the Stanley Street Church, on Sunday, May 13, the Rev. H. Fisher Short, of Park Lane, Wigan, preaching morning and evening to appreciative congregations. The attendances and collections were up to the average. Anthems were rendered by the choir, and Mrs. Lonsdale was the soloist.

London: Blackfriars Mission.—On Sunday, May 5, the usual Spring Flower Services were held at Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, which had been tastefully decorated by Miss Francis with the kind and beautiful gifts of country friends. Special and appropriate sermons were preached morning and evening by the minister and warden, the Rev. Wm. J. Piggott, and in the afternoon a popular Children's Service was conducted by Mr. Fred Home, A.K.C. We understand that Mr. Piggott has resigned his charge and retires from office at the end of the summer.

London: Highgate.—On Sunday morning, May 13, by invitation of the Rev. Addison A. Charlesworth, Miss G. A. Brackenbury, Honorary Speaker for the Ministry of Food, delivered an address at the Unitarian Church. The service was conducted by Mr. Charlesworth, who read the King's Proclamation. Miss Brackenbury, who has been speaking in many parts of the country as well as in London, is of opinion that even now the people are not awake to the urgent necessity of doing without everything not essential to health and efficiency, and especially of exercising the utmost economy in the consumption of grain. She strongly deprecated the spirit of grumbling, and the habit of focusing the attention on the faults, real or imaginary, of others, and emphasised the fact that putting the blame on the Government, the rich, the poor, the men or the women, would not get us out of our difficulties. It was no easy task that all were asked to perform, and it would be wise to enlist the services of many C's—Courage, Charity, Carefulness, Commonsense, and Cultivation. The co-operation of all classes and the utmost self-sacrifice on the part of the truly patriotic would be needed to make up for any lack of these virtues in the ignorant or selfish. If the nation would respond to this call for voluntary self-sacrifice, the speaker predicted that it would become stronger, nobler, and greater than before.

London: Mansford Street.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services in connection with Mansford Street Church and Mission were held on Sunday, May 13. The Rev. Arthur W. Fox, of Todmorden, conducted the services in the afternoon and evening. There were good attendances, and the services were greatly enjoyed by all. Sixty elder scholars, teachers, and friends were present at the tea and Conference following the afternoon service. The flowers were taken to the Children's Hospital in Hackney Road.

Nelson.—On Saturday, May 5, a successful Sale of Work was held in connection with the Unitarian Church, opened by Mr. Lawrence Clegg, of Bury, which resulted in a sum amounting to over £101 being realised, leaving £93 clear after all expenses were paid. The main part of this, along with grants from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, will enable the church to pay off £105 of debt on the church building. The Mayor and Mayoress of Nelson were present during part of the proceedings and contributed financial help, as did Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Clegg, and others. The Sale of Work Committee have since passed a hearty vote of thanks to the Rev. H. Bodell Smith and Mrs. Smith for their efforts in this connection.

Nottingham.—On Sunday morning last a service in commemoration of the late Mr. Richard Enfield of Nottingham, who was born on April 5, 1817, was held in the High Pavement Chapel. It was conducted by the Rev. J. C. Ballantyne, and the address was given by the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson of Gee Cross (who is a nephew of the late Mr. Enfield) from the text "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright" (Ps. xxxvii. 37). Mr. Dowson spoke of all the happy recollections that were associated in his mind with the Enfield family from his earliest years, and the inspiration and help its members had been to so many, from Dr. William Enfield of famous memory, down through his son Henry Enfield, Town Clerk of Nottingham, and his sons, Henry, William (who succeeded his father as Town Clerk), and Edward, to the youngest of them, Richard Enfield, whose birth they were met to commemorate. None knew how much they owed to him and to his high character and example. The members of the High Pavement would never forget what he was to them, his help to their church and schools, and his devoted labours in the Sunday school for nearly forty years. His fellow-citizens were under deep obligation to him for his work in connection with Nottingham charities and educational institutions, and his profession of the law for the high example he set of courtesy, rectitude, and devotion to duty, while his leading share in the establishment of the Nottingham University College and the Oxford and Cambridge University Extension Lectures (which owed their inception in great measure to him and to the late Prof. Stuart) put a still wider circle in his debt. In private life his kindness, his generosity, his culture, his wise advice to those in doubt and difficulty, and his ready help in enabling them to overcome both, endeared him to all, and his name was still one to conjure with in Nottingham. Among those present at the service were the late Mr. Enfield's son and daughters, and other relatives, and also very many who had the privilege of his friendship and of sharing in his work.

Preston.—On Sunday, May 6, the congregation of the Unitarian Church had the pleasure of a visit from their minister, the Rev. Mortimer Rowe, on the eve of his departure to France. Since his enlistment early last year, Mr. Rowe has served in the R.A.M.C., first in hospital work and afterwards in Field Ambulance training, and has now proceeded overseas for active service with the E. Lancs. Field Ambulance. On the previous Sunday, the Rev. J. W. Bishop brought to a close his term of office as locum tenens, and the congregation took the opportunity of expressing both verbally and in a practical way, their indebtedness to him for his devoted work as pastor during Mr. Rowe's absence.

South Cheshire and District Association.—The 27th Annual Meeting of the Association took the form of an emergency meeting at the Beech Street Free Christian Church, Crewe, on Thursday, May 10. All the churches were represented except Newcastle. After a short presidential address from the Rev. J. Park Davies, the minutes were read and adopted, as was also the condensed report for the year 1916. Miss Simpson, of Nantwich, was elected President for 1917-18. At the Conference the Rev. A. E. O'Connor, B.D., of Shrewsbury, read an excellent paper on 'International Brotherhood.' He traced the growth of the principle from its family and tribal beginnings through Jesus, Paul and Christianity, through the Protestant Reformation and the French Reformation down to the present times. He said that we were still in the tribal stage even in the most enlightened nations. How could we realise International Brotherhood? There were only two methods: (i.) the propagation of right principles; (ii.) a federation of the nations in a league for enforcing peace. Votes of thanks were passed at the tea table to the retiring officers, to the reader of the paper, and to Crewe for its hospitality.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS

Indian Women and Indentured Labour.

It is quite in keeping with the best traditions of Indian womanhood that one of the most remarkable meetings held to condemn the indentured labour system and to demand its early abolition was that convened lately by several well-known ladies of Bombay. The speakers included Lady Mehta, Lady Chandavarkar, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, the poet (well known to some of our readers), Mrs. Ghandhi, and other bearers of honoured names. Although none of those who addressed the meeting had the slightest wish to embarrass the Government at this juncture, it was resolved that a small and representative committee should wait upon the Viceroy to express to him the feelings of Indian women on the subject under discussion. Public feeling has been deeply stirred by the recent revelations of the condition of things in Fiji, and Miss Cursetji won general approval when she said that it mattered little whether the Indian women who went to Fiji as indentured labourers were poor or not, their fate affected all women.

The Martyrdom of Native Races.

The following passage from the pamphlet entitled 'Native Races and Peace Terms,' by Mr. John H. Harris, Organising Secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society, reprinted from The Contemporary Review, should be pondered well by all who are alive to the responsibilities which Imperial reconstruction will lay upon us after the war: "The suffering of native people and the depopulation of their territories within the last fifty years has demonstrated the evils of white industrialism, and if civilisation will heed the lessons this martyrdom would teach it, there is yet time to stop that degradation, disintegration of tribal life, and the thoughtless exploitation which will ultimately spell economic ruin to the white races no less than to the native tribes. The depopulation figures of the tropical and sub-tropical world are worth a moment's reflection. It is a disturbing thought that the hecatombs of dead, as a result of the great war, will probably not reach, nor anything like reach, the reduction of population, mainly by violent methods, amongst native peoples since the 1884 American and European Congress at Berlin.

* * *

"No student of colonial affairs will deny," Mr. Harris continues, "that since 1884 the depopulation of Central Africa alone has exceeded 10,000,000. Herr Dernburg's was one of the first authoritative voices raised against the colossal destruction of African life in German colonies, which he would probably admit exceeded 500,000 in German South-West Africa, and almost as heavy a proportion in Togoland. In the Pacific Ocean the ghastly experiment of the Franco-British Condominium in the New Hebrides during the same period has been primarily responsible for a reduction of the population from 650,000 to less than 65,000. What would not Germany have given could she have called back to industrial life the able-bodied Herreros? What would the copra merchants of Europe give to-day if they could call into activity again those prematurely dead Polynesians of the South Seas? These countless thousands of the world's workers have gone, and it is useless to bemoan the fact; but to the insane folly of the past would be added the crime of to-day if we ignore the lessons which a thirty years' martyrdom of native races should teach us."

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. Cumberland.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, Miss E. Kingston, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth, S.O.—PAYING GUESTS received.—Particulars from Miss Smith. Telegrams: The Heugh, Askrigg, S.O.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, Thoralby, Aysgarth, S.O.—TO LET, Furnished, 4 bedrooms, 2 sitting-rooms, kitchen, &c.

TO LET, furnished, at Windermere, COTTAGE. Six rooms. Sanitation.—Apply Miss Beard, 12 Cornwall Road, Rochester.

KENSINGTON.—THREE ROOMS, furnished, TO LET, June, July, August. Excellent cooking and attendance.—Arthur, 42 Abingdon Road, W.8.

Miscellaneous.

PIANO FOR SALE. Chappell. £25. Treadle Sewing Machine, almost new, five drawers, cover, flap. Bargain, £4 4*s*.—22 Allison Grove, Dulwich.

HUCKABACK TOWELLING in bundles of Remnants. Sufficient to make six full-size Bedroom Towels, only 6*s*. 6*d*. (postage 6*d*.). Send postcard for this month's Bargain List, free.—Hutton's, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT.—We positively pay highest prices. Up to 7*s*. per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 12*s*. on silver, 15*s*. on gold, 2*l*. on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed by the reliable genuine firm.—S. Cann & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT, any condition; 6*d*. per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite; 2*s*. each on silver; 3*s*. each on gold; 9*s*. each on platinum. Strictly genuine. Cash by return. Offers for old Jewellery.—I. Rayburn & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any?

I will pay 5*d*. for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s*. each on silver, 3*s*. each on gold, 8*s*. each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. What is the use of artificial teeth that you do not wear lying in a drawer? But don't be misled by higher advertised prices. Far better write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any make of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Bankers: London City and Midland Bank, Ltd. When sending kindly mention The Inquirer.

E. LEWIS & CO., 29 London St., SOUTHPORT, Lancs.

ESTABLISHED 1873.

Printed by John Edward Francis, Athenæum Press, 11 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4, and Published by The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 19, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3908. NEW SERIES, No. 1011.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

Tuesday, May 29.—RELIGIOUS SERVICE. Essex Church, The Mall, Kensington, 7.30 p.m. Devotional Service: Rev. C. M. Wright. Preacher: Rev. W. H. Drummond.

Wednesday, May 30.—ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING. Essex Hall, 11 a.m. The President in the Chair.

PUBLIC MEETING. Essex Hall, 7 p.m. Addresses on "The Need and the Opportunity for the Reorganisation of the Religious Life of the Country." Dr. Carpenter in the Chair. Speakers: The Master of Balliol (A. L. Smith, Esq.), Prof. Caroline Spurgeon, Rev. Neander Anderton, Rev. R. F. Rattray.

Thursday, May 31.—CONVERSAZIONE. Essex Hall, 8 p.m.

Tickets, 1s. each, at the Book Room.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, London.

The ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS of the ASSOCIATION will be held at ESSEX HALL, LONDON, on WHIT-TUESDAY, MAY 29, 1917.

The Programme of Proceedings will be as follows:—

11 a.m. President's Address. Business Meeting for the Reception of the Report and the Election of Officers. All friends welcome. Followed by a Conference on 'The Year's Work with my Class.'

2.30 p.m. Public Meeting. Address by Mr. T. M. Chalmers, M.A., Honorary Secretary of the Association, on 'Child Religion and the Future Sunday School.' To be followed by discussion.

4.30 p.m. Tea in Small Hall.

T. M. CHALMERS
BERTRAM LISTER } Hon. Secs.

NATIONAL UNITARIAN TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE TWENTY-FOURTH

Annual Public Meeting

WILL BE HELD AT

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, LONDON,

ON

Friday, 1st June, 1917.

The President, Rev. Dr. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER will take the Chair at 7 p.m.

Lieut.-Colonel C. S. BULLOCK

WILL SPEAK ON

'The Progress of Prohibition in other Lands.'

Business Meeting of Members at 4.30. Tea, 6 p.m.

UNITARIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

A Public Meeting

WILL BE HELD ON

Wednesday, MAY 30, at 4.30, at ESSEX HALL

when a Paper will be read by the President of the Society

JOHN C. WARREN, Esq., M.A.

Subject:

"From Puritanism to Unitarianism at Lincoln."

UNIVERSITY HALL,

Gordon Square, W.C.

(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

May.

27. Rev. DENDY AGATE, B.A.

June.

3. Rev. W. TUDOR JONES, Ph.D. of Bristol.

BRITISH LEAGUE OF UNITARIAN AND OTHER LIBERAL CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

ANNUAL MEETING,

Wednesday, May 30th, at 2.30,

AT

ESSEX HALL.

Short opening Service conducted by Miss Margaret Crook (Manchester College, Oxford).

Mrs. Blake Odgers (President) in the chair, supported by Mrs. Bernard Allen, Mrs. S. Martineau, Miss Johnstone (President Manchester District League), and Miss Clephan.

All friends cordially invited.

Central Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers' Union.

ANNUAL MEETING

THURSDAY, MAY 31, at Two o'clock,

at ESSEX HALL.

Miss TAGART in the chair.

Supported by Rev. J. CYRIL FLOWER, Rev. W. H. SANDS, H. G. CHANCELLOR, M.P., and Mr. JOHN BEGG.

Friends and Supporters cordially invited.

UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN PEACE FELLOWSHIP.

BASIS.—"That war and preparations for war are irreconcilable with the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ and the best interests of mankind."

A Meeting of Fellowship Members and Associates, and of all friends accepting the Basis, will be held on Thursday afternoon, MAY 31, at 2.30 p.m., at the Office of the Peace Society, 47 New Broad Street, London, E.C.2.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,

NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A Public School on Modern Lines, with a Preparatory Department.

Head Master: H. LANG JONES, M.A. Oxon.

Full Prospectus on application.

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.

Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL

and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.

No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL

HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, May 27.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. Penwarden.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11, Rev. F. Hankinson; 7, Rev. H. C. Horsley, M.A.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. Weatherall, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. Basil Martin, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11, Mr. Frank G. Fincham; 6.30, Mr. J. H. Smith.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. B. Lister, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Henry Gow, B.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. Charlesworth.

Ilford, High Road, 11, Mr. Kinsman; 6.30, Rev. A. H. Biggs, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Mr. Harvey Lewis; 7, Rev. J. Vint Laughland.

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. Hankinson.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. Herford, B.A.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Rev. J. Arthur Pearson.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. Gordon Cooper, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. R. Clark-Lewis.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. Lionel Tayler.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11, Mr. J. Harry Smith; 6.30, Mr. Joseph P. Rosling.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Clement E. Pike, F.R.Hist.S.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15, Rev. Edgar Daplyn.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Coverdale Sharpe.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. Delta Evans.

Aberystwyth, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

Bath, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A.

Birmingham, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Birmingham, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Blackburn, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. F. Hall.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.

Brighton, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30.

Bristol, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. W. Tudor Jones.

Buxton, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. Street.

Cambridge, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. James Harwood, B.A.

Chatham, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. Cottier.

Chester, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. Evans.

Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. Beckh.

Dean Row, 10.45, Rev. E. A. Voysey, M.A.

Dover, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. Ginever, B.A.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. Savell Hicks, M.A.

Dudley, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Glyn Evans.

Exeter, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A.

Gee Cross, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

Hastings, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. Lockett.

Hindley, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. Rattray, M.A., Ph.D.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. Jones.

Hull, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. Falconer, B.Litt.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Hargrove, M.A.

Leicester, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. B. Fraser.

Lewes, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. Connell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans.

Liverpool, Bootle Free Church, 11, Rev. C. Roper, B.A.; 6.30, Mr. W. H. Jacobsen.

Liverpool, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. Mellor.

Liverpool, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A.

Maidstone, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Manchester, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. McLachlan.

Manchester, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A.

Manchester, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. McLauchlan, M.A.

Nantwich, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. Park Davies, B.A., B.D.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Alfred Hall, M.A.

Newport, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. Ruddle.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. Dr. J. E. Carpenter.

Portsmouth, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. Thompson.

Portsmouth, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. Bond.

Sheffield Upper Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. W. Lee.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. Bowen Evans, M.A.

Southampton, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. Victor Moody.

Southend, Darnley Road Church, 11.

Southport, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. Jellie, B.A.

Torquay, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Worthington, B.A.

Tunbridge Wells, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. Burrows.

Wallasey, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. Ernest Parry.

Warwick, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. Gardner Preston.

West Kirby, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. Ramsden Balmforth.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. Wilfred Harris, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. Wyndham Heathcote, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. Sinclaire, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. Horace Westwood, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATHS.

Smith.—On May 17, at Highfield, Penwortham, Preston, John Whittaker Smith in his 81st year.

Thomas.—On May 19, at Sunnyside, Woolley Road, Matlock, the Rev. Halliwell Thomas, aged 72.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Rev. W. R Shanks, Secretary, Yorkshire Unitarian Union, 61 ASHGROVE, BRADFORD.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
Per Quarter	2	6
Per Half-Year	4	6
Per Year	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to The Inquirer Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 *Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.*4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
Per Page	6	0	0
Half Page	3	0	0
Per Column	2	0	0
Inch in Column	0	3	6
Front Page—Inch in Column	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 243
THE SPIRIT OF FELLOWSHIP AND POWER . 245
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 246
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Third Anniversary of the Declaration of War 246
Nature and God 246
The Rev. H. E. Dowson and the Freedom of Hyde 247
Unitarian Historical Society . . . 247
BOOKS AND REVIEWS:—
Human Ideals 247
Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society 247
MEMORIAL NOTICES:—
The Rev. Halliwell Thomas 248
Mr. Seymour Goodwin 248
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 248
Lawrence House 249
Liverpool District Missionary Association 249
The Progress of Religious Liberty in Italy 249
Prohibition in the United States . . 250
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 251
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 252

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

MAY we draw the special attention of our readers to what Mrs. Bernard Allen says about the Belgian Hospital Fund this week. The lists of subscriptions have been small lately; the account at the Bank is running low; all that we have is pledged already for the support of the work which we have in hand; and —in a word—we want more money. We do not say this in any mood of complaint; far from it, for we have not made any special appeal for a considerable time, and we know from experience how prompt and generous our supporters are, when we make our needs known. We have always maintained that our work must be continued to the end of the war. It is only in that way that all the fine human feeling which has been created can be made available for the noble purposes of friendship in the days of peace. We say nothing of our own reputation for practical generosity, but we have reason to know that it stands very high with our Belgian Allies, and we must do our best to live up to it.

* * *

THE Editor has just returned from another visit of friendship to the Belgian institutions in France, which have been helped by our Fund. Once again we have been deeply impressed by the variety and the practical helpfulness of the work, which it has been our good fortune to achieve under Mrs. Allen's able administration. Everywhere we are received as old and valued friends, and the Belgian Hospital Fund is recognised as an invaluable institution. It was a special pleasure to visit the large civilian colony at the Chartreuse de Neuville, and to see the admirable use which is being made of all our gifts for the health and comfort of the children. The organisation and management are both excellent. The glimpse of the open-air nursery for the babies was delightful after many days spent in the warlike atmosphere of hospitals and camps.

* * *

WE have, of course, a special affection for the Belgian "Hut" in Calais. It has more than fulfilled its promise of usefulness. It is continually thronged with men, and it has become so much a part of their daily life that the difficulty is to realise now how they ever managed to exist without it. In a neighbouring street is the new "Maternité" which we have furnished and promised to maintain for the wives and newly born infants of Belgian soldiers and civilians. It is a delightful haven of peace, dainty in its arrangements and spotlessly clean. Mme. Lageot, who will superintend the work, said to us with pride that there was nothing to equal it in Calais. We are glad that it should be so, for it is an offering of our goodwill to the mothers of the new Belgium which will spring up from the ashes of war.

* * *

IT was a signal piece of good fortune which enabled the present writer to combine these visits for the Belgian Hospital Fund with work for our own men in the Huts of the Y.M.C.A. Every evening was occupied with lectures and services over a wide area and under the most various conditions, and everywhere the speaker was received with the utmost cordiality by the Y.M.C.A. Headquarter's staff and with interest and delight by the men. It would be hard to find anywhere keener or more intelligent listeners. One scene may be taken as representative of many others. It was in a rest camp near the sea a few evenings ago. The men had come down for a short respite from a very hot part of the line. They crowded the great tent of the Y.M.C.A. and stood in ranks outside, about 1,200 of them, listening intently to a lecture on Garibaldi. After they had given vent to their feelings at the close, the speaker led them in evening worship. There was a silence that could be felt, and then as with one voice they joined in the Lord's Prayer. Moments like these are not easily forgotten. It is seldom that it is given to us to enter into such close and uplifting fellowship with our fellowmen.

* * *

No words can fitly describe the glorious work which the Y.M.C.A. is doing for our men in France. The noble band of men and women, who work in the camps at the base or up the line, is a fighting force of no small value, for they keep faith and courage alive in countless hearts. And they in turn are being changed into something bigger than they were before by the discipline of a strange and exciting experience. The differences which bulk so largely in our Church life at home cease to trouble men over there, because everybody is expected to live on the high level of self-sacrifice and brotherly kindness, and his worth is tested by that alone. It is not the denominational loyalty, but the large and inclusive Christian loyalty which counts. There is a fellowship in effort after a divine standard of goodness, and a spirit of friendliness in the daily life of service, which make men anxious to understand one another. It is an experiment in re-union of a far-reaching kind, which has come about without foresight or contrivance in answer to an overwhelming need.

* * *

Men who can pray together and serve together in this way, though they may not think alike or express their doctrines in exactly the same terms, have learned the true secret of Christian fellowship, for heart answers to heart and spirit joins with spirit in the high enterprises of love and obedience. To them the whole life of religion becomes larger and more wonderful. They gain a new power of discovering the presence of God in unexpected places. Every striving of the human spirit to reach upward to the light calls forth their reverence. Even sharp differences of thought assume a new meaning and cease to irritate, for they may all be part of the effort of sincere souls to grow in the knowledge of God, while the Love which triumphs through sacrifice and spends itself in service remains supreme over all.

* * *

Meanwhile whatever may be the result of this quickening of new sympathies the work of the Y.M.C.A. goes on, and the best way of showing our appreciation of it is by generous support. If follows the army wherever it goes. It has already established a centre on Vimy Ridge. It is quick to see new needs and to meet them. It has done excellent social work for young officers as well as for our men. It is indeed difficult to grasp the extent and variety of its activities and the spirit of keenness and practical good sense which pervades the whole organization, until a man has seen and felt it all for himself. At the present moment in many places in France open-air life and sports are being arranged for the summer. Everywhere there is need of strong and capable men to go over and help. For work like this nothing can be too good. The Churches at home will be unworthy of the ideals of Christian service, which they exist to promote, if they do not freely offer of their best.

* * *

The news from Russia this week is a good deal more cheerful, and we hope that the worst danger has been passed. M. Kerensky, the new Minister of War, has the reputation of being a strong man with a real capacity for leadership. He sees that Russia has still to fight for her freedom, and that the military situation dominates everything. Discipline has been gravely impaired in the army, this must be restored and a vigorous offensive taken in hand without delay. This is his policy, and he does not mince the words in which he has announced it to the people. "It may appear strange," he said to the Congress of Peasants' Delegates, "that I, a civilian who was never a soldier, have undertaken the heavy task of restoring discipline in the army, but I have accepted it because I understand that this discipline is based on honour, duty, and reciprocal respect. I have never known what this discipline is, but nevertheless I propose to introduce an iron discipline into the army, and I am sure that I shall succeed. This discipline is necessary not only at the front, but also in the interior of the country, in order to bring the liberty which has been conquered into the Constituent Assembly."

* * *

The Russian Prime Minister, Prince Lvoff, has made a public statement not less stern and emphatic. He declares on behalf of the Government, that in announcing its desire for a speedy peace, and a peace without annexations or indemnities, it is not supporting a policy of passive defence. Free Russia will not consent to leave under the yoke of German militarism the territories which were abandoned owing to the criminal negligence of the old regime. The following words make it quite clear that in his view no lover of freedom can be content that the war should end in a weak compromise :—

> In order not to hand down to future generations a dishonoured reputation, and in order to remain with raised head among the great democracies, revolutionary Russia must rise to the heights worthy of the power of her army, and all the efforts of the Government will be towards this aim. The existing armistice at the front, which enabled the German Imperial Chancellor to formulate the idea of a separate peace dishonouring to Russia, must cease. The country must speak its imperious word and must send its army to fight. I am sure that the free Russian army, strongly united by discipline based on the reciprocal confidence of officers and soldiers, will know how to defend the honour and dignity of the country, and will give its powerful assistance to the Allies, with whom it is closely united by the blood shed in the great common cause.

* * *

M. Ribot's speech in the French Chamber on Tuesday was an important commentary upon the Russian phrase "Peace without annexation and without indemnity." The danger of all such phrases is that they may be used in the interests of a vague sentimentalism and provide an excuse for ignoring facts and declining the hard tasks of thought. From this the vigour and clarity of the French mind have saved us. In M. Ribot's view it is an elementary demand of justice that Germany should restore what she has ravaged and destroyed, and there is no trace of vindictiveness in terms which will exact this from her.

> The formula "No annexations, no indemnity" [he said] does not apply to restitution based upon right and justice and to the horrifying outrages committed in France. There is no question of a war indemnity placed upon the vanquished as though it were a fine. What we demand is reparation and justice. The whole world shall judge of our case. That is how Russia and France understand the words "no annexation." We shall see on what terms we can agree with our Allies to end the war. No fundamental differences divide us. What both Governments want is a lasting peace based upon justice and the disappearance of German military despotism. When the German people, whose right to development we do not deny, understands this, peace will be more easy to obtain. That is what is said in Washington as well as in Petrograd. Meanwhile, the Russian Army must understand its duty and make a victorious offensive. Then, when the American divisions have arrived, the enemy will see the collapse of their hopes. They will come to ask for peace frankly, instead of hypocritically by the underhand methods of to-day, and we will give them terms worthy of France, of her past and present, and if they do not sue for peace, we shall know how to exact it.

* * *

We hope that the speech which General Smuts made in London last Tuesday will be widely read and deeply pondered. It was remarkable alike for its political vision, its moral idealism, and its splendid eloquence. Dealing with the colour problem in South Africa he laid it down that in all their relations with the natives they must build upon the bedrock of a Christian moral code, honesty, justice and fair play.

> Of course [he continued] that applies to other countries besides South Africa. If you ask my opinion what is wrong with Europe, I would say that it seems to me that the moral basis in Europe has become undermined. All this enormous superstructure of civilisation and commerce and trade, all those enormous developments that have been built on that basis, have become too much for it. The Christian moral code has proved too weak a basis, and so you see the building sagging and all this ruin with which Europe is now involved. If this applies to the European peoples, still more does it apply to the natives in South Africa, people who have the simplest minds possible, people who do not understand ideals and who are almost animal-like in the simplicity of their nature—people, in fact, who appreciate only the most primitive human feelings. If we want to make a success in South Africa we know we shall have to proceed on the basis of the bedrock of the Christian moral code.

THE SPIRIT OF FELLOWSHIP AND POWER.

On the day of Pentecost there were people who said "These men are full of new wine." All they could see in the strange enthusiasm which marked the birth of the Christian Church was something disorderly and unpleasant. Then Peter stood up and proclaimed the truth that what they took for drunkenness was due to the outpouring of God's Spirit. We read the narrative now in the light of all the sacred memories which have gathered round it, and we take it for granted that if we had been present we should have shared in the exaltation of spirit and the open vision of that hour. But have we any just ground for thinking so? The people who talked about new wine were probably very like ourselves, earnest believers with settled habits of thought and worship, convinced that God's grace has its authorised channels, and more sensitive to what is crude or disturbing in new forms of religious expression than to their significance for the future. Now as then anything that breaks in with a sharp challenge upon the peaceful decorum of our religious life is felt to be doubtful and unpleasant. This is the reason why in revolutionary days so many sincere men are to be found on the side of things as they are.

How slow we are to read the lessons of history! Many a time in the past religion, in a spirit of adventurous youthfulness, has broken away from its own traditions and proclaimed its need of a new language and a fresh method of appeal. As the familiar forms became staled by custom or false emphasis crowds of men ceased to use them. Fiery warnings and pathetic entreaties failed to draw them back into the ways of conformity and obedience. Often they drifted far away from the ancient moorings; they tried to live without God in the world; they made experiments of their own in new forms of fellowship; some of them became the easy victims of the intellectual quack or the religious charlatan; until something occurred to awake in them the vast longings of the spiritual nature once more, and the spirit of life began to create new forms of fellowship in which the souls of men could dwell in gladness and strength. Many of their contemporaries saw in all this the intoxication of human pride and discontent, which refused to accept the way of wisdom and the yoke of discipline; but men of vision, who had learned to read the lesson of the day of Pentecost aright, rejoiced that once again God had poured out of his Spirit upon all flesh.

At the present moment we stand in trembling expectation on the threshold of a similar experience. We await with eagerness a new outpouring of the Spirit of fellowship and power. We know that the life of the civilised world cannot pass through the whirlwind and the fire without testing both the substance and the forms of its faith. A chapter in spiritual development which has lasted for centuries has come to an end, and a fresh chapter, with an accent of its own in thought and language, has begun. Already a few lines of it have been written, and what is essential in the religious life of men is beginning to appear in a new setting. Perhaps we hardly feel it in the routine of our religious activities at home, but out in France, in the camps where the young men who hold the future of the British Empire in their hands are gathered, something very wonderful is happening. Amid the fierce business of war and in spite of crowds of men who are still quite indifferent, there is an awakening among our soldiers of freedom, which is rich in promise for the intellectual life, the moral idealism, and the religious faith of the future. No one can lecture to them on great themes of human interest, or appeal to their instincts of unselfishness and loyalty when they meet for worship in the Y.M.C.A. Huts on Sunday evening, without feeling a triumphant sense of it all through him. Conventional differences have disappeared; there is a craving for fellowship, and a strong devotion to ideals of generosity and kindness. Service is binding man to man, and leading manhood into closer and more conscious union with God. And in spite of its unconventionality and the strange and critical questions which are often asked, there is no break with vital Christianity; for more and more Christianity itself is understood as the religion of the good life, which makes a man a brave and loyal comrade and expresses itself in countless forms of human service and goodwill. Those who take any part in this work realise more and more that they are in the presence of a new revelation of the Spirit of God. For them every day is rich with the experience out of which the religion of the future must grow. But many are the searching and anxious questions which are asked about the attitude of the churches at home. Will they have an understanding of the situation which will enable them to outgrow their stale disputes, to lay aside their unreal divisions, to place matters which are secondary or indifferent in their proper place, and to devote their own spiritual energies without stint to the service of this new movement of life?

Every new outpouring of the Spirit brings with it a challenge to open our minds wide to fresh aspects of truth and to tread unfamiliar paths without shrinking. The challenge is often met with spiritual blindness and dull resistance. We prefer our own routine to God's unfamiliar discipline. But that cannot be so for men who have penetrated to the heart of Christianity and discovered that it is not in the first place either a creed or a ritual, but a quickening Spirit. It is not bound by the forms which men have made either to interpret its message or to convey its power. Already many of these forms have had their day and ceased to be, and others which have been of sacred use for many generations may have to go, if they can serve no longer as the simple and natural expression of religion in the modern world. Probably some of us will view such a possibility with deep misgiving or even with frank dislike; and to do anything to hasten it may seem like an offence against the piety which we owe to the Christian past or our own special line of tradition. But the changes which we resist are often God's chosen opportunity. Through the revolutions of history and the storms of human fate, while our little systems rise and pass away, the Spirit of Christ lives on in undimmed splendour in the mind of God, and it never ceases its divine work of fashioning the raw material of human life into a new creation.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

THE CHARACTER OF MICHEL BEAUPUY.

A meeker man
Than this lived never, nor a more benign,
Meek though enthusiastic Injuries
Made him more gracious, and his nature then
Did breathe its sweetness out most sensibly,
As aromatic flowers on Alpine turf,
When foot hath crushed them. He through the events
Of that great change wandered in perfect faith,
As through a book, an old romance, or tale
Of Fairy, or some dream of action wrought
Behind the summer clouds. By birth he ranked
With the most noble, but unto the poor
Among mankind he was in service bound,
As by some tie invisible, oaths professed
To a religious order. Man he loved
As man; and, to the mean and the obscure,
And all the homely in their homely works,
Transferred a courtesy which had no air
Of condescension; but did rather seem
A passion and a gallantry, like that
Which he, a soldier, in his idler day
Had paid to woman: somewhat vain he was,
Or seemed so, yet it was not vanity,
But fondness, and a kind of radiant joy
Diffused around him, while he was intent
On works of love or freedom, or revolved
Complacently the progress of a cause,
Whereof he was a part.

'The Prelude,' Wordsworth.

Not in careless pleasure, but in watchful love and trust of God your father, in faithful and fervent desire to be His child, is the secret of life's victory, and of the overcoming of death by life.

Stopford A. Brooke.

Give unto us, O Lord, the spirit of brightness and of courage. Help us to play the man, and so to help others to face courageously whatsoever tomorrow may bring to meet them. Let not these shadows oppress our spirits, lest our gloom should darken the light by which others have to live. Say unto our souls, "Be of good courage; fear not, for I am with thee." Say unto our land, "Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice, for the Lord will do great things." Amen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. Letters cannot be inserted without the writer's name, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF THE DECLARATION OF WAR.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—One may safely assume that in August of this year we shall still be in the grip of the war; and at any rate it will be easy to abandon preparations made now on that assumption, if a surprisingly early peace is declared. This letter is written to express the hope that preparations may now be set on foot for the conduct of simultaneous Services of Commemoration in our churches on Sunday, August 5, the third anniversary of our declaration of war. There is no necessity to dwell upon the advisability of making our services on an occasion of this kind harmonise as to the actual day on which they are held, and the style and order of service used. And as to the idea of holding such services at all, probably there are few amongst us who will not rejoice in the opportunity to express in some such solemn and reverent way their pent-up gratitude to God for all the loyalty and devotion to our cause which have been manifested during these three years; to seek the peace of a perfectly pure national desire; to pray for a profound purgation in the soul of the nation at home, safe behind our human barrage; to pledge ourselves to sustain the loftiest spirit in our strife and to fight on with no less worthy weapon than the "sword bathed in heaven." We should make it felt, on such a day, that at a time like this the one influence most urgently needed is the uplifting power of religion. Such simultaneous services in all the churches (and they were held last year in all the "Free Church Council" churches, for example) do much to purify and inspire our purpose and keep us strong in the determination to win for God and His kingdom, and nothing less.

The simultaneous services held last year on November 5 lacked something; for several of our churches had already held commemoration services on August 4, and this other date had no special significance. May we hope to secure unanimity this year? May we also have some united preparation for the service in the form, say, of a letter, embodying suggested preparatory readings and prayers, to be circulated among all the members of our churches at least one week before the service, so that on the actual day itself there may come a watershed of spiritual quickening to hearts made ready, and a deep stirring of consecration to a worthier life, in us all? It may be that the National Conference Committee have already considered the matter and come to some decision; if so I trust they will forgive an apparent interference by an outsider. If the idea is to be carried out, it might also be good to consult those who held commemoration services last year, as to their experience, and any suggestions they have to offer.—Yours, &c.,

John C. Ballantyne.

10 Devonshire Road,
West Bridgford,
Nottingham.

NATURE AND GOD.

To the Editor of The Inquirer.

Sir,—In the book which Christians call the "Word of God" it is recorded, and on Sundays throughout Christendom it is read aloud, that "God made the world and saw that it was good." Nevertheless the Book of Nature has, I think, been read with less sympathy as well as less diligence by the chosen guardians and directors of our national religion than by seekers after truth without the gates. One of our names for God is "the Creator." Does the Christian Church really mean that, and teach that? If so, this world (natural as opposed to artificial) and other worlds too far for telescope and too small for microscope to bring to human eyes, should surely be approached with as much reverence as any painting in the National Gallery. Youth's aspiration is primarily to create. It depends upon his gifts of inheritance whether it be a painting, a mechanism, or a writing. But whatever the ideal towards which he aspires, he does but model a comparatively clumsy imitation of one little bit of the supreme Artist's great work. Man strives to "give life" to his creations. Our highest praise to a genius is that he has given life to his subject. It is, however, but a form of speech. His modelling is in clay; and through that modelling one artist can discern the feeling and thought of him who modelled. The great Artist of all—mechanic, dramatist, and all else beside—models in realities; living, moving realities, from the sunbeam to the snail. "Who runs may read."

To return now to the attitude of the Churches. What has been, and is, their point of view? I am not refuting their insistence that revelation of God is found in the heart of man and most in the perfect life as lived by his sons on earth. But this string is the one harped upon continually until all the other strings of religion's harp are left untuned. Is it strange, then, that so many interpreters of that great book, the Universe, find themselves outside the doors that are guarded by the high priests of our national religion? Of all the saints, who is the most loved of the populace? Is it not St. Francis, who took other of God's children into his religious life besides man? And is it not within the scope of religious teaching to extend that attitude of mind towards the whole of God's creation, endeavouring to read the mind of the Artist in his work? In this respect the Archibald System of teaching in Sunday schools accords entirely with the lines I am indicating, and would seem to me to be a move in the right direction.

But if I mistake not, the orthodox teaching has been rather to think of the lower forms of life merely as tools for the use of man. And the practical outcome of this is—Take hold of anything you like that may be of use to you, regardless of why the Creator placed it where it is found,—an attitude which has resulted in much wasteful destruction afterwards deplored as a mistake. What do exponents of the Church mean when they speak of Nature? Do they not frequently use the term as if "she" were a third power—neither God nor devil? In view of the now widespread wonder and concern at the lack of response to the Church's appeal, a few remarks from leading men upon this topic would be to me very acceptable.

Yours, &c.

SUSAN M. GAIRDNER.

West View, Pinner.

THE REV. H. E. DOWSON AND THE FREEDOM OF HYDE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—A few days ago the Hyde Town Council conferred upon the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson the Honorary Freedom of the Borough of Hyde in recognition of his distinguished services to the town during the last fifty years, this being only the second occasion on which the honour has been conferred in Hyde since the Act, authorising such distinctions, was passed in 1885. In the course of the formal proceedings it was publicly stated that, so far as was known, there was no previous record of an Honorary Freedom being conferred by any town upon a clergyman or minister of any Denomination. It would be exceedingly interesting to know whether this is correct or not. As secretary to Mr. Dowson's congregation, I should be very pleased to hear if any of your readers could refer to any precedent.—Yours, &c.

PERCY HIBBERT.

45 Clarendon Place, Hyde.
May 21, 1917.

UNITARIAN HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Permit me to draw attention to the meeting of this Society advertised for Wednesday next at 4.30, at Essex Hall. There are many in the Lancashire and Cheshire Province unable to get to London in Whit-week who will be interested to hear that we are arranging to hold a meeting of this Society early in July in Manchester, at which the Rev. H. McLachlan, M.A., B.D., will read a paper. The Council of the Society extends a cordial invitation to the public to attend both these meetings. Subscriptions to the Society, five shillings a year, entitle to a free copy of the 'Transactions.' It is hoped that as many as possible will join the Society as from the beginning, and thus secure the initial number of the 'Transactions,' which is now ready.—Yours, &c.

WALTER H. BURGESS,
Hon. Secretary.

4 Ladysmith Road, Plymouth.
May 23, 1917.

BOOKS AND REVIEWS.

HUMAN IDEALS. By Frederick A. M. Spencer, M.A. T. Fisher Unwin. 6*s.* net.

"THIS book," we are told in the advertisement, "is an attempt to indicate some of the ways in which humanity may be expected to develop itself." We must suppose, then, that the author has made the attempt. Unfortunately the attempt cannot be regarded as successful. The general impression left on the mind after reading the book can be best expressed in an analogy. A benevolently curious gentleman sits on the bank of a stream, watching the course of a cork floating by. He falls into harmless meditation and hypothesis. The cork must have come a long way; perhaps some time it will float out into the ocean. Now, if it escapes entanglement in weeds or rushes, if no interfering person removes it from the water; if none of the accidents or interruptions to which it is liable actually occur, probably it will reach the ocean. The riverside philosopher proceeds to formulate his discovery into a series of imperatives. The cork must be allowed to float on unimpeded. No contrary winds must blow it ashore. No child must remove it. No current must drift it into a backwater. Thus the observer indicates the ways in which the cork will float out into the ocean.

Mr. Spencer is the benevolent and well-intentioned watcher: humanity is the cork. If humanity rises to heights of self-control, mutual service, and social co-operation, humanity will evolve to fuller and richer life. In other words, if mankind becomes good, mankind will have become good. The author formulates numerous imperatives for men and women, rich and poor. When they all carry out these imperatives the kingdom of God will be appreciably nearer. We may unreservedly agree, in general terms; but was it necessary to take 280 pp. of a book, when paper is scarce, to recapitulate ideas on which most intelligent people, at any rate such as are likely to read a book of this kind, are fully agreed, without once coming to grips with the essential problem: how can we set about getting people to apply these and other ideas? With the exception of one or two suggestions dropped more or less casually, such as the minimising of domestic drudgery, "partly by means of some wonderful labour saving machinery" (not further specified), and the reduction of the social evil arising from necessary but dangerous and unpleasant occupations by providing that they shall not be saddled indefinitely on any one section of the community, there is scarcely an immediately practical constructive idea in the book. The method of solving difficulties proposed by the author may be exemplified by two brief quotations from the chapter on 'Brotherhood.' Dealing with the obstacle of racial differences to the realisation of brotherhood, he says (p. 183): "If some races, or some mixtures of races, are thus blind alleys in the evolution of spiritual humanity then, somehow or other, they will cease to be." On the following page confidence is expressed "that mankind will not be denied the knowledge necessary for it to do its part in directing its own evolution. We look for a revelation to tell us." Apparently the conclusion of the whole matter is that humanity may be expected to develop itself towards higher life "somehow or other"—more precisely how "we look for a revelation to tell us." But we look for any such revelation in this book in vain.

It is a pity, because throughout one is conscious of a genuine desire on the part of the author to be helpful. Many of the problems of modern life have been clearly envisaged, and frequently we are led to anticipate some clear application of moral and spiritual principles to show how the gross illusions that enchain us can be shattered. Such an expectation is aroused, especially in the chapters on 'The Distribution of Wealth' and 'Production and Consumption,' when the crucial evil of the modern estimate and use of wealth is depicted, but the opportunity is missed and the problems fade away in a cloud of nice sentiments. So in the chapter on 'Religion' Mr. Spencer raises high hopes by his suggestive reference to the abuse, and his hints as to the true use, of the Lord's Prayer. We look for a bold statement and application of the scientific, social, and spiritual teaching of Jesus, only to meet with disappointment. Quotations from the teaching are indeed not infrequent, but they merely appear as more or less artistic conclusions to the author's excellent aspirations. What is needed is enlightenment and guidance as to the way in which the ideals, personal, social, spiritual, which are fermenting in so many minds to-day, can be put into effective use for the reorganisation of social institutions and the radical reconstruction of the machinery of life.

THE first number of the Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society, which has just appeared, comes just in time to stimulate interest in the Whitweek meeting of the Society, which is fixed for Wednesday, May 30, at 4.30, in the Lindsey Room, Essex Hall. The President of the Society, Mr. John C. Warren, M.A., is to read a paper on 'From Puritanism to Unitarianism at Lincoln.' Mr. Warren has contributed an article on 'Early Records of a Presbyterian Congregation' (Nottingham) to the Transactions, other contributors being Mr. R. M. Montgomery, K.C. ('The Deeds of the Free Christian Church, Horsham'), the Rev. C. J. Street, M.A. ('The Old Nonconformity at Norton, Derbyshire'), and the Rev. A. Amey ('The Old Meeting, Framlingham'). The editor, the Rev. W. H. Burgess, prefixes a useful sketch of the histories and similar works dealing with Unitarianism, beginning with that written by Stephen Nye in 1687. Postponing a more detailed notice of the Transactions, we cordially commend the newcomer to the attention of our readers. The magazine may be obtained at Essex Hall.

MEMORIAL NOTICES.

THE REV. HALLIWELL THOMAS.

The Rev. Halliwell Thomas, whose death at the age of seventy-two is announced this week, retired from the active ministry in 1910 after forty years' service, and spent the remaining years of his life in Matlock. He was born near Halifax of a small yeoman family whose names are to be found in the villages of the district for some centuries. Being left an orphan at the age of five, he was brought up by an aunt at Mossley, where as a lad he attracted the attention of the late Rev. George Fox, who encouraged his strong tastes for intellectual pursuits and directed his thoughts towards the Unitarian ministry. Like many other young ministers of the time he maintained a life-long friendship with Mr. Fox, whose warm sympathy and wise counsel were greatly valued by him. After his course at the Home Missionary Board, he became assistant to the Rev. Russell Lant Carpenter at Bridport, subsequently holding pastorates at Ballymena; Failsworth, where his work resulted in the building of the fine new chapel; Stockton-on-Tees, and Doncaster. Though a lucid and interesting lecturer, and an attractive preacher to some types of mind, his appeal was not wide; he was of a studious and retiring disposition, and was more drawn to the literary than to the institutional activities which bulk so largely in the life of many of our congregations. But he was able to exercise a considerable influence among a small circle of friends with kindred tastes. He was a man of catholic interests, had a wide and discriminating knowledge of books, and was conversant with six or seven foreign languages, in which he read largely and with ease. During his ministry at Doncaster he was President of the local Scientific Society, and an active member of the Borough Library Committee. The funeral took place at Holloway in Derbyshire, the service being read by the Rev. A. W. Fox, of Todmorden.

MR. SEYMOUR GOODWIN.

We regret to announce that Mr. Seymour Goodwin, the talented organist of Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, has been killed in action in France at the age of twenty-six. In the course of his sermon last Sunday morning, the Rev. H. Gow made the following reference to his memory:—

"We remember to-day with deep affection and sorrow our organist, Mr. Seymour Goodwin, who was killed a short time ago in France. All of us who knew him felt the charm and lovableness of his nature. We recognised with gratitude his skill as a musician and his devotion to our service. He was admired and loved by all with whom he worked. He had tried many times to enlist in the army, but was rejected owing to defective eyesight. When at last he was accepted, he went with joy and a bright boyish courage. At first he was retained for Home Service, but a few months ago he was allowed to do what he wished and was passed for active service in France. He had no military tastes or ambitions. He was made for love and peace and for quiet happy work at home. But he felt deeply the claims of his country and he longed to give himself to the uttermost. She needs men's hearts more than their eyes, he said. Some of us remarked how happy he looked when he came here a few weeks ago on his way to the front to wish us farewell. He has given himself to the uttermost and he will not come back to us again. We in this Church feel it as an irreparable loss. His services were deeply valued by us all. We think with deepest sympathy of his wife and little son and of his parents. Our hearts go out to them in loving sorrow. He has made, like so many others, the supreme sacrifice on behalf of duty. He has fought the good fight and finished his course and kept the faith. It has shown us once again the divine depths of courage and of love."

The following is an extract from a letter written by Mr. Claude Aveling, Head of the Royal College of Music: "It is impossible for me to describe the distress that your news has caused amongst us all here. Seymour had a wonderful gift of making everybody love him, and friends of his who had not seen him for years are deeply grieved at his loss. As you know I loved the boy for his beautiful nature and his sweet character. From the very day he came here up to the last I never heard one word spoken of him that did not express the admiration and affection of all who knew him. There was something in him quite apart from the ordinary boy that goes through college. Perhaps it was his gentleness and purity of vision that endeared him to us. At any rate, the news of his sacrifice has fallen like a thunderbolt on a great many more people than you can possibly guess. He was lovable in the best sense of the word and we could not help loving him."

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

123rd List of Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,878	13	10
First Presbyterian Church, Holywood, per the Rev. G. L. Phelps (fifth donation)	1	5	0
Mr. F. Maddison (twenty-sixth donation)	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Harold Coventry	1	0	0
Mr. William Noble	1	1	0
The Bootle Free Church War Relief Committee, per Mrs. Yates	1	7	6
Mr. F. E. Shepherd (sixth donation)	4	4	0
Staff of Haverstock Hill Girls' School, per Mrs. Westaway (twenty-second donation)..	0	19	0
Mr. Thomas Chattaway (seventh donation) ..	0	5	0
	£16,889	5	4

Parcels have been received from: Mrs. Titterton; Mrs. Cave-Browne-Cave; Sidmouth Old Meeting Sewing Society (per Miss Barmby); Miss Partridge; Graham Street Girls' Provident Society (per Miss E. R. Lee); The Misses Wetherman; Miss E. A. Evelegh; Mrs. Cooke-Taylor; Mrs. and Miss Carter; Todmorden Branch of the Women's League (per Miss Shaw); Ullet Road Sewing Circle, Liverpool (per Mrs. Odgers); Bessborough Road Sewing Circle, Birkenhead (per Miss Ogden); Essex Church Work Party (per Miss Neele); Mr. H. Woolcott Thompson.

WEEKLY NOTES.

During my visit to Le Havre, I was able, by the kindness of Mme. Carton de Wiart, to visit the "Rose Allen" Hospital for Children near Yvetôt. The building is an old and spacious one, and stands quite by itself surrounded by meadows—a delightful situation and very suitable, as it is mostly infectious cases which are sent here. The wards are not large, each containing five or six beds at most. The rooms are all in pairs, as it was formerly a monastery, and each brother had his two rooms and a sleeping alcove (which makes a good place for the nurse in charge to sleep). There had been a number of serious diphtheria cases recently, but these children had been sent back cured the week before. At the time of my visit there were only ten little patients, and of these nine were well enough to be out in the meadow basking in the sun. It was such a pleasure to see all the things we had sent in use.—the pretty patchwork quilts looking so gay on the beds, the bedroom slippers made by loving hands here in England from odds and ends of bright coloured stuffs, the neat little nightgowns and bedjackets belonging to each little invalid. Luckily the French doctor who looks after the children was making his visit when we arrived, and was delighted to go round with us and tell us about all the cases. They were nearly all going away the following week, but probably their places are filled again now. The kind sisters were out in the meadow watching the little ones who were able to run about having great fun with some calves, and the whole party, children and calves, seemed on the best of terms.

There were several additions to the equipment very desirable, and some renewals required. Our funds are very low, and just now we have a number of heavy claims. I do not know how we shall meet them, and also continue our usual work, unless our friends will again come forward in the generous spirit they have shown in the past.

Rose Allen.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Helpless shirts in thin flannel or flannelette.
Pyjamas.
Shirts and socks.
Slippers, handkerchiefs, towels.
Games of all sorts, especially cards.
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns sent free).
Chemises for women and girls.
Treasure bags (10 by 12 in.), in coloured washing materials.

Mrs. Allen has a quantity of grey knitting wool to sell for the Fund. Price 4*s.* 6*d.* per lb. (carriage free).

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

LAWRENCE HOUSE.

It is announced that the Hostel for Sailors and Soldiers at Essex Hall will be formally opened by Lady Durning-Lawrence next Thursday afternoon, at 4.15, when any soldiers or sailors from our churches will be specially welcome. The fact that Lawrence House was not built for the purpose to which it is now being put adds something to its attractiveness, for the process of "adapting" it has accentuated certain rather old-fashioned features which give the interior an air of homeliness and comfort. The rooms are certainly rather small, but they lend themselves admirably to treatment with pale distemper, muslin curtains, and bright-hued chintz, and the spotlessness of everything will, of course, appeal to the men, weary of the discomfort of the trenches, who find their way to this haven of rest in Essex Street. The front door opens immediately into a cheerful little apartment where visitors may read, write, and chat, and where they can also have breakfast before making an early departure. The staircase leads up from this room—on the walls of which, by the way, some delightful photographic studies of North Country scenery by the Rev. A. W. Fox are hung—to the matron's room, with its dainty curtains and inviting air of cosiness. Above, as you mount higher, are the six small but comfortable bedrooms, each with its own spacious window and a ventilating panel over the door, where a good night's rest ought to be ensured, if quietness and cleanliness can do it. On the top floor are the two bathrooms, lit by skylights which admit plenty of fresh air, and lavatory accommodation. The kitchen, extra lavatories, larder, and coal-cellar are in the basement, and are approached by a somewhat hazardous staircase. In this part of the establishment, as, indeed, throughout, everything possible has been done to economise space and facilitate the smooth working of the domestic arrangements, and no little ingenuity has been exercised in fitting things in. The building is heated with hot pipes, and fitted with gas stoves and electric light, and the whole place breathes an air of cheerfulness and cleanliness which is delightful. A door in the Rest-room on the ground floor leads to Essex Hall, where the Lindsey Room, and the committee room adjoining, will be used as a drawing-room and tea-room respectively. The latter, with its soft blue colouring, light oak panelling, and cosy lounge chairs, is a particularly attractive apartment. Smoking will be allowed, it is understood, in the Rest-room in Lawrence House, and in the Lindsey Room, but Essex Hall will be closed at 11 o'clock, after which hour men in residence next door must confine themselves to their own domain. Miss Beeley, the matron, has already taken up her abode at the hostel, and by Whit-week she will have added the finishing touches which help, almost more than anything else, to make a place really habitable. The sight of a huge bunch of country flowers resting, for the time being, in a pail, conjured up a charming picture in the mind of the writer of what Lawrence House will look like when it is ready for its guests.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

AN APPEAL FOR PROHIBITION.

In view of the need for economy in the use of food the following circular letter has been issued by the Liverpool District Missionary Association to all ministers and church secretaries within its area :—

Dear Sir,—From many quarters voices warn us of the pressing need for the utmost economy in the use of foodstuffs. We are assured that, unless our resources are most carefully conserved, there is real and imminent danger of a shortage in the supply of essential articles of food, and particularly bread. Should this danger not be averted, it needs no argument to prove, quite apart from other serious consequences, that the poorer classes of our fellow-citizens, and especially women and children, will be subjected to bitter privation, if not to actual starvation, with most disastrous effects upon the national life. So urgent is the matter that, as you are aware, the King has issued a proclamation "earnestly exhorting" those most able to do so "to practise the greatest economy and frugality in the use of every species of grain." And yet, whilst the spectre of hunger thus menaces the land, large quantities of grain that might otherwise be of value for human sustenance, are being used in the production of beer and ardent spirits. Surely this ought not to be allowed! In present circumstances the manufacture of alcoholic beverages stands obviously condemned as a waste of precious material which may be sorely needed in coming months, whilst the permission to continue such manufacture makes it far harder to convince our people of the necessity for voluntary restraint in regard to food.

In view of the tremendous importance of the matter, the Executive of the Liverpool District Missionary Association urge that all the churches connected with the Association should unite in a simultaneous appeal to the Government to take steps immediately to prohibit, during the continuance of the war, the use of grain for the making of beer and spirits. Whit Sunday, May 27, is mentioned as the most suitable day for such a united appeal, and we hope that you will bring the matter before your congregation on that day, and submit a resolution or resolutions. Since it is desirable that on this occasion the churches should speak with one voice, we enclose forms of resolutions, one or both of which it is hoped you will be able to accept.

If a resolution is passed, or both resolutions are passed, by your congregation, will you be good enough to send copies of the resolution or resolutions to the Prime Minister, the Food Controller, the Leader of the House of Commons, and the member of Parliament for your constituency, and also to inform at once the Secretary of the L. D. M. A. of any action you may take, in order that he may communicate the matter to the Press.

We are, Sir, yours fraternally,
J. Crowther Hirst,
President L.D.M.A.
Stanley A. Mellor,
Secretary, L.D.M.A.

The letter is accompanied by two resolutions, which it is suggested should be passed at congregational meetings.

Forms of Resolutions.

Resolution I.

"That in view of the urgent need now existing for conserving with the utmost care the resources of the nation in order to avert a serious shortage in the food of the people, this congregation earnestly appeals to the Government to take steps at once to prohibit, during the continuance of the war, the use of foodstuffs of any kind in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors."

Resolution II.

"That, in view of the urgent need now existing for utmost economy in conserving the resources of the nation, and in view also of the admitted dangers connected with the drink traffic at present, and certain to arise during the period of demobilisation, this congregation earnestly appeals to the Government to take steps immediately to prohibit, during the continuance of the war and for some time thereafter, the sale and the manufacture of alcoholic liquors."

THE PROGRESS OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN ITALY.

The following reports of the work of the Italian Free Believers Association during the past year have been sent to the secretaries of the American Unitarian Association and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association from Florence.

Signor Conte's Report.

This year we have more than ever reason to thank the Most High for the strength vouchsafed to us in our struggles with extraordinary difficulties and for the fact that we have not only not lost ground but made fresh progress. We began the year hoping that the war would soon be at an end, and that the severe surgical operation which I had to undergo would restore my full power to me. Both these hopes were doomed to disappointment. The war is still raging, and my life continues to be one of suffering, sometimes in bed, sometimes in my study, while increased expenses and a decreased income, lack of voluntary helpers and the uncertainty of what the morrow might bring forth, added to the burden of anxiety and illness, made the year most difficult and trying both for myself and our work. We threw ourselves into the work, however, with all our remaining strength. The burning question was whether the war and its personal consequences would diminish the interest taken in it by our friends. At the close of the year we are happy to be able to answer this question in the negative. One of the effects of the war is a tendency to turn to God and to estimate moral values more highly than in days gone by. We have, perhaps, profited by this tendency. Only thirteen of our old subscribers have stopped their subscription, and several of these were discontinued by the families of the subscribers deceased on the battlefield. The gaps thus left have been filled and we have lost nothing.

Our Riforma promoted two new debates in the course of the year, in which, among others, Borgese, Croce, Anile, Barzellotti, and Sereno took part. The systematic collaboration of a distinguished exegetist has been and will continue to be of great practical service to our cause, while our Riforma has been greatly honoured by an article from the pen of his Excellency Luigi Luzzatti, who has often been a member of the Cabinet and was once Prime Minister. He is the only man in Italy whose political activity bears the stamp of glowing idealism. We continued with equal interest our study of social questions, and more particularly those relating to juvenile criminals and the housing of the working classes. Further, we have translated and already published in the Riforma a large part of E. J. Carpenter's 'The Place of Christianity among the Great Religions of the World.' When the whole of it has been completed, we hope to find a publisher who will undertake to bring it out on his own account, if the author will allow it. We have received many congratulatory letters on the work of the Riforma. The success of the review is in great measure due to the Hon. Signor Murri. We have presented our subscribers with a recent work, 'La Bibbia e la Critica,' published by the Federation of Students. This book is the best Unitarian work published in Italy. Several of our articles have been reproduced by other reviews, such as the Universita Italiana, the organ of the universities of Italy, and the Waldensian Voce.

We propose to bring our Association to the notice of every professor in Italy, and with this end in view we are sending to each of them three copies of our review. This involves a great deal of trouble and expense, but is both necessary and useful. The activity of our central office was hampered during the early months of the year by my absence, but was resumed on my return. The work takes the whole time of two people and frequently extends into the watches of the night. The amount on postage bears witness to some of our labours, the rest is known to God alone. We have also to offer sincere thanks to the American Unitarian Association, to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and to the Women's Leagues, for their constant pecuniary help and for their moral support. We look to the future with full confidence that God and our friends who have been with us in the past will not forsake us in the days to come.

Signor Murri's Report.

The war, while it has greatly increased the difficulties of our work, and lessened the opportunities of spreading it, has not, however, checked its normal development; on the contrary, its bases have become more clearly defined, and it has met with encouragement in important quarters. I should like to draw attention more particularly to one characteristic of the activities of the "Association of Free Believers" and of the Riforma Italiana, namely, the drawing together of representatives of the different bodies of believers in Italy, not one of which, from the Roman Catholic Church, the greatest of all, to the most humble, is absent from our list of collaborators and correspondents. We have had the pleasure of welcoming and numbering in our ranks friends from the opposite poles of the spiritual world. In the pages of the Riforma Italiana students and believers of every school, orthodox Catholics, Protestants, Jews, and Free Thinkers write of common anxieties, and sketch the ideal outlines of work for that awakening of Italian spiritual life which the war has so clearly shown to be both longed for and needful. This could not be the case were our programme of the religious liberty of a purely negative order, aiming at detachment from the old faiths, or at all events at a revolt against their intolerance in both doctrine and practice. It is, rather, wholly and essentially practical. In liberty we seek for unity, that fundamental life-teaching expressed in Christianity which forms the common basis of a moral life of differing religious consciences. Moreover, the Riforma Italiana makes a point (especially in its editorials, some of which have been echoed far and wide) of laying great stress on this practical fundamental Christianity, and of urging union of effort and life alike for its furtherance, a union in which those points which divide us may, without being specially aimed at, gradually become of less importance.

In view of the impossibility at the present time of looking for any great spread of our work or any great addition of members and adherents to our ranks, we have devoted ourselves more particularly, both in the reviews and in the private correspondence sent from our office, to this drawing together of minds, so that several of those who have joined us recently will to-morrow have their spheres of propaganda, from which we may expect the introduction of fresh elements into our work. Thus, without neglecting that popular propaganda to which Signor Conte devotes so much loving care and ability, we have striven to make the Riforma Italiana the organ of an accurate revision of religious truths, more especially in the interests of our young men, who pass so readily from traditional faith to indifference owing to the lack of a serious presentation of the eternal and living content of Christianity. We hope in this way to obtain results of a more and more satisfactory order. In the meantime the fact that we have succeeded in overcoming the mistrust and the prejudices which kept apart from one another those representing the most authoritative and active religious doctrines and tendencies, and have also been able to convince them of the possibility of coming to an understanding and of working together, is in itself a result full of promise for the future, and does much to compensate us for the difficulty of working in a country in which all free spiritual initiative meets with such a cold reception from the public and such obstinate resistance from a rich and jealous clerical caste having innumerable resources at its disposal.

PROHIBITION IN THE UNITED STATES.

The following article, by the Rev. E. S. Wiers, of Montclair, New Jersey, appeared in The Christian Register recently. The subject it deals with is of special interest at the present moment in view of the possibilities of further temperance legislation in this country:—

Prohibition of the liquor traffic as the best solution of the liquor problem has had an interesting but chequered career in the United States. It is said that nearly all the colonies from Maine to Georgia enacted, at different times, laws prohibiting in various ways the manufacture and sale of liquors, but these were rarely enforced. The strong temperance movement which developed in the first half of the last century, largely as a religious movement, found that moral suasion was useless while the liquor traffic was unrestricted. Efforts were made to regulate it by law, and when these measures failed there came a widespread demand for prohibition, and a remarkable and almost forgotten wave of prohibition swept the New England and Northern States. Maine led the way by adopting prohibition in 1851, and Illinois took the same step in the same year. In 1852 Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Vermont became prohibition States. Illinois repealed her law in 1853, but in 1854 Connecticut joined the prohibition ranks. But the banner year came in 1855 when eleven States voted through their legislatures to prohibit the traffic in drink. In some of these the legislation amounted to little. In Wisconsin the law was passed twice, but vetoed each time by the Governor. Maryland, Ohio, and Illinois, which were in this group, contented themselves with but a few months' trial, and the law was declared unconstitutional in New York, which had been one of the eleven. The remaining six States of this group were Delaware, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Nebraska, and New Hampshire, which varied in their fidelity from the two years of Delaware to the half-century—lacking but two years—of New Hampshire.

But this drastic legislation had not had adequate preparatory work. It was built on the foundations of the old sentimental and pietistic type of temperance, and, while it was a magnificent pioneer effort, it had come before its day. The great issue of slavery was engrossing the mind of the nation. The Civil War was at hand, and this other reform fell by the wayside. In 1856 Maine repealed her law, but in 1858 re-enacted it, and has since allowed it to stand. Delaware repealed in 1857, Indiana and Nebraska in 1858, Rhode Island in 1863. Kansas came in as a new recruit in 1867, and the action of the States was sporadic and swayed in both directions with little general tendency, though perhaps the current ran rather against prohibition. Massachusetts repealed her law in 1868, but immediately re-enacted it the next year. Connecticut repealed in 1872, but Rhode Island, which had had first eleven years with prohibition and then eleven years without, again in 1874 put a prohibition law on her statute books. The next year she repealed it, as Massachusetts did and Michigan. Kansas repealed her law in 1879, but re-enacted it in 1880, and has strengthened it from time to time since then. South Dakota went under prohibition in 1885, Rhode Island made her third attempt in 1886, and Alaska her first in 1886. Rhode Island repealed for the third time in 1889. North Dakota adopted in 1890, Iowa, after almost forty years of trial, repealed in 1894, and South Dakota repealed in 1896, as Alaska did in 1899. Vermont and New Hampshire repealed their prohibition laws in 1903, the former having had an experience of fifty-one years and the latter of forty-eight. This entire period shows detached experimentation, but no general movement

The new movement which is sweeping up from the South and in from the West, and which promises to make this a saloonless nation, began just ten years ago in Georgia. Most of the States had by local option laws slowly increased their dry territory. The South had come to dread the effect of drink upon the Negro. In 1907 Georgia voted for prohibition, and that same year Oklahoma came into the Union as a prohibition State. Two years later North Carolina, Mississippi, and Alabama became prohibition States. Alabama went back to licence in 1911, but three years later returned to the prohibition ranks. Since then the movement has been rapid. In 1893 there were but six States under prohibition; to-day there are twenty-three. "Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas," read the roster in 1893. At the end of 1914 the roll was Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Georgia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, and West Virginia. Fourteen more have decided for prohibition in 1915 and 1916—Arizona, Alabama, South Carolina, Idaho, Iowa, Arkansas, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Virginia, South Dakota, Michigan, Nebraska, and Montana. Alaska has also voted for it. Florida and Utah will be added to these soon, as a sure result of the last election; and there is good reason to believe that Wyoming will follow, and that either statutory prohibition or prohibition referendums will be enacted this year in New Mexico, Texas, Ohio, and Minnesota, and prohibition referendum movements are already on foot in Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, and Nevada.

Eighty per cent. of our national territory including fifty-seven per cent. of our population is saloonless. The District of Columbia, with the nation's capital, is being voted dry. The National Prohibition Amendment is a possibility of the near future. It needs a two-third vote of both branches of Congress, and then must be ratified by three-fourths or thirty-six of the States. This new wave has been carefully prepared for by local option, which has made great sections of most of the States dry territory; and the new temperance has modern science and the whole world of modern industry and business back of it. Anti-alcohol education, life insurance, public health movements, efficiency and safety campaigns, and even war are its new allies; and religion and social reform and accumulating experience are urging it upon the nation. Prohibition is but one step of many, but no more effectual way of curbing and destroying the drink evil has been evolved.

Within the past few weeks events have moved rapidly. Of the States already under prohibition, Oregon, Tennessee, and Arkansas have passed bone-dry laws; Wyoming and Minnesota have voted for referendums on the question of prohibition; and Utah and Indiana have joined the prohibition ranks by adopting statutory prohibition, the Utah law being a bone-dry one, prohibiting the importation, manufacture, sale and possession of liquor except pure alcohol and sacramental wine, to be sold as the Governor may prescribe.

Congress has passed the Alaska Prohibition Bill, and the District of Columbia Bill and National Prohibition Bill are pending. The Supreme Court decision on the Webb-Kenyon Act has declared constitutional the forbidding of shipment of liquor from wet territory into dry, provided the States so legislate, and is being followed by the bone-dry legislation. The next States that are expected to adopt prohibition are Wyoming, Florida, New Mexico, Minnesota, Texas, Kentucky, Ohio, Illinois, and Nevada.

We are informed that Dr. J. Fort Newton will begin his ministry in the City Temple next Sunday, and the midday service will be resumed on Thursday, May 31, at 12 noon, when Dr. Fort Newton will preach. We are glad to take this opportunity of offering our own word of greeting to the new minister at the City Temple. We hope that his ministry will add greatly to the strength of the forces which are working for a broadminded Christianity in the Metropolis.

NEWS OF THE CHURCHES.

Belfast: All Souls' Church.—The Anniversary Services on May 6, conducted by the minister (the Rev. E. H. Pickering), celebrating the twenty-first year of the present Church building, were memorable in more than one respect. The morning service, which was largely attended, was followed by a Service of Welcome to new members, thirteen in number. Most appropriately, Holy Communion was celebrated, and the attendance at the Communion Service was the largest in this church for many years. A short address on the duties and privileges of church membership was given by the Moderator (the Rev. H. J. Rossington), who welcomed the new members into the fellowship of the Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church of Ireland. The welcome to the membership of All Souls' Church was given by the minister. In the evening, a striking address was given by the minister on the text "Whom say ye that I am?"

Blackpool: South Shore.—A Sale of Work was opened by the Mayoress on Wednesday, May 16. Mr. J. T. Cattlow was in the chair. A goodly company was present at the opening ceremony, including the minister (the Rev. B. C. Constable), the secretary, Mr. J. Cunliffe, the treasurer, Mr. James Bibby, and nearly all the members of the Ladies' Sewing Society. After the Mayoress had declared the sale open, one of the scholars, Hilda Taylor, presented her with a charming bouquet of flowers. The total amount raised, including a large number of donations in money, amounted to £164. With the promised aid from the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission, and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the whole of the building debt of £165 will be paid off, and a substantial sum left in aid of the church funds. The success of the effort has been most gratifying, and far beyond expectation, thanks to the generous assistance of so many friends.

Bristol.—On Sunday, May 13, the United Schools Anniversary, comprising Lewin's Mead Schools, the Mission, the Stokes Croft School, the Red Lodge School, and the Boys' Industrial School, was held at Lewin's Mead. The event is always looked forward to, and was again this year a very impressive day for both young and old. Music and words were composed for the occasion and excellently rendered. One of the hymns was by a member of the congregation, Pte. J. Norgrove, now in Salonika, another was by a member recently deceased, while the music was composed by Mr. D. Churchill, also a member. On Sunday, June 20, the local Brigade of St. John's Ambulance and the Red Cross attended Lewin's Mead Chapel, and marched to it through the city headed by their band. On both Sundays the addresses were given by Dr. Tudor Jones. The King's Proclamation was read and the National Anthem sung.

Dewsbury.—Mr. John W. Maw, M.A., of the Unitarian Home Missionary College, Manchester, has received and accepted a unanimous invitation to the pastorate of Unity Church.—Mr. E. O. Dodgson, of Leeds, opened a Sale of Work in the schoolroom on Saturday, May 5. The Rev. Frank Coleman, of Hunslet, presided. The object of the sale was to raise £100, towards which donations amounting to £20 18*s.* 6*d.* had been received and parcels of goods had been sent by members of other churches and friends. Encouraging speeches were made by Mr. Dodgson, the Rev. J. S. Mathers, of Leeds, and the Rev. Richard Newell, of Pudsey. Mr. Ernest Thornton (president of Unity Church) proposed a vote of thanks to the opener and chairman, and this was seconded by Mr. E. D. Gaunt (the secretary). The Sale of work was continued on the following Tuesday—at the close of which Mr. Gaunt was able to announce that the gross receipts for the two days amounted to nearly £130.

Dover.—In honour of the American Alliance the friends at Adrian Street Chapel arranged on Monday last an excellent American evening, with readings from American authors. Mr. Ginever opened with a few introductory remarks, and the selections read by various friends with a brief account of each author and his works were much appreciated.

London: Highgate.—Readers of The Inquirer who kindly contributed to the Highgate Special Constabulary Fund for raising £400 for a recreation hut for our soldiers in France, will be interested to learn that a cheque for the sum required has been handed to the Church Army. The generosity of friends made it possible to send £150 to the Highgate War Depot, the total amount reaching £550, a result very gratifying to all concerned.

Midland Guilds' Union.—The third annual meeting of the Union was held at the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, on Saturday last. After an opening hymn, and prayer by the Rev. H. C. Hawkins, the Report and Financial Statement were presented by the secretary, the Rev. W. G. Topping. The president (the Rev. H. Warnock) moved the adoption of the Reports, and Mr. Stanley Mossop, of Manchester, seconded. Brief but interesting reports of the affiliated Guilds were then given by their secretaries. These revealed the fact that while two or three of the Guilds had been obliged to suspend activities, others had carried on with more or less success, in some cases showing an increase of interest and enthusiasm. The officers were re-elected, on the motion of the Rev. I. Wrigley, seconded by the Rev. T. Graham. Mr. Grainger, Coseley, was appointed auditor. At the tea which followed the meeting, the Rev. A. H. Shelley voiced the thanks of the Union to the Old Meeting Guild for their hospitality, and Miss Councillor Martineau responded. Following an organ Recital in the beautiful church, Communion Service was conducted by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, assisted by Mr. Mossop.

Nelson.—At the monthly meeting of the Nelson branch of the British League of Unitarian Women on May 15, Mrs. H. Bodell Smith was presented by the members with a silver mounted umbrella in appreciation of her services as President, with expressions of deep regret at her coming departure to Mottram and best wishes for her future. On Sunday last the Sunday School Anniversary Services were held, the Rev. H. Bodell Smith being preacher, morning and evening, and the Rev. T. Munn, of Padiham, in the afternoon. At morning service special hymns and solos were sung by scholars, and at the other services the choir was assisted by friends from Colne.

Preston.—In the death of Mr. J. W. Smith, Preston Chapel has lost one of its oldest and most valued members, who, after only a few days' illness, passed away on Thursday, May 17, at the age of 80. John Whittaker Smith joined the church at Preston in 1862. He was born near Bolton in 1837. In early youth his family took a farm at Rivington, and here he spent his younger days. Afterwards becoming a servant on the L. and Y. Railway, and was soon appointed station master at Preston Junction, in which capacity he remained for forty years, retiring about fifteen years ago. He was of very quiet habits, yet always shedding a bright steadying influence upon all who knew him, and of a most kindly disposition, but strong and sturdy for right principles. He was seldom heard in the councils of the church, but his opinion was always referred to, and the gap his absence will make, will be keenly felt in the coming days. On Sunday morning, the Rev. J. W. Bishop preached a memorial sermon from the words "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." On Monday, May 21, he was interred at Rivington, Mr. Bishop taking the service and the Rev. S. Thompson officiating at the grave.

Wolverhampton.—The Sunday School Anniversary Services held on May 20, were completely successful. The children, who had been trained by Miss K. V. Wright, A.T.C.L., rendered their hymns very effectively. The Rev. J. A. Shaw preached at each of the three services. The attendance, especially at the evening service, was excellent, and the collections taken exceeded those of any previous anniversary.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS

A Famous Oxford Benefactor.

On Wednesday, May 23, the tercentenary occurred of Elias Ashmole, the seventeenth-century antiquary, whose memory is enshrined in the Ashmolean Museum. Owing to the war there was no ceremonial celebration, but it was announced that the Corporation of Lichfield, where Ashmole was born, proposed to lay a wreath on the site of their famous townsman's birthplace. But for his memorable benefaction to Oxford and the world-wide fame of the Museum, Elias Ashmole's tercentenary would scarcely have been commemorated. That wonderful collection, The Manchester Guardian reminds us, has grown out of the "Closet of Curiosities," originally formed by John Tradescant, a botanist of renown in the seventeenth century, who assigned the collection as a gift to Ashmole. The latter bestowed the Museum on Oxford in 1667 on condition that a suitable building should be provided. This was ready by 1682, and thus the Ashmolean, the first public museum in the country, was opened.

The Lake Mohonk Conference.

According to The Christian Register, the Lake Mohonk Conference on International Arbitration, which has met annually since 1895, this year withheld invitations for its twenty-third gathering, which was to have been held May 16, 17, and 18. In explanation of the indefinite postponement, Mr. Daniel Smiley, host of the Conferences, said: "The postponement of the Conference is not demanded by patriotism. Peace and war in the abstract, purely national policies, or wars in progress have never been germane subjects at Mohonk. In fact, our original topic, international arbitration, remains one practical if imperfect institution that has been little discredited in the present struggle. The entry of the United States into the war imposes unusual duties and responsibilities on the prominent men and women who are invited to Mohonk. All of us need time to adjust ourselves to the new conditions and determine how we can be of the largest service. Similarly, it seems wise to defer calling the Conference until a more opportune time for the usual large and representative attendance."

Imported Feathers.

Mr. James Buckland stated recently that during the last three years no less than 1,865,431 lb. weight of feathers, not including ostrich feathers, have been imported into this country, and that these articles of luxury are still pouring in. "A matter of still greater importance," he said, "even than transport difficulties or extravagance in dress—now that every ounce of foodstuff that can be grown in our Dominions is required for the Empire's needs—is the fact that a vast quantity of these feathers come from our possessions overseas, that the majority of the birds killed are insect eaters, and that in consequence of their destruction food crops of all kinds are being subjected to incalculable damage by the inroads of insect pests. We are at death-grips with the enemy, and the question of tonnage, of extravagance, and of food supplies is becoming graver day by day. In such a juncture the importation of the feathers of wild birds is contrary to the interests of the Empire."

Board and Residence, &c.

BOURNEMOUTH.—"BEECHWOOD," WEST CLIFF. First Class Boarding Establishment. Close Winter Gardens, Sea, and Unitarian Church. Moderate charges.—Mr. and Mrs. CUMBERLAND.

LONDON.—Board-Residence, MISS E. KINGSTON, "Brantwood," 15, Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C. (near University Hall). Terms moderate.

THE HEUGH, Aysgarth, S.O.—PAYING GUESTS received.—Particulars from Miss SMITH. Telegrams: The Heugh, Askrigg, S.O.

LOW GREEN HOUSE, Thoralby, Aysgarth, S.O.—TO LET, Furnished, 4 bedrooms, 2 sitting-rooms, kitchen, &c.

TO LET, furnished, at Windermere, COTTAGE. Six rooms. Sanitation.—Apply Miss BEARD, 12 Cornwall Road, Rochester.

KENSINGTON.—THREE ROOMS. Furnished, TO LET, June, July, August. Excellent cooking and attendance.—ARTHUR, 42 Abingdon Road, W.8.

Miscellaneous.

IRISH LINEN ROLLER TOWELS. Extra strong and durable quality. 2½ yards long by 17 inches, 1*s.* 5*d.* each, or three for 4*s.* 2d. (postage 5*d.*). Bargain List free.—HUTTON'S, 5 Larne, Ireland.

ARTIFICAL TEETH (old) BOUGHT.—We positively pay highest prices. Up to 7*s.* per tooth pinned on vulcanite, 12*s.* on silver, 15*s.* on gold, 2*l.* on platinum. Cash or offer by return. If offer not accepted we return parcel post free. Satisfaction guaranteed by the reliable genuine firm.—S. CANN & Co., 69A Market Street, Manchester. Established 1850.

FALSE TEETH BOUGHT, any condition; 6*d.* per platinum pinned tooth on vulcanite; 2*s.* each on silver; 3*s.* each on gold; 9*s.* each on platinum. Strictly genuine. Cash by return. Offers for old Jewellery.—I. RAYBURN & Co., 105 Market Street, Manchester.

I BUY FALSE TEETH.

Have you any? I will pay 6*d.* for each tooth pinned on vulcanite, 2*s.* each on silver, 3*s.* each on gold, 8*s.* each on platinum. Cash immediately. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or teeth returned promptly. Why keep artificial teeth that you do not wear? Don't be misled by higher advertised prices, but write for my FREE BOOKLET, which explains very clearly the value of any kind of artificial teeth. I also buy platinum scrap, dental alloy, and any old gold and silver, for which I pay you full value. Write for PRICE LIST. Kindly mention THE INQUIRER.

E. LEWIS & CO.,
29 London Street, Southport, Lancs.
Established 1873.

Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press 11 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.4, and Published by THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at the Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.4. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, May 26, 1917.

 Regarding Advertisement Rates, see Inside Front Cover.

Library of the
PACIFIC UNITARIAN SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY
Berkeley, California

The Inquirer

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3909. New Series, No. 1012.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1917. [THREE HALFPENCE.

For a Comparison and a Reply to Mr. H. G. Wells's

GOD, THE INVISIBLE KING,

read

The Spiritual Ascent of Man

By W. TUDOR JONES, D.Phil.

In a long review of Mr. Wells's book THE GUARDIAN says:—

"He does not argue—he asserts . . . It is not our intention to argue. We content ourselves with quoting the considered judgment of one who set out upon the same quest as Mr. Wells, and arrived at a different conclusion in 'The Spiritual Ascent of Man,' by Dr. Tudor Jones, summed up in these words:—'All the results of science, philosophy, and history can be accepted as the clothing of Christianity, for all these leave untouched the nucleus of the Christian religion. . . . The essence of the nucleus is the eternal fact revealed in the life of the Founder—the union of the Divine and the human. This message of Christianity, exemplified in the life and death of the Founder, is the final solution to the riddles of the universe and of life.'"

Cloth bound, 5s. net, plus 4d. postage.

The MASTER OF BALLIOL says:—"A message of hope, of confidence and conviction."

PUBLISHED FOR UNIVERSITY OF LONDON PRESS
BY
HODDER & STOUGHTON,
St. Paul's House, Warwick Square, E.C.4.

PEARL

ASSURANCE COMPANY, LTD.

Chief Offices: High Holborn, W.C.

Annual Income	.. ..	£4,000,000
Claims Paid exceed	..	£19,500,000

UNIVERSITY HALL,
Gordon Square, W.C.
(Between Russell Square and Euston Square.)

Morning, at 11.15.

June.
3. Rev. W. TUDOR JONES, Ph.D. of Bristol.
10. Rev. KENNETH HERBERT BOND, of Chesterfield.
17. Rev. SYDNEY HERBERT MELLONE, M.A. D.Sc., Principal of the Home Missionary College, Manchester.
24. Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A., of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Transactions of the Unitarian Historical Society.

NOW READY.

Contents:—The Deeds of the Free Christian Church, Horsham, by R. M. Montgomery, K.C.; Records of a Presbyterian Congregation, by John C. Warren, M.A.; Nonconformity at Norton, by C. J. Street, M.A.; An Open Trust; The Old Meeting, Framlingham; Reviews, Notes and Queries, and other Matter. Three Plates, one hundred pages. Subscribers to the Society receive a free copy.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, W.C.2

UNITARIAN PUBLICATIONS FREE.

The Universal Pentecost.
Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

The Immortal Hope. J. W. CHADWICK.

These publications sent free, also information on Unitarianism. Apply by letter to—

Miss F. HILL
40 Frognal Lane, Hampstead, London, N.W.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY.
No. 50, CANNON STREET, E.C.
(Corner of Queen Street).

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—SIR ALEXANDER WALDEMAR LAWRENCE, Bart.

Deputy-Chairman — F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I.

LESLIE T. BURNETT. | Miss CECIL GRADWELL
HUMPHREY G. RUSSELL.

A SAFE AND SOUND INVESTMENT FOR LARGE OR SMALL SUMS.

Save 5/- Monthly. Subscription Preference Shares of £20 each are issued suitable for small investors. Payable 5/- monthly and they receive 4 per cent. interest.

Preference Shares of £10 each now receive 4 per cent. interest free of income tax.

Deposits received at 3 and 3½ per cent. free of income tax.

Investments are withdrawable in accordance with the regulations.

Repayments, Survey Fees, and Law Charges low. Prospectus free.

HENRY T. WRIGHT, Manager.

NOTICE.

Readers who experience difficulty in obtaining THE INQUIRER locally will greatly oblige by communicating with the Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Schools.

WILLASTON SCHOOL,
NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

Opened 1900.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL ON MODERN LINES WITH PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

The aim of the Religious Teaching is to instil a simple Christian Faith and personal religion. There is full Morning Service in the School on Sunday. In the evening boys may, if their parents desire it, attend a place of worship in Nantwich.

Full Prospectus, apply to the Head Master:

H. LANG JONES, M.A. (Oxon.).

TAN-Y-BRYN, LLANDUDNO.
Preparatory School for Boys.

Sound Education under best conditions of health.

For Prospectus and information apply to C. J. MONTGOMERY, M.A.Oxon, Head Master.

CHANNING HOUSE HIGH SCHOOL
and Boarding School for Girls,

HIGHGATE, LONDON, N. Head Mistress MISS LILIAN TALBOT, B.A., Honours Lond. Preparation for London Inter. Arts and Matriculation, Senior Cambridge Local, and Associated Board (Music). Healthy situation, Lacrosse, Cricket, and Swimming. Special terms for daughters of Unitarian ministers. — Apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Just published. 3s. 3d. net post free.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF CROSS ST. CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

Oblong 4to, strongly bound. Contains 23 Illustrations, mainly from fine new Photographs, brief Historical Notes to each, and an Introduction by Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A., Minister of the Church. From the Publishers,

H. RAWSON & CO., 16 New Brown St., Manchester.

OUR CALENDAR.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar for next week be sent to The Publisher, 13 Bream's Buildings, E.C.4, not later than Thursday Morning.

N.B.—The name of the Minister of the Church is in all cases inserted unless instructions are received to the contrary by Thursday midday.

SUNDAY, June 3.

LONDON.

Acton, Creffield Road, 11.15, Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Bermondsey, Fort Road, 6.30, Mr. S. P. PENWARDEN.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. J. PIGGOTT.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, 11 and 7, Rev. FRED HALL.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. H. WEATHERALL, M.A.

Finchley, Granville Road, Ballards Lane, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. BASIL MARTIN, M.A.

Forest Gate, Upton Lane, 11 and 6.30, Mr. J. BEGG.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham Place, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. B. LISTER, M.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn Hill Chapel, 11, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.; 6.30. Rev. H. C. HORSLEY, M.A.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. A. CHARLESWORTH.

Ilford, High Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. H. BIGGS, M.A., LL.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper Street, 11, Rev. F. HANKINSON; 7, LIEUT.-COL. BULLOCK. Subject: 'Pacifism; or, the Church and the War.'

Kentish Town, Clarence Road, N.W. No Morning Service; 6.30, Rev. F. HANKINSON.

Kilburn, Quex Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. ARTHUR PEARSON.

Leytonstone, Haydn House, 63 Fairlop Road, 6.30, Miss MAUD B. BURTT.

Mansford Street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 6.30, Rev. GORDON COOPER, M.A.

Peckham, Avondale Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. T. HERFORD, B.A.

South Norwood, League House, 141 Portland Road, 7, Mr. FRANK G. FINCHAM.

Stoke Newington Green, 11.15 and 7, Dr. LIONEL TAYLER.

Stratford Unitarian Church, 11 and 6.30, Mr. JOSEPH P. ROSLING.

University Hall, Gordon Square, W.C., 11.15, Rev. W. TUDOR JONES, Ph.D.

Wandsworth Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, 11, Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.; 7, Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

West Hampstead, All Souls, Weech Road, Finchley Road, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Wood Green, Unity Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. COVERDALE SHARPE.

Woolwich, Lecture Hall (Co-operative Stores), Herbert Road, Plumstead, 6.30, Rev. D. DELTA EVANS.

ABERYSTWYTH, New Street Meeting House, 11. Supply.

BATH, Trim Street Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. C. FOX, B.A.

BIRMINGHAM, Old Meeting Church, Bristol Street, 11 and 3.30, Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, Broad Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. LAWRENCE CLARE.

BLACKBURN, Meeting Room, Sudell Cross, 10.45 and 6.30, COUNCILLOR J. HIND.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West Hill Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

BRIGHTON, Free Christian Church, New Road, 11 and 6.30. Rev. J. VINT LAUGHLAND.

BRISTOL, Lewin's Mead Meeting, 11 and 6.30.

BUXTON, Hartington Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. G. STREET.

CAMBRIDGE, Assembly Hall, Downing Street, 11.30, Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

CHATHAM, Unitarian Church, Hamond Hill, 11 and 6.30, Mr. F. COTTIER.

CHESTER, Matthew Henry's Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. D. J. EVANS.

CLIFTON, Oakfield Road Church, 11 and 6.30, Dr. G. F. BECKH.

DEAN ROW, 10.45, Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, M.A.

DOVER, Adrian Street, near Market Square, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. A. GINEVER, B.A.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 and 7, Rev. E. SAVELL HICKS, M.A.

DUDLEY, Old Meeting, Wolverhampton Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. GLYN EVANS.

EXETER, George's Chapel, South Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

GEE CROSS, Hyde Chapel, 11 and 6.30.

HASTINGS, South Terrace, Queen's Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. E. LOCKETT.

HINDLEY, Nr. Wigan, Market Street, 10.30 and 6.30.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. N. J. H. JONES.

HULL, Park Street Church (Unitarian), 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. T. M. FALCONER, B.Litt.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. HARGROVE, M.A.

LEICESTER, The Great Meeting, 11 and 6.30, Rev. R. F. RATTRAY, M.A., Ph.D.

LEWES, Westgate Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. M. CONNELL.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 and 6.30, Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

LIVERPOOL, Bootle Free Church, 11, 3, and 6.30, Rev. E. THACKERAY, M.A., Ph.D., B.D. (Sunday School Anniversary Services.)

LIVERPOOL, Hope Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. Dr. MELLOR.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet Road, Sefton Park, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALFRED HALL, M.A.

MAIDSTONE, Unitarian Church, Earl Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON.

MANCHESTER, Cross Street Chapel, 10.45 and 6.30, Rev. H. MCLACHLAN.

MANCHESTER, Platt Chapel, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A.

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. S. MCLAUCHLAN, M.A.

NANTWICH, Old Presbyterian (Unitarian) Chapel, Hospital Street, 11 and 6, Rev. J. PARK DAVIES, B.A., B.D.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, near Free Library, 10.45 and 6.30, Mr. W. STEPHENSON.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, Unitarian Church, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. J. RUDDLE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30, Rev. HENRY GOW, B.A.

PORTSMOUTH, High Street Chapel, 11 and 6.45, Rev. G. W. THOMPSON.

PORTSMOUTH, St. Thomas Street, 6.45, Rev. T. BOND.

SHEFFIELD UPPER CHAPEL, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High Street, 11 and 6.30, Rev. T. BOWEN EVANS, M.A.

SOUTHAMPTON, Church of the Saviour, London Road, 6.30, Rev. VICTOR MOODY.

SOUTHEND, Darnley Road Church, 11.

SOUTHPORT, Portland Street Church, 11 and 6.30, Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A.

TORQUAY, Unity Church, Montpellier Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. JOSEPH WORTHINGTON, B.A.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Free Christian Church, Dudley Road Institute (side entrance), 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. S. BURROWS.

WALLASEY, Memorial Church, Manor Road, 11 and 6.30, Rev. A. ERNEST PARRY.

WARWICK, High Street Chapel, 11.15 and 6.30, Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

WEST KIRBY, Meeting Room, Grange Road, 11 and 6.30.

CAPETOWN.

Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout Street, 6.45, Rev. RAMSDEN BALMFORTH.

ADELAIDE, S. AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Christian Church, Wakefield Street, 11 and 7, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

Unitarian Church, Grey Street, Eastern Hill, 11 and 7, Rev. WYNDHAM HEATHCOTE, B.A.

Free Religious Fellowship, Collins Street, 11 and 7, Rev. F. SINCLAIRE, M.A.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

First Unitarian Church, corner of Fernwood Road and Fisgard Street, 11.

WINNIPEG, CANADA.

All Souls Church, 7, Rev. HORACE WESTWOOD, D.D. Sunday School, 3.

DEATHS.

HIGGINSON.—On May 29, at The Knoll, Ambleside, Harriet Emily, daughter of the late Alfred Higginson, M.R.C.S., of Liverpool, aged 72.

THOMPSON.—On May 27, at Newcomb, Winscombe, Mary Gower, beloved wife of Henry Woolcott Thompson, aged 66 years.

THE ADVERTISER wishes to BUY SHARES in the INQUIRER PUBLISHING CO., Ltd.—Address offers, naming price, to S., Solicitors' Law Stationery Society, Ltd., 22 Chancery Lane, W.C.2.

Situations

VACANT AND WANTED.

LADY requires post as COMPANION-HELP, away from London. Light house-work. Needlework.—Write Miss SHARPE, 40 Redlands Road, Reading.

The Inquirer.

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	2	6
PER HALF-YEAR	4	6
PER YEAR	8	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

Cheques, &c., for Subscriptions, &c., should be made payable to THE INQUIRER Publishing Company, Ltd., at 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4. All communications for the Editor should be sent to 23 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.3, endorsed "Inquirer."

ADVERTISEMENT RATES.

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	6	0	0
HALF PAGE	3	0	0
PER COLUMN	2	0	0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3	6
FRONT PAGE—INCH IN COLUMN	0	4	6

PREPAID RATES.

All orders under this heading must be accompanied by remittance.

Calendar Notices, 10/- for entire year, for two lines; extra lines, 4d. each.

Births, Marriages, and Deaths, 1d. per word. Minimum charge, 1s. 6d.

Situations Vacant and Wanted. 20 words, 1s. Each additional 6 words or part of 6 words, 3d. Three insertions for the price of two.

All communications and payments in respect of Advertisements should be made to The Manager, "Inquirer" Office, 13 Bream's Buildings, London, E.C.4.

Advertisements should arrive not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY to appear the same week.

THE INQUIRER.

A Journal of Liberal Religion, Literature, and Social Progress.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 255
THE CALL TO SERVICE 256
GOOD THOUGHTS FOR EVIL TIMES . . 257
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Rev. H. E. Dowson and the Freedom of Hyde 258
MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS:—
Belgian Hospital Fund 258
The Sunday School Association . . 258
British and Foreign Unitarian Association 260
Liverpool Domestic Mission . . . 262
National Unitarian Lay Preachers' Union 262
NEWS OF THE CHURCHES 263
NOTES AND JOTTINGS 264

 All letters and manuscripts for the Editor should be sent to 23 *Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.*3. They must reach the Editor not later than Wednesday evening for publication the same week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The address for our Belgian Hospital Fund, to which cheques and parcels of clothing should be sent, is Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.3.

COMPARED with previous years it has been a quiet week at Essex Hall. The proceedings were curtailed, especially on the social side. For the first time all common meals were abandoned and we missed the greetings of many old friends. But those who were present welcomed the opportunity of fellowship, and felt once again how the discipline of suffering and heroic effort helps men to dismiss their petty controversies in a common devotion to the things which matter. The terrific thunderstorm, which broke over some of the suburbs of London on Tuesday evening, kept a good many people away from the service at Essex Church. It did not, however, mar the deeply devotional spirit or the glorious singing of the familiar hymns. As the Rev. C. M. Wright read the great words of the 'De Profundis,' followed by the glowing promise of the song of deliverance 'When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion,' many of the worshippers must have felt with a poignance seldom known before the needs and emotions which gave them birth.

* * *

THE announcement that Dr. J. E. Carpenter has allowed himself to be elected as President of the Unitarian Association for another year will be received everywhere with pleasure and gratitude. We use the two words advisedly. There will be a feeling of keen pleasure in many churches and localities, which even his eager activity has not enabled him to reach in the past year, when they realise that there is still an opportunity to give him the welcome of honour and affection which they desire. But even deeper than this pleasure is the feeling of gratitude that a representative position of this kind, with its wide and penetrating influence, should be held during this critical year by a man of large and tolerant mind, whose firm conviction of the justice of our cause has never weakened his loyalty to the ideals of peace or dimmed his vision of the federation of the world.

* * *

THE most interesting event of the anniversary week was the presentation on Wednesday morning of an Address to the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, congratulating him on the completion of twenty-five years as secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. At the same time the announcement was made that the theological faculty of Meadville, U.S.A., had conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity in recognition of his long services to the cause of religious freedom. In his reply Mr. Bowie modestly waived aside any claim to academic distinction; but the cause of religious truth needs its gifted men of affairs as well as its quiet scholars, and we are glad that Meadville has recognised that the man who serves the cause of intellectual and spiritual freedom with practical sagacity has his own title to honour. Mr. Bowie has gifts which would have carried him far in the business world; but he has given them all with ungrudging zeal to religious service. He has had his controversies with his own people, but he has known how to treat them with shrewdness and good humour. By the leaders of other denominations he is held in wide respect as a man of large common sense and tolerance of mind. His sternness he holds in reserve for idleness and drifting and the meaner forms of incapacity by which noble causes have so often been betrayed. We join with his friends far and near in congratulating him upon his fine record of service and achievement.

* * *

THE raid by German aeroplanes last week was a terrible and disastrous affair; but already it has been almost buried out of sight and forgotten. Our days are so full of the presence of danger and death, and events pass so swiftly before our eyes, that it is impossible for the mind to become absorbed in any one of them. It is hard to keep sensitiveness to suffering and bereavement at its true pitch, and even indignation at moral outrage has lost some of its edge. In some quarters there has been a fresh clamour for reprisals. With a few people it is no doubt due to a mood of bitter fury and a fierce acceptance of the doctrine "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." But in the case of many others there is a genuine belief that it is the only way to stop outrage. The motive is not one of vindictiveness. The desire is to inflict punishment severe enough to strike terror into the heart of the criminal and make him feel that "frightfulness" is a policy which cannot be pursued with impunity. We understand the argument, but we think that it is mistaken. Until his military machine is broken the German bully will be quite ready for a competition with us in frightfulness, and that is a game which we cannot play without doing violence to our instincts of honour and self-respect. In any case the people who disagree with this judgment may be asked to remember that punitive expeditions are worse than useless unless we have the power to make them effective.

THE CALL TO SERVICE.

By the Rev. W. H. Drummond.

"I am among you as he that serveth."
—Luke xxii. 27.

Service is one of the key-words of the Gospel. Christianity came into the world as a new ideal of the power and meaning of service. Its messengers were ministers, servants, not men who only taught and spoke, but who won men by living the life of service, bearing burdens, entering into the heart of trouble and living in closest fellowship with human need. All this was in the first instance the creative work of the Master himself. He had lived among them as one who serves. The fine flower of his trust and love and his prayerful fellowship with God was the life spent in doing good. This was his message for the world. His gift to them was not so much a word to be spoken as a life to be lived; and he gave it to them by making them his friends, by daily companionship in the labours of love, by opening to them the deep secrets of his own soul, till life was quickened by life, and the power of his own deathless service passed from him into them. "Ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me."

We cannot read the records of early Christianity without feeling how much of its power to appeal to the imagination of men and to satisfy their religious needs was due to this ideal of service. Not only did it fill the human heart with a strong and healing pity; it made men dissatisfied with their own happiness while others languished in misery. At its touch the dividing walls of class and party crumbled and disappeared. It made fellowship possible. It inspired the communism of the Church in Jerusalem. It drove men forth, regardless of their own comfort and safety, to live and to die in the effort to bring help to their fellows. In a world that was tired of its own theories of life and satiated with its own wealth, dead to the finer instincts of justice and deaf to the misery of the victims of its own splendour and success, it created an atmosphere of charity and goodwill, of gracious helpfulness, of deep concern for the social miseries and the spiritual destitution in which men languish and die, of radiant hope in the victories of love, when like God Himself, love gives and serves to the uttermost.

For behind all this vigorous life of service, raising it far above vague sentimentalism or the mirage of human dreams, there was a revelation of the Divine Character and Purpose. These men were convinced that when Jesus, their Master, lived among them in the form of a servant, bearing their burdens, sharing their pain, and in the end giving his own life as the price of their deliverance and peace, he was the living channel through which the very nature of Divine Love itself was made known. The Father to them was not Power transfigured into benevolence, but Love which gives itself to the uttermost in the divine passion of serving and saving. What words can fitly express a truth so sublime as this? We can only use the language of picture and symbol, knowing that it can never do more than faintly describe the human side of a conviction, as it touches our own need and experience, which for the Christian must ever be the light of all his seeing. For unless the Christian ideal of service is an expression of the nature and the will of God, we cannot claim for it either security or permanence. Its beauty may be tarnished by the corroding touch of time. It may become the sport and the victim of doctrines of ruthless Power. It may simply unite us in a partnership of helpless and hopeless pity, as we wait for the last staggering blow of fate. But if it be of God, and there is some spark of the Love "which moves the Sun and the other stars" in all our service of human need; if God gives Himself to us and pleads through us, whenever we offer the cup of cold water or share a tiresome burden or ease the heartache of a little child, or sink all anxiety for our own safety and interest in some sublime cause of human freedom and redemption; then every refusal to serve is an act of blindness to the divine meaning of the world; the life of prudent selfishness or insolent assertion is rushing headlong to defeat; and the sons and daughters of God, who share his nature and are partners in his work, accepting as their highest dignity the form of a servant, are justified in their daring venture of faith. The clouds and the thick darkness may be all around them, disappointment may beat their lives into the dust, but even at the moment when all seems to be lost they know in Whom they have trusted, and they shall never be confounded.

It is for this reason that the call to service has always been powerful to restore to Christianity the freshness and buoyancy of youth in days when it has grown jaded with controversy or soiled with the traffic of the world. It speaks to the deepest springs of worship and active goodness in the human heart, and with a simplicity which all can understand. It would take too long and draw our attention away from things which at the moment are vastly more important, if I attempted to illustrate this statement from the rich field of history. Seldom, if ever, have reforming movements had any large success unless they were quickened by a desire to provide fresh channels for human sympathy and to achieve richer forms of human fellowship. The intellectual passion for accuracy or reasonableness in our definitions of doctrine is cherished by many noble minds, but its appeal is limited. The desire to reform abuses and lop off the dead branches from the tree of life burns furiously at critical moments; but its work is quickly done and it dies away. It is the increase of faith and hope and charity which the common people are eager to greet. When the heart of God is revealed to them in the beauty of perfect living and the hearts of men are touched anew with simplicity and kindness—the language of practical religion which is understood everywhere—they listen and are glad. Is there any chance at the present day, amid the ruin of theological systems, which have long ceased to be the vehicle of living thought, and the alarming indifference of masses of men to anything which the churches have to say about the serious problems of life, that here, in the inexhaustible ideal of Christian service, we may find the way of recovery and power? Many of us have never ceased to dream that it might be so, if only something big enough were to happen to liberate religious teachers from their bondage to theological dialectic and the traditions of the elders, and to convince ordinary people that it is not a matter of a few tinkering reforms but of a spirit strong and rich enough to recreate the whole life of the nation and to set it forward in new paths of fellowship and goodwill. Has this big thing happened? Are we at this moment witnesses of its revolutionary advent? Who among us has the keen vision and the openness of mind to read the signs of the times?

At this point I must become personal for a few moments in order to be practical, and tell you of things which I have myself felt and seen. For I stand before you to-night as a man who is still tingling with the excitement of a revealing experience. It has been my privilege to spend a month in close fellowship with our soldiers in France, giving lectures and religious addresses to them in the Y.M.C.A. Huts in various centres and chatting with many of them on a basis of frank human comradeship. In this way I have spoken to thousands of them, and I have returned with an admiration for the manhood of our race which I believe nothing else could have given me, and with a startling sense of boundless opportunity. I wish that it were possible to share the experience with you or to describe some of the pictures which are printed with photographic clearness on my own mind—the quiet talks with small groups of men on Sunday afternoons followed by a big service in the evening—the service for workers one Sunday morning, when Anglicans, Presbyterians and Congregationalists assembled and the Unitarian minister led them in worship and spoke to them of the ideals of their work, and there was perfect unity of spirit—the ripples of laughter that passed over the crowded audience of soldiers as I told them the quaint details of Garibaldi's love story, and the splendid response to the appeal of everything that was brave and chivalrous in his career—the crowd of Indian cavalry men who gathered round me one hot evening in the open-air, their keen faces lighted by the rising moon, while the big-hearted man who acts as their friend and interpreter translated my words into Hindustani—or that last evening before my return in a rest-camp by the sea, where once again I told the matchless story of Garibaldi's life to an audience of 1,200 men, who had come down a few days before from one of the hottest parts of the line; and then we prayed together for courage and faithfulness and the grace of a noble manhood, and for God's protecting care for the loved ones at home, and the Spirit of love and power was manifestly present in our midst. Wherever I went, in Havre and Rouen, in Dieppe, Boulogne, Calais and Dunkirk, I found the same craving for fellowship, the same eager response to large-hearted ideals of life, and the same instinctive feeling that true religion expresses itself in service, the service of our country, the service of our comrades, the service of those who are weaker or more suffering than ourselves. It is along these channels that the power of God is being poured anew into these men's lives. Some of them may still use the religious phrases to which they have been accustomed from childhood, while for others they have lost their meaning, but it is by fellowship and service that they live and struggle upward into larger manhood, and they have no use for a religion which does not express itself in these terms.

---

The Annual Sermon of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association preached at Essex Church, London, on Tuesday Evening, May 29, 1917.

Again and again the workers in France have asked me this question, What are the Churches at home going to do with this new situation so overwhelming in its significance for the future of our country? Do they in the least realise what is going on out here? There is a genuine fear that they are still so wedded to the old divisions, the old controversies, and the pleasant habits of their respectable routine, that they will simply wait for these men to crowd their empty pews and then never recover from the paralysis of a bitter disappointment. This disappointment would not mean the failure of religion, but only that this new awakening has passed the churches by in order to create some more responsive vehicle for the nurture and expression of the spirit of fellowship and service.

How is it with ourselves, and with the churches which are represented in this congregation? There is much in our spirit and tradition which should make it easier for us than for many of our friends and neighbours to welcome a new opportunity and to adapt ourselves to its needs; and yet we have to confess that our churches are not at the present moment throbbing with the promise of new life. They have been cradled in intellectual freedom, but they have contracted very conservative habits and a faculty of criticism which impairs their initiative and damps their courage. Will these conservative habits be their undoing in the new day, which is breaking on the earth? None of us who owe the first dawn of faith to their nurture and realize, as an influence "felt in the heart and felt along the blood," the power of their tradition of goodness and sanctity, can face such a question without registering an inward vow that it shall not be so, if there is left in us any conquering ardour of soul or any bright vision of faith to prevent it. But we must be honest and severe with ourselves. The greatness of the days will tolerate nothing else. If we are content with small victories or put up poor excuses for our failures, blaming the war and not ourselves for our lack of life and power, we shall deserve any cruel fate that may befall us. I have, indeed, no programme of first duties or even a first sketch of reform to offer you. For that the day has not come. The creative Spirit is brooding upon the face of the waters, and men are still locked in the death-grip of the battles of freedom; but out of the womb of night and this chaos of a world at war there shall come new experiments in living, and new ventures of faith, which will appear strange to us, until we discover that they are simply richer expressions of the old spirit of fellowship and service. Meanwhile we who are forced by age or circumstance to be spectators of the heroic parts, which other men must play, can share with them their mood of high and eager expectation. We can trample fear and personal anxiety, and the feeble desire just to go back to the easy and pleasant days before the war, and all that evil brood into the dust, while like men on a watch-tower we stretch our eyes to the far horizon, eager to greet the new forms of life for which we have toiled and prayed, knowing well that they will not be bound by our habits of thought and worship, for God, the creative Spirit of life, still dwells in the heart of the world, and behold He makes all things new.

If our churches are to live and act and serve the present hour, we must have the courage to bring the whole matter down to strictly personal issues. The noblest principles and the purest doctrines are powerless in this world, if they are not backed by simplicity of purpose and personal sacrifice. You have done but little for a man to bring him into fellowship with God, when you have convinced his intellect if you have not subdued his heart. You can only quicken life in others, when you have life in yourself. We need in these days to recover the fine and simple meaning of the word "minister." A minister is not in the first place a man who speaks to others about God, nor is he a student of theology who can instruct the layman and the amateur. A minister is a servant, who is devoted with all the love of his heart and all the strength of a consecrated will to tasks of human helpfulness. It is this ideal of service which is being brought back and placed once more at the centre of our religion. Those of us who have passed already the meridian of our strength must be slow of brain and dull of heart, if we do not feel some renewal of our youth and a spirit of adventure coursing through our blood, while we watch the great events of these days and all the air around us trembles with the prophecies of hope. But it is for our younger fellow-labourers in the ministry that the opportunity is rich and glorious beyond the power of words to utter it. "Good is it in this dawn to be alive; but to be young is very heaven." You stand on the threshold of one of the creative epochs of the world's history. You are going to deal with men who have explored the dark secrets of suffering and risen to rare heights of sacrifice and seen a splendid vision of human liberty and fellowship afar off. You will have many strange adventures by the way. You will see the whole fabric of the world changing before your eyes. You must have the courage to try daring experiments to match the greatness of the hour. For to-day and to-morrow you must live at the heart of this agony of freedom. You must make its bitter pain and its exultant joy your own, and discover for yourselves its hiding-places of power. And then all will be well with you, if taking the passion of worship into your hearts and laying aside all mean human ambitions and the paltry desire of fame, you have the grace to forget yourselves in the service of God and the future. Let us go forth then, old and young together, a glad company, to greet the new day, strong for its tasks and prepared for its sorrows, asking only that at the day's end we too may be numbered among the servants of the servants of God.

Good Thoughts for Evil Times.

SINCE that loving Lord
Commanded us to love them for His sake,
Even for His sake, and for His sacred word,
Which in His last bequest He to us spake,
We should them love, and with their needs partake;
Knowing that, whatsoere to them we give,
We give to Him by Whom we all doe live

SPENSER.

To fear a change in one's manner of life is to be the slave of habit; freedom is a chief object both of religion and philosophy.

To have a wide experience is to inherit the earth; with a narrow horizon a man cannot be a sound thinker.

Some men are brutes; some are human; very few begin to be divine.

Optimism is the condition of successful effort.

In the hour of danger a man is proven. The waster hides, the egotist trembles; only he whose care is for honour and for others forgets to be afraid.

In the hour of danger all good men are believers; they choose the spiritual and forget the material.

The death of a hero convinces all of eternal life; they are unable to call it tragedy.

From 'A Student in Arms,' by DONALD HANKEY.

O GOD of peace and charity, deliver us from all temptation, assist us in every conflict, console us in every tribulation. Give us patience in adversity, and grace to worship Thee with a pure conscience, and to serve Thee with all our strength. We bless Thee, we thank Thee, we magnify Thee day by day. Let our praises be pleasing to Thee, and our prayer acceptable in Thy sight. AMEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME, and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the senders.

THE REV. H. E. DOWSON AND THE FREEDOM OF HYDE.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—Mr. Percy Hibbert asks whether there is any precedent for the distinguished honour recently paid to the Rev. H. E. Dowson by his Borough Council. Dr. Richard Price, minister of Newington Green Chapel, received the Freedom of the City of London about the year 1776. I am under the impression (but am not certain) that Bishop Fraser also was made a Freeman of the City of Manchester about a hundred years later. I expect our friend, Mr. Dowson, will appreciate his honour all the more from the fact of sharing it in such company. —Yours, &c. JAMES HARWOOD.

Hampstead, May 28, 1917.

To the Editor of THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—About the year 1773 the Freedom of the City of London was conferred upon the Rev. Richard Price, and within the last thirty years the late Rev. Alexander Maclaren was made an honorary Freeman of the City of Manchester.—Yours, &c. GARDNER PRESTON.

Leamington, May 28, 1917.

MEETINGS AND GENERAL NEWS.

BELGIAN HOSPITAL FUND.

The Belgian Hospital Fund is registered by the London County Council, under the provisions of Section I. of the War Charities Act, 1916.

The objects of the Fund are: (1) To aid the Belgian hospitals and convalescent depots in France, and the Belgian military doctors at the Front in Belgium; (2) To maintain a Civil Hospice at Calais; (3) To aid the Belgian School Colonies in France.

124TH LIST OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	16,889	5	4
Mr. and Miss Hirst (eighteenth donation)	2	2	0
Mr. J. A. Kenrick	10	0	0
Mr. Henry Sharpe (twenty-ninth donation)	5	0	0
Mr. A. W. Harris (eighth donation)	1	0	0
Master Henry Thew (sixth donation)	0	2	0
Mrs. Frank Preston (fourth donation)	1	0	0
Miss Kathleen Freeston (third donation)	1	0	0
The Rev. R. Jenkin Jones (fifth donation)	0	1	6
Miss Caroline Harrold (tenth donation)	10	0	0
Mr. T. H. Terry (fifth donation)	2	2	0
Miss Colfox (seventh donation)	5	0	0
Unitarian Christian Church, Effra Road, Brixton, per Miss L. Martineau (second donation)	3	8	9
Mrs. Christopher James (sixth donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Roscoe (seventeenth donation)	10	0	0
Mrs. R. T. Heys (sixth donation)	2	2	0
Dr. Robert Harris (second donation)	2	2	0
Lady Durning-Lawrence (seventh donation)	25	0	0
Miss Durning-Lawrence (fourth donation)	20	0	0
Miss Dora Roscoe (fifth donation)	10	0	0
Col. M. Locke Blake (seventh donation)	10	0	0
M. F. G. (seventh donation)	3	0	0
Mr. J. Hess (sixth donation)	2	2	0
Mr. W. Harvey Blake (fourth donation)	5	5	0
Miss E. A. Lemann (fifth donation)	5	0	0
Mrs. Leese (third donation)	2	0	0
Friars' Street Girls' Club, Ipswich, per Mrs. Saunders	1	10	0
Mrs. Peyton (seventh donation)	25	0	0
	£17,058	11	7

Parcels have been received from: Mrs. Reginald Wight; Miss Smith; Brookfield Ladies' Sewing Society (per Mrs. Blakeney); Mill Hill Sewing League, Leeds (per Mrs. P. R. Jackson); Mrs. Ernest Aves; Miss Heavisides; Mrs. Ussher; The Misses Fryer; Platt Chapel Dorcas Society (per Miss A. Fryer); Miss Short; Miss E. M. Greg; Essex Church Work Party (per Miss Neele); Mr. Roscoe; Col. Wike Danesmoor (per Miss Johnstone, Bury); Mrs. Grosvenor Talbot; The Misses Worsley; Miss Mary T. Worsley.

WEEKLY NOTES.

THE following letter will be of interest:—

From the English Matron of a Belgian Hospital: "Very many thanks for the gift of handkerchiefs. They have just reached me safely and will make our boys so happy. As you know, who have done so much for our dear Belgian soldiers, it takes so little to please them. I often wish that people who have been disheartened by the ways of some naughty Belgian refugees could just come and care for the Belgian soldiers. They are so splendidly brave, grateful, and good and have such an admiration for the British. As you know, too, their convalescent hospitals lack many comforts which our own possess and it is such a joy to send them off with small gifts that may help them. They are all so homesick and worried too about their loved ones who are still in Belgium! I do love and admire them."

In many ways the position of the Belgian soldier is harder now than ever. The recent revelations of horror in the French villages fill them with terror for their own folk, and the long months in the trenches have been a severe trial in endurance. Anything we send is taken as a token of friendship. I have had two urgent appeals this week—one from a hospital in a dug-out in the trenches, badly in need of help; and one from a small hospital as close as it dare be to the trenches; and every day brings letters from doctors at the front asking for surgical instruments for their work, as all theirs are worn out or lost in the winter's mud. The response to last week's appeal was most generous, and makes me hope that interest is still keen in this work and that we may confidently count on the support we need.

ROSE ALLEN.

SPECIAL WANTS.

Helpless shirts in thin flannel or flannelette.
Pyjamas.
Shirts and socks.
Slippers, handkerchiefs, towels.
Games of all sorts, especially cards.
Layettes, on Belgian methods (patterns sent free).
Chemises for women and girls.
Treasure bags (10 by 12 in.), in coloured washing materials.

Mrs. Allen has a quantity of grey knitting wool to sell for the Fund. Price 4*s.* 6*d.* per lb. (carriage free).

The name and address of sender and list of contents should be enclosed in each parcel.

Contributions of money and clothing should be sent to Mrs. Bernard Allen, 14 Gainsborough Gardens, Hampstead, N.W. 3.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

THE Annual Meeting of the Sunday School Association was held at Essex Hall on Tuesday, May 29, the President, the Rev. A. W. Fox, in the chair. The Acting Treasurer, Mr. Harold Wade, presented the financial statement, which, in spite of rigid economies, can hardly be regarded as satisfactory. It has been found necessary to borrow £100 from the Pritchard Fund, which will have to be paid back at the earliest possible date, and in view of the urgency of the situation the committee has decided to make a special appeal for the purpose of establishing an endowment fund when the time is opportune. Mr. Wade urged that this should be borne in mind, so that a generous response might be made when the signal was given at headquarters. It in no way precluded a simultaneous effort to increase the list of subscriptions, which offered opportunities to many who were unable to give to an endowment fund. The Association undoubtedly deserved a much wider measure of support, especially as they had in their two secretaries, the Rev. Bertram Lister and Mr. Chalmers, two men who were absolutely brimful of ideas and of schemes for expanding the work, but whose hands, at present, were tied.

The REV. J. A. PEARSON gave some details in regard to The Sunday School Monthly, which, under his editorship, has appeared regularly in spite of the grave difficulties in regard to printing and paper at the present time. The lessons have been found increasingly useful, and Mr. Pearson pointed out that, in so far as the Monthly attained its object of providing help in an attractive form for those who did not know much about teaching, there came into being through this means a body of knowledge which was possessed by the teachers and scholars throughout the country, and reinforced the spiritual aspirations which they held in common with other denominations. They proposed to publish in the new volume an instalment of lessons on the life of Jesus, and on such poems as Sir Edwin Arnold's 'Light of Asia' and 'The Light of the World.' Other suggestions had also been made which they hoped to carry out. The 'New Sunday School Hymn Book' is in an advanced stage of preparation, and this will include some services which, it is believed, will be found very helpful.

